General Film Company, of which Harold Stern is president, has completed remodeling of the building at 1229 S. The laboratory was formerly operated by Sidney Stern, now associated with the enlarged enterprise. Herman Marks is on the sales staff.

THE INDUSTRY ELECTS

It must be a unique sensation to find oneself the proud recipient of one of the 1934 Quigley Grand Awards. Imagine having one's campaign selected above all others by the high executives comprising the Committee of Judges. We'd be overwhelmed—and wouldn't you?

As no doubt were Bill Hendricks and Morris Rosenthal, on being advised by wire last Tuesday they were chosen to receive the Grand Award and the Second Grand Award, respectively. They are highly honored, indeed.

Detailed reports of the judging ceremonies are carried in the news section of this issue, but mere words fail to convey the earnestness and enthusiasm of the Committee members, who by their complete absorption in the matter indicated somewhat the high place attained by the Quigley project.

By their decisions, the judges have done something more, however, than designate Rosenthal and Hendricks for the Grand Awards. In bestowing the accolade upon these two, the Committee, representing the industry, pays deserved homage to the man in the field. And in so doing, it establishes definitely the importance of present-day exploitation and the esteem with which these labors are held.

HARD WORK AND GROSSES

On our desk reposes the imposing "March of Time" pressbook, from which we take the liberty of quoting the following thoughts as have to do with exploitation:

"We won't bother you with a lot of tieups which may or may not work and will take up your time. Just to look impressive. . . . With 35,000,000 followers, we're handing you an audience. This time you won't have to work for it."

Well, we dunno about that not having to work for it. While this new screen offering will undoubtedly play to plenty of packed houses, chances are, showmen being what they are, the boys in the field who work hardest on their "March of Time" campaigns will turn in the most satisfactory grosses.

Apropos of the press book discussion that continues in our pages, those who complain of the lack of ideas proven in the field will no doubt be interested in learning that Fox has adopted much of Sig Solomon's November Award campaign on "Judge Priest" for the press book exploitation section on Will Rogers in "The County Chairman."

TO BE CONTINUED

Theatremen struggling under the burden of 12 to 14 hour days, seven days a week, no doubt will be somewhat heartened to know that further action is being taken in their behalf. Following our open letter carried on this page, issue of December 29, a meeting was arranged with Mr. Farnsworth in New York at the offices of the Code Authority. The attitude of the Deputy Administrator, we are happy to report, was distinctly encouraging.

As a result of this conference, we are communicating with Mr. William Bledsoe, member of the Labor Advisory Board attached to the Amusement Code. It is to be hoped that Mr. Bledsoe's response will be as immediate and his reaction as sympathetic as was that of Mr. Farnsworth.

THE BARRONS DO IT

That some men can get a whole lot more work out of a dollar than others is as true in show business as in any other. For instance, there's Bill Barron who runs the Kenyon, a Pittsburgh neighborhood house under Warner Division Chief Harry Kalmine. Bill's advance campaign on "Belle of the Nineties," detailed on a following page, indicates he evidently gets a gallop for his advertising money.

Borrowing used frames from "A" houses, refurbishing a previous front, selling sufficient space on the back page to pay for his tabloids, printing throwaways four-up to save printing costs, are some of the things this manager accomplished in the way of practical promotion.

We can point with pride to a legion of Barrons all over the country with the ability to put over something tasty without shooting the bankroll. Which may be a thought for managers who bemoan their budget limitations and sit back to await happier days.

They tell the story of a recent stick-up wherein a theatre manager was forced to fork over the day's receipts of $500. The weapon was a note reading: "This is a hold-up. Don't try any tricks. I know them all." Well, we will have to admit, things being what they are, it is quite a trick to find a theatre today with that much in the box office.

GOV. CROSS PRESENTS AWARD TO ROSENTHAL

Luncheon in Winner's Honor Given by Division Manager Shaw Follows Ceremonies

by ERLE WRIGHT

Pub. Dir. Poli-New England Theatres

On January 21, in Hartford, Governor Wilbur Cross of Connecticut presented the December Quigley Award to co-winner Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport. The ceremonies were held in the State Executive's offices in the Capitol, the presentation being attended by prominent state and city officials as well as by a complete turnout of Loew-Poli theatre men, headed by Harry F. Shaw, division manager. (See photo in picture section.)

In tendering the honors to Rosenthal, the Governor said:

"You have distinguished yourself and brought great honor to New England and the State of Connecticut as well as the entire motion picture industry. I am proud that this prize has come home to our State and feel highly honored in presenting it to you on behalf of MOTION PICTURE HERALD."

Kenneth Wynn, executive secretary to the Governor, also spoke, stating it was his hope that more Awards would be won by New England managers in 1935.

Shaw was toastmaster at a celebration luncheon held at the Hotel Bond following the presentation and said in part:

"I am very highly honored that the Quigley Award came to my division. It certainly is an outstanding distinction and a great achievement. This is one of the happiest moments in my entire career."

Others introduced were John Murphy, managing editor of the Hartford Times, and John Sardosky, business manager of the Hartford Courant, both of whom praised the Quigley competitions and promised the support of their papers in bringing further Awards to New England theatremen.

Erle Wright, division publicity chief, also paid tribute to Rosenthal and pledged his support to the managers present, whom he urged to send in campaigns for the Awards. Mr. Shaw then called upon the individual managers.

Simons and Ross Arrange Ceremony

Jack A. Simons, manager of the Poli, and Don Ross, manager of Poli-Palace, Hartford, were in charge of the arrangements for the ceremony. Others present included Matt Saunders, Ted Holt and Ed Dolan of Bridgeport; George Freeman, Springfield; Joe Almstead and Harry Watts, Worcester; Ed Fitzpatrick, Waterbury; P. Alonzo and Louis Falk, Meriden; Ben Cohen, Frank Hanson, Howard Burkhardt and Abe Madas, New Haven, and Earl Braniff, Julian Tuthill, Robert Russell and Al Cadif.

Mollie Rosenthal, the winner's wife, was the special guest of honor.

Rosenthal received his plaque for his campaign on "The Mighty Barnum," tying for December first honors with Bill Hendricks of the Warner-Memphis, on "Six Day Bike Rider."

Rosenthal's campaign also was selected for second honors in the 1934 annual Awards, story and photos on which are carried in news section of this issue.

No Adjectives on West, Says Bill Barron

Wasn't much more that could be said on Mae West when Bill Barron ran "Belle" at the Kenyon, Pittsburgh, so he had throwaways printed with copy as follows: "No Selling Copy. No adjectives. No Superlatives. Take it or Leave it. Just Mae West, in etc., etc." And having four printed at one time, and the sheet quartered, cost was cut to one-quarter.

Barron promoted the lobby frames from the downtown first run Stanley for advance, made his own set piece of washed down beaver board, repainted a former front for display on the West epic, with the assistance of his assistant, Harry Walters, who also sold ads on back page of tabloid for enough to cover printing cost.

Pollock Creates Ace Display on "Copperfield"

To do it a bit differently on his "Copperfield" advance, Les Pollock, at Loew's, Rochester, N. Y., worked out the lobby set piece illustrated in the accompanying photo. Center panel was given over to complete cast of characters, bordered with stills of stars in costume.

Pollock keeps the town banner-conscious, with two giant spreads covering building fronts in downtown section, last used on "Forsaking All Others" and "Broadway Bill."

Ice Carnival Goes Over Big for Harry

What is intended to be a yearly affair is an ice carnival reported by Harry Botwick, of the State, Portland, Me., put on in cooperation with local papers and interested merchants who supplied the prizes and carried slugs in their advertising.

The different races and events were open to all children of grammar and high school ages, entry blanks printed in all editions of the paper for five days ahead, applications mailed or delivered to the Carnival Committee at the theatre, entries closing four days ahead of the actual date.

Entries were acknowledged by post card containing all instruction, and contestants met at theatre, eight o'clock on morning of Carnival where sport shots were shown, and rules explained by the judges, selected from among high school athletic directors, football coaches and other sport notables who knew how to proceed.

Parade to course then took place, where, during the grand march, a carnival queen was chosen, and presented with cup from Bing Crosby. Shots of this and also of Bing himself with cup, posed at the studios, were carried by the paper, which devoted plenty of space and photos to the stunt, including quite a few page one stories. Jack Dempsey, in town at the time, helped out by turning over some of the prizes to the Carnival chairman (see photo). That's Harry, second from the left, the pose landing a four-column break. Harry estimates over 300 inches of free space on this exploitation and a lot of invaluable goodwill. He states the paper is entirely sold on it for a repeat.

Incidentally, your Round Table has a detailed report from this member on the procedure he found necessary, and to those managers who would like some further dope, we shall be glad to forward order of events, trailer copy, suggestions, etc., as supplied by Botwick.

Adams Works Fast

When the famous "Jafsie" of the Lindbergh case dropped in at the Colonial, in Brockton, Mass., some weeks ago, he was immediately recognized and surrounded by autograph hunters. Manager W. W. Adams did a bit of hustling to secure an action shot of the Doctor which landed on page one of his dailies and also in the same spot in the Boston papers. Theatre of course was mentioned in all stores.

"Streak" in Action Tops Mayfair Front

Animation was featured in the giant front of the New York Mayfair, on "Silver Streak," a hurtling streamline train effect being created by Stockton Leigh which gave the impression (see photo) of the new train in movement. The display included headlight, practical whistle and other realistic properties. Title, in ten-foot letters, was reported to be something new in electrical effects, the flasher operated on a movement technically known as a swipe.

The front included a miniature replica of the Burlington train in action, and in the lobby there were Western Union clocks synchronized for railroad time across the country. Engineer of the famed train, Jack Ford, made personal appearances, and in the mezzanine was exhibited a further model of the "Streak."

Outstanding window was that in the local Fifth Avenue Northern Pacific headquarters, also animated, and various stores built up a lot of extra attention in toy departments with models of the speedy train, tieups incorporating the proper theatre credits.

Donovan's "Love" Drive Nets Holdover on Date

Another excellent campaign on "One Night of Love" comes in from Manager Al Donovan, of E. M. Lowe's Capitol, Lynn, Mass., in which he, following the lead of other fast movers, promoted himself a smart editorial on the date. Other ace coverage was the serial run a week ahead in leading daily, and the puzzle contest. Flock of other good tieins were included to make possible holdover for another week.

Al also reports a heap of cooperation on formation of children's Sandman Club sponsored by local paper which started plugging the idea a month ahead, and on the morning of the first special show, ran a six-column cut of the members at the theatre.

Rut Neilson, of RKO, sends along the shot illustrated below of the "Kong" stunt recently put on in Tokyo, Japan, as a street bally in advance of the showing at the Imperial, Asakusa Park and Musashinokan Theatres.

The "gorilla" was said to be so effective what with emitting loud growls, rolling its eyes and moving its arms, that the police stepped in because it was scaring the children right into hysterics.

De Camac Previews "Island" For School and College Heads

One of the highlights of Peter De Camac's campaign on "Treasure Island" at the Globe Theatre in Calcutta, India, was a tieup with liquor merchant for giveaway of bottles of Long John Whiskey. Holders of lucky number tickets were presented with bottle of beverage from stage.

A preview was held for principals of all schools and colleges. After receiving their sanction of picture, invitations were sent, through teachers, to all pupils to attend show at reduced rates. Stills were planted in windows of two largest book stores.

On "Morning Glory" Peter tied up with foremost modiste shop for display of stills showing Katharine Hepburn wearing beautiful gowns and theatre plug. Fifty-five foot banner was stretched across road and 24 sheet cutout of Hepburn was placed over main entrance with powerful lights playing on it.

Gross Wires Sound From House to Store

A stunt that was reported to have created a flock of curiosity comes from Wilton E. Gross, of the Penn-Newcastle, Pa., where he tied in with local five-and-ten to broadcast sound track of "Merry Widow" to p.a. above entrance of store. (see photo)

Merchant paid for wiring from theatre, Gross contributing the cost of the window cards only, and states that as much of the sound was singing and dancing, the stunt went over very well. He recommends it in other spots with centrally located stores.

Les Makes Three Tieups On Classified Pages

The papers in Rochester, N. Y., gave Les Pollock, at the Loew's, a lot of co-operation on "Kid Millions," with three want ad contests running at the same time. Two were a bit different, one a limerick gag, with readers asked to make up their own on any ad on the page, sending copy of ad in with entry. Second showed Cantor posing with turkey, entrants asked to clip capital letters from page to make up title of picture.

Newspaper kids' club also came in on special matinee, with dairy contributing free ice cream, advertising this in papers and at stores. Paper ran large ads with jig saw picture of Cantor, offering passes for first 100 kids putting it together correctly. Les also gave free handkerchiefs in imprinted envelopes for patrons who might "laugh until they cried" at the show.

McCormack Uses Boat Bally For "Transatlantic" Date

One of the outstanding stunts of W. R. McCormack's "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round" campaign at the Palace, Indianapolis, Ind., was the use of a boat street bally (see photo) with three sailorettes, and captain making announcements about the picture. Boat toured busy streets and school neighborhoods at break, returning to park in front of theatre at intervals.

Radio station installed mike in lobby of theatre for opening night and special guests of station were introduced over air as well as comments of those who had seen picture. On tieup with department store padlocked radio was placed in lobby. Store distributed cards with keys attached and those receiving key that opened lock were entitled to guest tickets.

Joe's "Wanted" Copy Peps Up Program

Joe Salmon, who specializes in those arresting programs at the Riverside, on upper Broadway, in New York City, sends along his latest effort of a four-pager, size about eight by eleven. The sock is the front cover, in the center of which in block headline type is the word "Wanted," and below—"50,000 People." Inside two pages contain theatre copy and back page repeats the front.

The absence of the conventional theatre slug or picture copy on front and back pages made for an unusual splash and Joe reports a lot of extra attention as a result.

Ice Cream Week Planted On "Kid Millions"

An "Ice Cream Week" was Wally Caldwell's buildup on "Kid Millions" at the Valentine-Toledo, Ohio, leading dairy getting out special brick named after title. Newspaper ads were used, window streamers planted at all retailers, and dairy delivery trucks bannered. Milk bottle collars also proved effective. Sample bricks were given out at theatre and nearest guesses to giant ice cream brick in window brought free passes.

Wally arranged for many prominent windows, used tabloids and imprinted menu cards at various restaurants, and promoted co-op ads with some of the stores handling the merchandise in the press book tieups.

McBride Has Hollywood Opening for "Widow"

A special Hollywood opening midnite show was put on by Eddie McBride at Loew's State in Syracuse, N. Guest of Honor book was placed on table next to mike and as invited guests arrived they were asked to sign and speak a few words.

For opening night a large police siren was used atop marquee lighted by two floodlights from across street. The Cecil Albright Post of V.F.W. band (see photo) paraded from headquarters through main streets to theatre escorted by motorcycle policemen.

Small calling cards reading "From the Merry Widow to You" were passed out ahead at the box office to all male patrons. Roll of roofing paper cut into 24x20 inch pieces and painted orange were placed in doorways of leading stores with copy "Meet the Merry Widow at Loew's."

Pollock Plugs Shorts To Mailing List

That many a good short draws extra business when properly publicized is almost a commonplace, and Les Pollock proves it further at Loew's Rochester by sending out post cards to his football fans mailing list on Pete Smith's "Rugby" and to his Swiss patrons on another short, "Switzerland, the Beautiful."

The cards were typed and in addition to the plug on the added items, contained a word of praise for his feature attraction.

SAYS EDITORS REFUSE PREPARED REVIEWS

Dear Mike:

Friends, Romans and countrymen. Lend me your eyes. I have eyes of my own, 'tis true, but they deceive me.

I'm trying to write Sunday readers for the newspapers. I have a western picture booked, supposed to be a novelty western, you know, one of those where the villain shoots the hero instead of the hero shooting the villain, etc.

Now just listen to this: A prepared review, written, no doubt, by a hard working press agent, in shirt sleeves, cigar in month, happy at the thought of the way the newspaper editors will go for his latest journalistic endeavor. Here goes friends, hold your hosses.

"Don't ever tell me that a 'Blank' pictre is just a western. Your reviewer took in the first night of 'Blank's' exciting and colorful '———,' starring the western screen ace, at the 'Blank Theatre', and fortunately for you and me both, has lived to tell the tale."

And that, ladies and gentlemen, is the opening paragraph of this prepared review, which occupied valuable space in telling newspaper readers just how thrilling and exciting this picture really is.

How much longer are we theatre managers going to have to stand for the tripe that comes out of Hollywood printed on the pages of press books?

His Editor Won't Use 'Em

What would happen to you or me should we ever submit a review to a decent newspaper editor, starting off with the paragraph as listed above? How many newspapers in the country will run prepared reviews? The papers I do business with won't and more power to them.

And this same press sheet, gentle readers, contained tripe stories on every other subject in the universe except a damn good, well written story, telling what the picture was all about, without running into editorial manner of writing. I have as yet to find this information, which is needed so badly by you and me in preparing our copy for newspapers.

And that's that. Managers' Round Table Club sure started something when it started an expose of press sheets and I hope that some of the socalled writing experts and press sheet experts' faces are as red as an overripe tomato. They should be.

Theatre managers might be dumb, but honestly, Mr. Press Sheet editor, why take advantage of us. And to the fellow who wrote the stuff in the press sheet, I would suggest that he immediately register with that certain school of journalism that advertises so much.

Good press sheet stories are those that contain enough synopsis, so the readers will want to see the picture. Remember, there's a limit to the amount of publicity that we managers can land on any one picture, so save space and expense, Mr. Press Sheet Man.—Anonymous.

SUGGESTS TIMELY PICTURE TIEUPS

Dear Mike:

Some time ago you invited me to write my views on the Press-Book controversy, and here is an item that might interest you, and, incidentally, some of the Herald readers:

I played the picture "Death on the Diamond." In planning my campaign for this picture, I naturally wanted to cash in on the fact that the St. Louis Cardinals were in the picture, so I planned a contest, the idea of which was to make as many words as possible out of the letters contained in the title. The local paper was contacted and went for the idea in a big way. The contest was to have been run on the sport page.

Could Not Get Prizes

The prizes for this contest were to have been three or more autographed baseballs, from the St. Louis Cards. I contacted the Cardinals' business manager, and was very much disappointed to hear that it would be impossible to get the baseballs. Their supply had been exhausted two weeks after the World's Series ended.

The moral of this is: M-G-M, the producers of the picture, missed a perfect opportunity to get some real, worthwhile accessories for use by the theatres booking this picture.

This same producer has a big football picture ready for release, and the same idea might be used again.

It would seem that such current, red-hot angles ought to be caught up by the producers and passed on to the exhibitor, who, in many cases, plays the picture on the percentage basis. This would mean more profits for both and furnish some real material for publicizing pictures of this nature.—Anonymous.

OFFERS AMENDMENT TO RECENT EDITORIAL

To the Editor:

Of you issue of Dec. 1, 1934, page 61 "Pertinent Questions," we would like to have amended question one; same to be in two parts A and B, with A the same except the word "Affiliates" inserted with circuits and part B to ask how much was paid for film rental against receipts by the affiliates-circuits, and how much for film rental against receipts by independents.

We make this suggested amendment on account of an item in your issue of October 13, 1934, wherein one,

"George P. Aarons, Secretary of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, this week urged formation of a buying combine of all unaffiliated theatres in the territory to oppose high percentage playing terms. Mr. Aarons said affiliated theatres pay a maximum of 20%, independents theatres 50%."—Harry L. Simerman, Shawnee Theatre, Louisville, Ky.

I am very glad to hear that the Quigley Awards are to be continued for another year. Having participated in the competition, I think it is one of the finest stimulants to bring out effective and original exploitation, and make it available to all the boys in the field. You can count on my sincere cooperation.

PAUL BINSTOCK
Manager, Republic

According to my way of thinking the Quigley Awards offer incentive enough for any showman to go out and "burn up the town." The spirit of competition in itself is something that makes one take pride and pleasure in his work to try and be the one selected by the Committee of Judges, who are known to be among the outstanding men in show business. . . .

The winning of an Honorable Mention for my "Treasure Island" campaign in October has encouraged me to such an extent that I agree with the other managers that the Quigley Awards have done a good job for the year of 1934 and positively should be extended for the year of 1935.

CLAYTON P. SHEEHAN
General Foreign Manager
Fox Film Corporation

I shall be happy to be one of the Committee of Judges for 1935 for the Quigley Awards for the Managers' Round Table Club.

It seems to me that these Awards definitely fill a long standing need for a proper incentive to showmen everywhere. The Quigley Awards are rapidly taking their place as the outstanding mark of merit in exploitation.

GEORGE LABY
Manager, Victory Theatre,
Holyoke, Mass.

The value of the Quigley Awards competitions for theatre managers and publicity men cannot, in my opinion, be overestimated. Take my own experience as a criterion: I was very dubious about it at first. For several months I made no efforts to compete but eagerly scanned the pages for new ideas. At first I did this reluctantly feeling as lots of managers feel that our own locality has its own peculiarities.

However, it wasn't very long before I made up my mind that I was going to compete regularly, and I did. While I was not able to hit the bullseye, I did get a half dozen Honorable Mentions.

You may look for my entries in '35—and they'll be bigger and better then the '34s due to the incentive derived from these competitions.

JULIUS LAMM
Manager, Uptown Theatre,
Cleveland, Ohio

It is the height of ambition of any manager to be awarded a Quigley Award, and the many of us who tried to gain this success will, no doubt, welcome the announcement that Quigley Awards will again be in the spotlight for 1935. Although I have had only an Honorable Mention, I am going to try still harder the coming year to procure a higher award.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

WHEN it was introduced in 1931, Eastman Super-Sensitive Panchromatic Negative was definitely a "new and different" product. And there is still no other film like it...no other has wrought comparable changes in motion picture procedure, or contributed as much to motion picture quality. It is only natural that this Eastman film should be unique, also, in the enthusiasm which it continues to arouse among cameramen and producers. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. ## PARAMOUNT'S COMMITTEE

A FEW WEEKS ago we ventured to suggest Mickey Mouse for a seat on Paramount's new board of directors. The board has been set up without any heed to our nomination, and also apparently with much more consideration for Paramount's financial past than there has been for Paramount's motion picture future.

Neither Paramount nor any other motion picture company is going to make any money yesterday. The motion picture is entirely and absolutely a business of the today and now.

It seems that the present design is to have the corporation operated by an "executive committee."

No committee ever ran anything. No committee ever was a showman.

If there is to emerge an executive able and dominant enough to run the executive committee and make a showman of it, it will be just as well to let him run the company.

What Paramount and the exhibitor now need is some arrangement to restore Paramount to the show business, and leave it there.

Speaking of Paramount and its plight also brings to mind a situation that helps us understand something of the process by which bankers and banking have achieved their current status in the public mind.

Paramount, as everyone knows, has had to borrow thirteen million dollars from an array of banks, and, being in the position that it has, Paramount has had to pay a pretty price for those millions at neat rates of interest.

And so, naturally enough, in the customary order of business, Paramount has had to deposit its funds chiefly with those creditor banks. It chances that Paramount currently has about twenty millions in cash and that the banks which are charging Paramount so roundly for thirteen millions loaned, have thirteen millions of Paramount funds on deposit on which they pay Paramount precisely no interest at all.

Of such is the kingdom of finance, and so do bankers build their fame.

CAREERS

CONSIDERING the evanescence of motion picture careers and the whimsical fickleness of screen fortune in general, there is interest in the discovery that Mr. Edmund Lowe is celebrating his eleventh year with the Fox organization. It is beginning to look like a steady job.

Also there is consistency and solid continuity exemplified in the case of Mr. George Seitz, who on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his entry into motion pictures, with the old Pathe company, and these many years a top rank director, has signed a new contract with the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer organization. Few of the early adventurers in production have kept so well abreast of the screen's swift progress.

OUIJA A LA RUSSE

ONE Mr. David Platt—or maybe he should be called Comrade Platt—contributes to the New Theatre—entry as second class matter pending—editorial cousin to the New Masses—a quite red piece entitled "The Movie Front", in which he says, for instance:

> that the Legion of Decency movement is a movement for federal and state censorship of films, > that the NRA has brought an unprecedented political guidance over the motion picture industry, > that Mr. Will Hays was appointed "by President Harding to the self-censoring apparatus of the industry".

The New Theatre, it will be recalled, is the organ in which Mr. Richard Watts of the New York Herald Tribune announced his discovery of "frank and vicious anti-radical propaganda" in a motion picture, and that the producers were "furtively on the side of the established order".

Mr. Platt probably gets his material from a Russian ouija board.

PROBLEM

THE motion picture is not alone among the industries as a victim of problems posed by the inventors and technicians. Consider the National Association of Retail Clothiers and Furnishers, in convention in Chicago, faced with the zipper problem. The official report soberly relates:

> While the retailers reported that the slide fastener has come into great popularity, especially among young men, some harrowing tales were told of distressing incidents caused by the mechanism going awry. In one or two instances, the slide fastener worked prematurely, it was reported, while in others the wearer found it impossible to make it work at all and was thus locked in his trousers.

At the moment we can not decide which condition might, in given circumstances, be considered the most invasive of the goodwill of the pants zipper industry.

TIEUPS INCREASE

Reported is increased exhibitor use of tieups with educational and other groups, considered valuable in obtaining cooperation and patronage of these special organizations, and arranged through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The latest is a booklet on MGM's "Sequoia," featuring a national essay contest, and one on "David Copperfield." . . .

SCREEN CREDITS

Studying nominations for Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences awards the Acedamy discovered that major screen credits were distributed among a greater number of players last year than in the previous year. Eligible for the 1935 achievement awards are 362 films, providing more than 2,000 important roles. . . .

Signed by supreme court Justice Aaron Steuer in New York was an order naming Morton Wild receiver of the Big 4 film assets assigned to John R. Freuler. The receivership of Big 4 was obtained by Agfa Raw Film Corporation, holding a judgment of $24,000 against Mr. Freuler's company. . . .

DU-ART VS. UNIVERSAL

The New York supreme court's appellate division last week vacated the injunction issued to Du-Art Film Laboratory in its action against Universal over printing. Du-Art's counsel declared it proposed pressing the action for trial and at that time would seek reinstatement of the injunction. An alternative course is seeking damages of $500,000. The action involves alleged shifting of Universal laboratory work to Consolidated Films. . . .

MALOY INDICTED

Indicted by the Chicago federal grand jury for income tax evasion was Tom Maloy, head of the local projectionists' union. Government investigation discloses Maloy's four-year income (1929-1933) was $350,000 above his salary as union head, which it is claimed he failed to report.

FILM RECORDS

Washington's National Bureau of Standards plans a study of the stability of motion pictures for historical purposes. With an appropriation of $5,000 by the National Research Council, the bureau will determine the life of film without deterioration and a method for prolonging it. Convenience of storage leads scientists to believe films are the best method of recording history. . . .

SOVIET FILM TROUBLE

With the censor at Ontario, Canada, strangely enough keeping hands off, municipal and police authorities of the province are at odds with the Workers' Sport Association, sponsoring local exhibition of the Soviet film, "Ten Days That Shook the World." The film has been shown without censor approval, that body maintaining it has no jurisdiction since the film is of substandard width. In this case municipalities have set up their own censorship, a condition which is alarming exhibitors. . . .

TENNIS PICTURES

The British Lawn Tennis Association voted to support a motion before the International Federation to permit amateur tennis players to accept payment for action films. The move is seen as a last resort means of holding Fred Perry, world champion, in the amateur ranks, Perry having made a tennis film. . . .

DESMOND RETURNS

Back to the MGM studio for the first time since 1915 has gone William Desmond, one of the screen's earliest and best known western and serial stars, for a role in "Naughty Marietta." . . .

Two serious accidents at non-theatrical film showings this winter in Quebec, Canada, have led theatre owners to renew agitation for removal of the government's ban on juvenile attendance at theatres, contending that no accidents have occurred at inspected houses. . . .

MEXICAN FIELD

Responding to indications from American distributors that they may withdraw from the Mexican field after February 18 unless tax relief is forthcoming, organized film employees of Mexico City held a mass meeting under the auspices of the Federation of Workers and Peasants, resolved in favor of government expropriation of all houses. # PREMIUM POLICY SPREADS TO 100 CHICAGO THEATRES

Code Grievance Board Issues 300 Ballots, Then Announces Petitioner Has Withdrawn Complaint, on Eve of Count

Warner, Essaness and Schoenstadt Adopt Plan; Even Balaban & Katz, Opposing Practice, Uses It at One Theatre

By HARRY HOLQUIST
Chicago Correspondent

One hundred theatres in Chicago are dispensing kitchen utensils and dishware by the carload in an effort to entice patronage by the premium giveaway method. Assuming the proportions of the Chicago double feature "war" of a few years ago, the practice of giving premiums on the purchase of admission has reached the stage where local theatres are dispensing more free kitchenware, more dishes each week than some of of the city's largest department stores retail over their sales counters. Even the protests and strategems of exhibitor leaders have proved unavailing, and the movement is spreading rapidly to the other 225 Chicago theatres.

Independent theatre owners are said to have started Chicago's premium competition, circuits falling in line to protect their properties after it became apparent that the practice was running out of control. The policy has now spread to six of 23 theatres of the Essaness circuit and to seven of the 17 Warner houses. Schoenstadt & Sons, operating 12 theatres, are using them extensively, as are the six Jacob Lasker houses. All these circuits are prepared to extend the policy to their other properties as the competition grows.

The lone exception among the circuits appears to be Balaban and Katz, with 34 of its theatres in Chicago and environs. Only one of these—the Belmont—is using premiums. The circuit management, controlled by Paramount Publix, said the Belmont was forced to adopt the policy to meet the competition for feminine trade created by the giving of premiums by the Lincoln Hippodrome directly around the corner.

200 Deals for Premiums

The 100 theatres using premiums have made some 200 "deals" with premium distributors, since practically every one of the houses employs the device at least two nights each week, some three nights. A few are handing out gifts five nights a week.

The average cost is 10 cents an item, per patron. Larger and more expensive pieces are usually the first to be given away in launching a particular set at the theatre.

With each premium contract goes protection from the premium distributor on the specific set to be given away. No competitive exhibitor in the same area can buy the rights to that set. However, one exhibitor may give away a different type of set obtained from the same distributor, or from another, and this is the usual practice. Theatres are using kitchenware one night and shifting to dishes or ovenware another night of the same week. Minimum contracts are for 52 weeks.

Producers Grant Actor Demands

Hollywood producers Wednesday suddenly capitulated to demands of their week-by-week and day-by-day actor employees for improved conditions.

The producers' answer to the actors' plea to the NRA was virtually a complete agreement to their requisitions as set forth by an actors' committee.

The new producers' agreement, in which they are giving actors all they ask, embraces a new players' contract, to remain in effect for five years and to replace the present Academy-Producer Standard Player Contract, which expires March 1.

Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA compliance director, had been unable to bring the producers and players together.

The giveaway problem in Chicago first came into focus some months ago when an order for discontinuance of the practice was issued by the police department after complaints had been received by the municipal government from neighborhood merchants, who said the premium giveaways were jeopardizing their business. The Chicago Independent Theatre Owners Association, functioning aggressively at the time, engaged former assistant states attorney Charles Bellows, who obtained a court ruling ordering the police department to cease interfering because the issue was beyond the jurisdiction of the city authorities.

A few weeks ago a petition was filed for a vote on giveaways as provided under the motion picture code, the balloting to be conducted by the Local Grievance Board. The petitioner, according to reports, was Jack Rose, an unaffiliated exhibitor and a member of the local Clearance and Zoning Board.

Ballots were mailed to 300 theatres in the Chicago area, but they were so worded that they constituted a means of voting premiums out of existence in that territory only when they were properly filled in and returned to the Grievance Board office. A ballot that was not returned, therefore, was tantamount to a vote for retaining premiums.

While the ballots were in the hands of exhibitors, some aggressive efforts were made by premium distributors and theatremen. Members of the local unit of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors were reported to have campaigned against the premium. Aaron Saperstein, president, denied this, but at the same time declared that the majority of Allied's members were opposed to the practice.

All the campaigning exploded somewhat mysteriously when, on the eve of the counting of ballots, the code representatives let it be known that the petitioner had withdrawn his petition and therefore no premium case existed.

There is a difference of opinion in Chicago today as to which way a count of the ballots would have swayed the premium question. It is rather generally believed, however, that the premium opponents had failed to muster enough strength.

Some of the country's large exhibitor groups, principally the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, have in the past month severely criticized the ineffectiveness of the clause in the code which is supposed to control premiums. The clause in its present form allows premiums and gifts when they do not involve lucky number contests and provided that a gift is made to each patron entering a theatre, or to each of any class of patron, such as to each man, or woman or child.

Opponents of premiums would amend the voting provision so that only 50 per cent of all owners, grouping independent and affiliated owners as one, would be necessary to bar the practice. In its present form, if 75 per cent or more of the independent operators voted to bar premiums the action would have no effect unless at least 75 per cent of the affiliated owners voted similarly.

As a result of this complication, premium antagonists have not been able to effect a ban against the policy in any territory.

Concentrated in Large Cities

Premiums have made little or no progress in the smaller towns or rural communities, their use being confined almost solely to large centers where competition is stronger.

The general subject presents an interesting cross section of views among Chicago exhibitors. Balaban and Katz officials regard giveaways as "bad business." How-

Other Chicago circuits, such as Essaness and Warner, frankly say they are ready to go the limit wherever the giveaways of competitors cut deeply into their receipts.

Jack Miller, head of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, and long known as one of the stoutest opponents of premiums, has now capitulated and two of the houses which he operates with Simon Simansky are using them.

Aaron Saperstein is opposed to premiums and says most of his members are, and that many of Allied's members now using giveare optimistic. Their long line of customers is increasing, they say, citing this as an indication that theatres do appreciate the need of a stimulant.

16 NAMED TO PARAMOUNT BOARD; DISSENSION OF GROUPS IS EASED

All Important Interests Represented; Zukor and Schaefer for Management, Two Others Have Experience in Industry

John Hertz Represents Lehman Brothers; Stephen Callaghan Selection Is Expected to End Allied Owners' Opposition

New Directorate For Paramount

STEPHEN CALLAGHAN, trustee in bankruptcy for Allied Owners Corp., a large Paramount creditor, representing Allied Owners.

CHARLES E. RICHARDSON, former Fox Film treasurer and former Paramount trustee in bankruptcy, representing Electrical Research Products, Inc.

JOHN D. HERTZ, vice-president of Lehman Bros. and a former Balaban & Katz director, representing Lehman Bros.

Dissension among Paramount bondholders, creditor banks, stockholders and other groups concerned with reorganization of the company was eased this week when completion of selection of personnel of the new board showed all important interestes represented. Financial interests had a majority of the places. Two members—Adolph Zukor and George J. Schaefer—represent the management, and two others have had considerable experience in the industry. These are: Charles E. Richardson, former treasurer of Fox Film Corporation, and more recently a trustee of Paramount, and John D. Hertz, vice-president of Lehman Bros., former chairman of the Paramount finance committee and a former director of Balaban & Katz, Chicago.

The complete board of directors for Paramount Publix Corporation is listed in the adjoining column.

Mr. Hertz, who during the year prior to the Paramount receivership and subsequent bankruptcy was chairman of the company's finance committee, was elected to the new board, it is understood, by the Continental Illinois National Bank and by independent bond and stock holders of appreciable size and his election removes much opposition from these quarters.

Richardson for Merchandise Creditors

Mr. Richardson is said to be representing the merchandise creditors' committee on the board, the same committee also supporting Mr. Zukor and Mr. Schaefer.

Floyd B. Odlum, president of Atlas Utilities Corp., which is said to have large Paramount holdings in bonds not deposited with the bondholders' committee, is another new member of the board, as is Mr. Fordington, who represents about $2,100,000 of Paramount bonds.

Another addition to the board announced several weeks ago is William S. Gray, Jr., vice-president of Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co. Mr. Gray replaces Max D. Howell, who previously had been named to the board in a temporary capacity.

A further replacement in the original board is the substitution of Robert K. Cassatt, New York and Philadelphia financier, who was named in place of Dr. Julius Klein. Mr. Cassatt represents, together with Mr. Vanderlip and Duncan G. Harris, the Vanderlip bondholders' committee.

The appointment of Stephen Callaghan to the directorate again removes potential opposition to the Paramount reorganization plan on the part of Allied Owners Corporation, one of the largest individual creditors of Paramount.

Although no agreement on the future presidency of Paramount had been reached by the various reorganization groups up to press time, the probability that Mr. Zukor would be continued in the post was indicated by many groups. There is, on the other hand, strong support for Mr. Schaefer as a prospective candidate.

Austin Keough, Paramount secretary, and Walter B. Cokell, treasurer of the company, were elected temporarily to the new board in December, along with Max D. Howell, and are now eliminated from the directorate.

Only Samuel Zirn, counsel for a small bondholders' group, and Archibald Palmer, counsel for a small stockholders' group, remain in opposition to the plan. Claims for representation of Lazard Freres and Frank Altschul apparently have been ignored, and the indicated opposition of the Munger debenture committee, represented by Szold & Brandwen, was not made clear until this week.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co., which handled Paramount's first public financing 15 years ago, appears to have been completely eliminated from all Paramount affairs.

George Medalie, representing H. A. Fordington-British insurance company investors, Allied Owners, the merchandise creditors' committee, John Hertz and the Floyd B. Odlum-Atlas investment group, told Judge Coxe on Wednesday that unless provisions are made for annual election of directors, his group will oppose the plan.

Favor Voting Trustees

On Monday four representatives of small creditor groups, including the Zirn and Palmer groups, the Szold & Brandwen interests and Louis Boehm, representing a small stockholders' group, voiced their opposition to the reorganization plan. Opposition of the Zirn and Palmer and Szold & Brandwen groups centered mainly on phases of the Paramount bank debt settlement, the provisions for taking care of stockholders and the personnel of the new directorate.

Szold and Boehm said they favored the naming of voting trustees by the court in place of a creditor-elected directorate, or the naming by the court of a temporary board to serve for at least one year after reorganization. Mr. Palmer made a similar request later.

Allied Owners, although not opposing the general plan of reorganization, announced Monday that it would voice objections to certain phases of the Paramount Broadway plan, which is part of the parent reorganization.

Motion of counsel for the Paramount trustees for leave to appeal from the order of district court Judge Murray W. Hulbert setting fees of $32,500 each for Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson for their services for the 14 day in New York by the U. S. Circuit Court months ended last June 27, was denied Mon- of Appeals. The trustees originally asked for $100,000 each.

Judge Coxe this week approved the leasing by Paramount News of the Astoria studio, held by a subsidiary.

Meanwhile in New Orleans this week moves to reorganize Saenger Theatre Company and Saenger Realty Company, were adjudged fair by Federal Judge Borah, who authorized the acceptance of bonds for deposit and the issuance of certificates.

BLOCK BOOKING BILL AND DEMAND FOR ERPI INQUIRY COME UP AGAIN

Culkin Introduces Patman Measure but It's Expected to Sleep with Proposals for Federal Regulation and Other Bills

With the introduction in Congress of the socalled Patman block booking bill, the usual annual quota of anti-film industry measures was reached and observers in Washington anticipated few additional motion picture developments of importance this session. The fact that the bill, presented last year by Representative Patman of Texas, was introduced this year by Representative Culkin of New York, caused considerable speculation in the capital as to whether Mr. Patman contemplates absolute withdrawal from sponsorship of adverse film legislation.

Bills on federal control and on interstate shipment of prizefight pictures had been reintroduced before the Patman proposal was revived, but it is believed that none of them will receive serious consideration, at least until Congress disposes of its more important problems.

As was expected, last week came introduction of a measure in both houses to pave the way for an investigation of Electrical Research Products, Inc., in connection with the inquiry into American Telephone & Telegraph Company by the Federal Communications Commission. Senator Wheeler of Montana and Representative Rayburn of Texas jointly presented resolutions for $750,000 for the Commission's investigation of the A. T. & T.

The resolutions were so worded as to authorize a study of the telephone company's film interest. The legislation was introduced following a hearing by the Senate interstate commerce committee at which officials of the Commission appeared and there was some discussion of the activities of the telephone company. It was explained by Senator Wheeler that he was interested in having a study made of the company's film interests, particularly with respect to Erpi.

Drastic changes in California's governmental structure, including imposition of more than $107,000,000 in new tax levies for general expenditures and more than $47,000,000 in additional taxes for unemployment relief, have been recommended to the state legislature by Governor Frank F. Merriam. Among the new sources of revenue proposed is a tax on admissions to theatres and sporting events, the suggested tax being one cent on each ten cents, with the first 20 cents exempt. This alone is expected to return $4,000,000 annually to the state. A huge tax levy against motion picture film, designed to raise $46,000,000 a year, was proposed by Assemblyman Morgan, Rep., Santa Monica. He would tax films at the rate of one cent a foot.

Unless theatre men in Delaware come through with some form of support for the bill, introduced by Representative Dr. Willard R. Pierce of Milford, to permit the showing of films on Sunday throughout the state, the bill will be dropped. The bill will call for a tax of three cents on each ticket, the revenue going to hospitals, and under its terms theatres could not open before 9 p.m. on Sundays.

New Orleans' council has voted an occupational tax on industry.

The Georgia legislature was considering a 5 per cent tax on admission prices.

In Massachusetts, Thomas Dorgan has revived his bill, defeated last year, to prohibit children under 14 years from attending motion picture theatres except when the film being shown has been rated suitable by a board representing religious groups.

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, sent out an appeal to every exhibitor in Missouri to oppose inclusion of theatre admissions in the 2 per cent sales tax bills to be presented to the General Assembly by Governor Guy B. Park.

A 2 per cent sales tax which includes theatre admissions is provided for in a bill in the Nebraska legislature.

A 10 per cent admission tax is before the Missouri legislature.

Theatre operators in New Jersey were encouraged over the growing opposition to the sales and income taxes proposed by Governor Harold G. Hoffman. He indicated elimination of theatres from his sales tax measure.

State Senator John T. McCall this week in Albany introduced a bill to revise machinery for examination, approval and licensing of films exhibited for pay in New York State. He said his purpose was to protect the young from unwholesome films. The measure called for a $100 fee on each thousand feet of film and for censorship inspection of all advertising matter. Another McCall bill would tax exhibitors 10 cents for each 100 feet of film shown and require theatre registration at 50 cents per seat annually.

Placards, billboards and various advertising materials sold or leased by film exchanges to theatres are taxable within the meaning of the state's new sales levy, according to an opinion of the Ohio Tax Commission.

Loew's 143 U.S. Theatres Average $12,600 Weekly Box Office Intake

Loew's, Inc., the first major motion picture theatre circuit in the business, and the only circuit of national importance which consistently kept above water and free of receivership and bankruptcy during the past five years, enters 1935 with 143 theatres on its roster, a net profit for the fiscal year of 1934 amounting to $7,479,897, and an outlook for 1935 which augurs even greater earnings than last year.

A color map showing the locations of Loew theatres in the United States, the number in each state and total seating capacities, appears on the following two pages. The theatres are listed in detail on page 14.

Loew's today is the only theatre structure of any size which has remained intact in that it has not been forced, in spite of the universal economic stringency, to turn any theatres over to the administration of operating partners.

The figures for the fiscal year of 1934 bear out the success of the 143 theatres, whose weekly box office intake last year averaged $12,600. The annual intake per theatre on the basis of the 1934 figures is $655,791. Theatre receipts of $93,778,125 and operating expenses for the theatre company in 1934 amounting to $29,291,088 gave Loew's a profit from operations of its theatres alone of $64,467,037.

The Loew theatre circuit is one of the few today wherein all promotions are made directly from the ranks of its managers and where, in every instance, divisional supervisors and executives have come from the ranks.

Despite the fact that Loew's has not been troubled by serious financial difficulties during the depression, there was a time when all of its theatres were not showing steady profits. These, for the most part, were theatres held on lease, and they were either turned back to the original landlords or closed. Since 1930 Loew's has given up control of 52 houses.

Four theatres were dropped in Alabama; eight in California; one in Connecticut, and two in Georgia. In Maine, the circuit dropped four theatres; in Massachusetts, two; Michigan, three, and Missouri, five. Nine houses were disposed of in Ohio, while in Pennsylvania the circuit dropped six more, together with five in Texas, two in Washington and one in Utah. These theatres were not all relinquished at the same time; their disposition was carried on over a four-year period.

W. C. Quimby Dies, A Pioneer Showman

W. Clyde Quimby, pioneer exhibitor and for 20 years a dominant figure in theatre operation in Fort Wayne, Ind., died in St. Joseph's Hospital there last week. An acute case of tonsilitis resulted in an infection of the blood stream, necessitating several blood transfusions in the two weeks Mr. Quimby was at the hospital.

At the time of his death Mr. Quimby operated and leased the Emboyd, Paramount and Jefferson and was part owner and operated the Palace locally. Recently he dropped leases on the Strand and Allen. He was a vice-president of the Dime Trust and Savings Bank and the Randall Investment Company, and was interested in other local enterprises. He began operation of Fort Wayne theatres in 1914 when he leased the Jefferson. He sold his leases on the other houses in 1930 to RKO, but resumed them in 1933. In the theatre business for 30 years, Mr. Quimby was credited with opening the first motion picture theatre in Ohio, the Pictorium in Dennison, O., on February 7, 1905. He later operated houses in various other Ohio towns and one in Clinton, Pa.

A colorful career included ownership of a tug boat and a show boat and a period as a bicycle racer. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Helen M. Quimby; a sister, Mrs. James Porter, and a brother, Earl Quimby.

Tax Increase Plan Fought By New York Theatres

New York theatre heads this week were marshalling their forces in opposition to proposed tax increases of from 400 to 900 per cent in common show license fees facing New York City theatre men as their contribution to help end a $6,488,969 deficit. Theatre executives met Wednesday with License Commissioner Paul E. Moss.

Theatres seating up to 599, now paying $50, would be taxed $250. Theatres seating 600 or more would be raised from $150 to $1,500.

Pennsylvania Owners to Aid Independent Exchanges

Independent exchanges and distributors will be aided by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware (Lewen Pizor, president) which this week launched a movement to secure booking dates for product.

"Unless we support the 'indie' producers with dates and fair prices they will go out of business," said a statement announcing the drive.

Pathe Sues Greenblatt

Pathe Exchange, Inc., this week entered a bankruptcy petition against Arthur Greenblatt, Inc., in U. S. district court, New York, on a claim of $984. Greenblatt is an independent exchange.

Fox Managers Meet February 11

District managers of Fox Film Corporation will meet at the Congress hotel in Chicago, February 10-11. John D. Clark, general sales manager, will preside.

MEXICO'S FEATURE FILM OUTPUT IS INCREASED

Thirty Pictures Made Last Year; One-Third More Than in '33; Thirty-six for New Season

By JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Mexico's output of feature length talkers has increased steadily since production in 1931 of the first spoken picture, "Santa" ("Saintess"), based upon the classic novel of the same name that recounts the tribulations of a good-bad girl and has made three generations of Mexicans bawl. During the four years since 1931, ended December 31 last, Mexican producers had made and released 60 full-length features. Their output in 1934 was 30 such pictures. That was about one-third more than in 1933 and a 75 per cent increase over production in 1932. At the end of last year, Mexican producers had four features in the making. These are to be finished this winter.

Last year was the best twelve months Mexican producers had in point of volume of output and box office results in Mexico. The past year was featured by production and presentation of the most elaborate and costly production Mexicans ever turned out. It is "Juarez y Maximiliano" ("Juarez and Maximilian"), a spectacle of episodes and customs of the brief, gilded period in the mid '60s when Mexico was ruled by the gentlemanly Austrian archduke, an era that ended with the salvo of a firing squad. This production, released by Columbia, was advertised to have cost 500,000 pesos (approximately $140,000), not much for a super production in the U. S. A., but a colossal expenditure in Mexico, where the average talking picture costs its makers from 45,000 to 50,000 pesos. "Santa" cost 60,000 pesos. The 1934 spectacular picture did fairly well at the box offices here and in some other Latin-American countries. Some Mexican critics criticized it, contending that it wasn't drama, just a series of episodes and clothes horses.

About the best artistic and monetary achievement of native producers last year was "Chucho El Roto" ("Joe the Bum"), the plot of which was supplied by the exploits of a good bandit of the '80s, a sort of urban Robin Hood. Critics acclaimed this picture; the public agreed with them, and the box office did well in Mexico.

The production schedule of Mexican producers for 1935 calls for turning out 36 features by next New Year Eve. This output is apart from the four features prepared in the studios, hang-overs from last year. This program does not include a single short. It appears that Mexico intends to concentrate upon features, even though there is such a marked demand for shorts, especially comedies and newsreels, that this country's first house of the kind, a "grind" called Cinelandia, has opened up in a Mexican city downtown office building and is doing well. This cinema functions from noon to midnight daily and exhibits foreign subjects exclusively at popular prices. It is operated by a native syndicate, in which Arcady Boytler, French director-actor, is a moving spirit.

There is a decided trend among Mexican producers to make scenarios of their country's history and folklore. The first of this type of picture is being made by the Compañia Cinematografica Mexicana, S. A. It is titled "Janitzio" and is named for a picturesque and romantic island of that name in a lake of Michoacan state. A 12-reel picture is being made of the life, deeds and times of Netzahualcoyotl, poet king of the Texcocans, allies of the Aztecs, who flourished in the mid-15th century. Considerable foreign business is expected for both these productions.

All this activity of Mexican picture makers need not cause American producers any anxiety. Of the some 600 pictures exhibited in Mexico annually, more than 95 per cent are imported, principally from the United States.

Free Show Repercussion

The free show proposition has come to Mexico at last. A Mexico City savings bank has hired the Cine Principal, a recently converted stage house, for a series of gratis Sunday morning shows for its customers. Each pass book is a ticket to these shows, which are composed of one second-run feature and six shorts, all imported productions.

War pictures that show up in all their unvarnished unloveliness the horror of mass armed strife are hits in Mexico City. These pictures are in line with the general demand for peace and tranquility in Mexico, now that more and more evidence is piling up every day as to how profitable peace is for this land. At this writing, the two biggest picture hits in the Mexican capital are Fox's "The First World War" and "Forgotten Men." The last-named was retitled "The Horrors of War" here and was prefaced by an intensive publicity campaign.

President Cardenas has approved a bill passed by congress which places all branches of the film industry under federal jurisdiction. This law is held by its sponsors to be a benefit for the industry as it will make for greater coordination of regulations. Heretofore the industry was hampered by numerous state and municipal regulations, besides those of the federal government.

Hollywood Honors Roosevelt

Hollywood studio employees, including actors and studio labor, joined in a birthday party in honor of President Roosevelt at the Warner Sunset studio Tuesday night. Among those who entertained were Bing Crosby and Wallace Beery. Sid Grauman and Norman Manning were the entertainment committee.

Coast Tax Fight Advanced

The U. S. district court in Los Angeles Tuesday accepted the brief of United Artists, MGM, Fox and Paramount in their action for an injunction preventing Los Angeles county from levying excess taxes on properties bordering the studios.

"March of Time" Released Friday

The "March of Time" in motion pictures, sponsored by Time Magazine, Henry R. Luce, publisher, will be released to theatres Friday, through First Division Exchanges. Formal presentation of the reel was made Tuesday afternoon, at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York. The first showing will take place on Broadway at the Capitol, Loew-controlled, on Friday afternoon.

Dramatizing news events of the day, in two reels, released once a month, "March of Time" will average six events per subject. Roy Larsen, treasurer of Time Magazine, its promotional manager and producer of Time radio broadcasts, has executive supervision of the new motion picture subjects.

Highlighting the first subject is the story of Japan today, woven around Prince Kimmochi Saionji, "the wise old man of Okitsu," who has been twice premier of the Empire; the point at issue being: The men of war versus the men of peace in Japan.

The next sequence is the "inside" of how the owners of New York's "21 Club" defeated the federal prohibition agents during raids conducted before repeal. London's Transport Minister Leslie Hore-Belisha and his beacon safety lights and the part both played in a safety campaign is the subject of the third episode, followed by the defiance of the Blue Eagle by Fred Perkins, Pennsylvania battery manufacturer, whose case was supported voluntarily by a million dollars worth of legal talent anxious to test the NRA.

Concluding subjects tell about Gatti-Cazazza and his 28th and final "first night" of opera at the old Metropolitan Opera House on Broadway, and one Moe Buchsbaum, American citizen, arrested in France who refused to pay his $6.60 fine unless to the American Government by way of reducing the French war debt.

Pathe News Makes Housing Propaganda

The Federal Housing Administration at Washington plans production of an undetermined number of single reel motion pictures for national distribution to stimulate borrowing by the public for repairing and modernizing homes and commercial buildings—if and when the Administration officers make up their collective mind on the type of picture which would fit in best with the program.

The commercial department of Pathe News already has been commissioned by the Administration to produce one subject—at a price, and officials are continuing discussions and negotiations with several other companies. The plan was discussed some time ago with Erpi's Audio Productions, producer licensee.

The Pathe reel will be turned over to the Administration, in charge of John C. Moffitt, to be distributed directly to theatres by the government agency. There will be no rental charges, obviously, because of the propaganda nature of the material, exhibitors being asked to contribute their screens for the cause.

Cooperation already extended by theatre owners everywhere in furthering the aims of the Housing Administration by using slides, posters and lobby displays, has been commended by Washington.

The general idea is to have shorts made outlining some of the most appealing features of the Administration's building modernization efforts, together, possibly, with some "before and after" material showing how the public can avail itself of the Government's housing program.

This is the first instance under the Roosevelt administration that expenditures have been made by an "emergency" agency for the production of motion pictures for propaganda purposes. Heretofore the effort has been concentrated exclusively in newsreels.

Trust Law Violations Charged in Two Suits

Separate suits under the Sherman and Clayton antitrust acts were filed yesterday in Chicago against large distributors and circuits. Jack Rubin, of the Public theatre, naming Balaban & Katz, Warner Bros. and Essaness, charged inability to obtain product for ten cent showings and for double featuring. James Roden of the Loop Astor theatre, named virtually all large distributors in his $300,000 action, which charges conspiracy by B. & K., Warner and Essaness.

Allvine Resigns Post as RKO Associate Producer

Glendon Allvine, RKO Radio associate producer, resigned this week. He did not reveal his plans for the future. Mr. Allvine entered the film industry after the war in a publicity post for Famous Players Lasky Corporation, subsequently acting in a similar capacity for Samuel Goldwyn and Fox Film. Later he was named assistant to Merian C. Cooper, RKO Radio producer, and then associate producer. His last RKO picture was "Silver Streak."

Demand Statewide Ban on Bank Nights

The Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan this week unanimously resolved that unless the use of "Bank Nights" in all theatres in the Wisconsin exchange territory ceases before February 5 the exhibitor members of the organization will ignore the Code Authority decision against bank nights, and will institute the policy.

The Los Angeles grievance board this week presented its case to federal district attorney Pierson M. Hall, who will defend it against a court order requiring it to show cause why a cease and desist order should be applied to the Mission theatre in San Gabriel on the bank night complaint filed by the Granada of Alhambra. The order also applied to MGM, Vitagraph, United Artists and Paramount.

In Oklahoma City, Federal Judge Vaught issued a restraining order preventing enforcement of code bans on bank nights against the Gem and Cozy theatres, Tulsa, pending a decision by the United States circuit court of appeals in the Huffman case which originated in Denver. The appeal of Harry Huffman to prevent Denver exchanges from obeying the Denver grievance board order to distributors to stop his supply of film unless he ends automobile giveaways was concluded in Denver on Friday after a two-day hearing. The court decision as to whether a permanent injunction will be issued or a temporary injunction dissolved was to be announced late this week.

Newsreel Punch

Charging that a newsreel sequence in which the bullet-riddled body of the slain gangster, Baby-Face Nelson, was shown, was the cause of a miscarriage, Mrs. Doris Preisler, of Los Angeles, last week filed suit for damages amounting to $150,000 against Universal Pictures, Universal Exchanges and the Hollywood Pantages Theatre. By ANDRE SENNWALD.

"I have in my heart of hearts," said Dickens, "a favorite child and his name is David Copperfield." The classic story of David's triumphs and sorrows, and of the amazing people who were his friends and enemies, has been made into a gorgeous photoplay which encompasses the rich and kindly humanity of the original so brilliantly that it becomes a screen masterpiece in its own right. The immortal people of "David Copperfield," of whom G. K. Chesterton has said they are more actual than the man who made them, troop across the Capitol's screen like animated duplicates of the famous Phiz drawings, an irresistible and enormously heartwarming procession. It is my belief that this cinema edition of "David Copperfield" is the most profoundly satisfying screen manipulation of a great novel that the camera has ever given us.

Therein you will discover all the superb caricatures of blessed memory, led by a manly and heartbreaking David who is drawn to the life in the person of Master Freddie Bartholomew. Here are all the old scenes of David's adventures, Blunderstone and Yarmouth, Dover and Canterbury and London. Here are Peggotty, with no shape at all, and Aunt Betsey Trotwood, who expressed both her hatreds and her affections in the furioso manner, and poor Mr. Dick, who couldn't keep King Charles's head out of his writings, and bluff Dan Peggotty, who owned the heart of a child, and Barkis, who was willin', and Uriah Heep, who was 'umble, and dear Little Em'ly, and the terrible Mr. Murdstone, and all the rest.

Lord bless us, and Micawber, the inconquerable Micawber, who inhabited a world of creditors and squashy souls, but sent his spirit soaring among the stars. Being himself pretty generally a spiritual descendant of Mr. Micawber, W. C. Fields manages with the greatest of ease to become one with his illustrious predecessor according to the directions laid down in the text of Dickens and the drawing of Phiz. The Fields Micawber is, as it ought to be, the one performance that is able to remain predominant among such splendors of character acting as Lennox Pawle's Mr. Dick, Edna May Oliver's Aunt Betsey, Roland Young's Uriah Heep, Lionel Barrymore's Dan Peggotty and both Master Bartholomew as David the boy and Frank Lawton as David the man. Being himself touched by madness and genius, Mr. Fields is similarly the only player in [illegible] notable cast who has the audacity to contribute anything of himself to these incredibly real people of Dickens. But when you have heard him in his lofty rhetorical flights, heard him in the speech that begins: "You perceive before you the shattered fragments of a temple that was once called man"; heard him say: "With renewed courage I again throw down the gauntlet to society," you will perhaps understand that Mr. Fields can do no wrong.

Naturally, it is the magnificent Micawber, the indigent aristocrat, the tool of circumstance, who dominates that most splendid scene in which the sniveling Uriah is brought to account for his treacherous conduct toward Mr. Wickfield. Striking his regal pose, with the verminous Uriah quaking before him, and the victims of Uriah's cupidity at his back, he declaims that memorable declaration of independence which begins: "In denouncing the most consummate villain that has ever existed, I ask no consideration for myself. I have been myself enmeshed in this villain's machinations. * * * I declare that Heep, and Heep only, of the firm of Wickfield & Heep, is the forger and the cheat!" Only a little below it in heroic stature place that other scene of liberation in which Aunt Betsey Trotwood tells the evil Murdstones exactly what she thinks of the way they behaved toward poor David.

Although it is a film of enormous length, according to screen standards—two hours and ten minutes—Hugh Walpole's screen play has been arranged with such uncanny correctness, and each of the myriad episodes which go into the making of the varied canvas has been performed so perfectly, that the photoplay slips by in an unwearying cavalcade. It is astonishing to discover how very much of the novel has found its way to the screen. Some of it has been telescoped for brevity, some of it has been omitted out of sheer painful necessity, but the total impression is one of amazing completeness and accuracy. Pausing only once or twice for the briefest of subtitles, the work flows on its invincibly entertaining way from beginning to end.

Like Dickens himself, it is able to invest each character in this complex story with such a completeness of personality that none is too minor to take his place in the unforgettable gallery. Certainly it is in the great narrative tradition of the cinema. A new year which has already been enriched by several distinguished photoplays now adds a genuine masterpiece to its record with "David Copperfield."

The screen adaptation of "David Copperfield" is that miracle of motion pictures; a drama that should satisfy the most literal-minded of the Dickens fans, the advocates of first-rate photoplays and the devotees of cinema wholesomeness at the same time. A film that runs for more than two hours without causing you to squirm in your seat unhappily, it seems so right in its atmosphere, characterization and story-treatment and so intelligent in its dramatization that it becomes a warm and comforting delight. Of course, it does a bit of plot telescoping here and there, and occasionally omits a fairly minor character, but on the whole it is not only so faithful but so intelligent in its fidelity that it can be recommended with heartiness, admiration and loud cheering. If you are a Dickens enthusiast, you should be a set-up for the new film at the Capitol, and it is my guess that you will enjoy it almost equally even if you are not one of the addicts.

It would be pretty much a waste of your time and mine to attempt to remind you of the plot of "David Copperfield." It should be enough to say that it begins with the arrival of the eccentric Aunt Betsey at the Copperfield home upon the eve of David's birth and ends when the grown David finally gets around to marrying the faithful and slightly dull Agnes. At this point, I might just as well confess that I am an ardent partisan of Dora, the sweet little half-wit who was David's child wife, and add that I have never quite forgiven him for marrying again after her death. Anyway, there is neither reason nor room here for doing anything in the way of criticism of novel or picture, when all of the space should be devoted to hymns of enthusiasm for the casting and the playing of all the rich, famous and slightly caricatured roles of a really immortal work.

The fear sometimes strikes me that in my old age I am beginning to weaken in my feud with child actors. Certainly Freddy Bartholomew, a handsome and sensitive-looking English boy, is beautifully moving as David in his younger days, playing the part in a manner approaching perfection. Then, too, as a surprising feat of casting, he is succeeded by a man who looks as if he might be a grown-up edition of him when Frank Lawton follows in the part of the man-sized David. It should not be necessary to add that W. C. Fields is a superb Micawber, reminding us again that he is not only the funniest of living men but a thoroughly fine actor as well. Roland Young smirks and cringes in properly sinister fashion as the evil hypocrite, Uriah Heep, while Lionel Barrymore as the loyal old sailor, Dan Peggotty; Edna May Oliver, as the eccentric Aunt, and Jessie Ralph as the faithful nurse are just as Dickens must have meant. Maureen O'Sullivan is lovely and moving as the prettily helpless Dora, leaving her rival, Agnes, as much in the background as Dickens unintentionally left her. Madge Evans is a realistic Agnes.

The lesser roles are equally successful in their handling. I would recommend particulary Lennox Pawle as the amiable madman, Mr. Dick, although Elizabeth Allan, a gentle and touching Mrs. Copperfield, and Hugh Williams, a dashing and faithless Steerforth, are especially good. Basil Rathbone and Violet Kemble-Cooper are the evil Murdstones to the life, while the pretty Florine McKinney, as the unfortunate Emily; Lewis Stone, as the alcoholic Mr. Wickfield, and John Buckler, as the valiant Ham Peggoty, are excellent. So, for that matter, is Hugh Walpole, who plays the vicar, in addition to writing the adaptation in such brilliant fashion as to make the new film a thoroughgoing treat.

OBVIOUSLY, it was a formidable task to make a satisfying film version of a book so well-known and universally dear as "David Copperfield." Metro has done it. From its tender and beautiful adaptation by Hugh Walpole, to the most inconsequential detail, "David Copperfield" is a fine, important, beautiful production.

Actors were drafted from every film company to play the familiar roles. The large cast is truly all-star. The boy, Freddie Bartholomew, who plays Davey as a child, and Frank Lawton, who plays the David grown, give flawless performances.

THEIR SUPPORT includes such stars as W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver, Lewis Stone, Roland Young. Elsa Lanchester (Mrs. Charles Laughton) plays Clickett. With Elizabeth Allan as Mrs. Copperfield, Maureen O'Sullivan as Dora, Madge Evans as Agnes, the charming feminine roles are in competent and graceful hands.

STUNNING SETTINGS vividly recreate the familiar old English scenes. A delightful musical score by Herbert Stothart interprets the moods of the situations.

There is vast pathos in the play, tender romance, and great humor. Mr. Cukor, who directted "Little Women,," gave "David Copperfield" the same sensitive and reverent treatment.

THE STORY OF DAVID, best known and best beloved of the Dickensian characters, needs no repetition. All who love it may fearlessly approach the movie, for it does no violence to the immortal book.

It is a wholly fine, beautiful, touching and impressive picture. Don't miss it.

Charles Dickens may or may not be destined for literary immortality, but thanks to all those who have a hand in bringing "David Copperfield" to the screen of the Capitol Theatre, the Briton who peopled his books with so many quaint characters will at least survive a century. For in "David Copperfield" a new generation will meet the folk who delighted their fathers and their grandfathers as Mr. Micawber, Nurse Peggotty, Mrs. Gummidge, Uriah Heep, Betsey Trotwood, Steerforth, Barkis and the rest leap to life from the yellowed pages of the author's heavy tome as warm and human and vivid as they were in 1850.

Considering the involved character of the autobiographical novel, its multiplicity of interwoven incident, and the numbers of important, strongly limned individuals that populated its paragraphs, a stupendous task faced both adaptors and director. What to include? What eliminate? Could Barkis be disposed of? Or Little Em'ly? Or even Mr. Dick? A thousand voices would shout sacrilege in the name of Dickens! So they're all there, the old familiar faces, and if more briefly than originally conceived, at least effectively.

Indeed, it might be wished that Director Cukor had been a bit less faithful, a little ruthless in slashing here and there, for the film's one fault is its monstrous length.

In any event, Mr. Micawber waits hours for something to turn up. Unless cuts are made, we fear the introduction of the movie masses to the classics will prove tedious. Yet, not a scene from the first half of the film may be ommitted, for here true, full flavor predominates. Later, however, and against formula, perhaps, there is room for the blue-pencil in the love story of David and the futile Dora. And in other spots precious moments may be saved.

It is presumptuous to delineate the plot of "David Copperfield," but be it known that it follows the career of that Dickens' favorite from prenatality to marriage, indeed second marriage, which in itself is something, inasmuch as life in the movies seems to end at the altar, or en route to the aisle down which no bachelor returns. The early struggles of the little orphan against the brutalities of a flinty stepfather, his ultimate exile to London, his flight to Aunt Betsey at Dover are gloriously portrayed. And when we leave the David of Freddie Bartholomew to greet the maturer youth in Frank Lawton, the romances of Dora and Agnes, the tragedy of Steerforth, the villainy of Heep, are all encountered.

Truly, each characterization is a cameo. The simile may be trite, but this time it has the virtue of being true. To list the laurels would be to mention each of the thirty troupers, so we'll compromise by naming small Freddie Bartholomew as the bright, particular star of the piece and letting the chips of approbation fall where they may.

George Cukor's direction is inspired with the ability to perpetuate the Dickens tradition. He captures the letter and the spirit of the time and the characters and the indefinable atmosphere without which the fable must have languished. A bow, as well, in the direction of Howard Estabrook in recognition of the genius evidenced in the screen play. We wish "David Copperfield" all the popular approval it so richly merits as a courageous effort and a noble accomplishment.

Dickens Novel Pictured Faithfully by Galaxy Of Screen Stars

By ROSE PELSWICK.

M-G-M has made a beautiful picture of "David Copperfield." In bringing the Dickens novel to the screen, Director George Cukor and writers Hugh Walpole and Howard Estabrook have handled their assignments with skill and charm and reverence.

ROSE PELSWICK.

The entire production breathes of a meticulous attention to detail, from the exquisite sets that reproduce scenes made famous by the book, to the large and able group of players who, in several instances, look as though they might have stepped out of a Cruickshank illustration.

Most of us read Dickens when we were young and formed lasting mental images of the characters that peopled his pages. So, in commenting on the film, there is no saying that this or that portrait is perfect. After all, each person who comes to the Capitol Theatre this week comes there with preconceived ideas.

This column, for instance, couldn't quite see Roland Young, despite his excellent performance, as Uriah Heep; two equally enthusiastic and reminiscent spectators, however, insisted that Mr. Young was just as they had always imagined Uriah Heep to be. Each member of the audience is bound to judge the screen characterizations by his or her own personal and indelible impressions.

Chosen with Care

The cast that M-G-M assembled was chosen with great care and understanding. In the role of David as a child is Freddie Bartholomew, an engaging English youngster who brings both intelligence and feeling to an exacting part. The sensitive David grown up is marvelously well played by Frank Lawton.

W. C. Fields, with the Fields' hat slipping trick, is the hopeful Micawber. Basil Rathbone is the villainous Mr. Murdstone of shuddery memory. Elizabeth Allen, utterly enchanting in the costumes of the period, is David's lovely and helpless mother. And there are Edna May Oliver as the tyrannical Aunt Betsy Trotwood; Lionel Barrymore as the hearty Dan Peggotty; Maureen O'Sullivan as David's child wife; Madge Evans as the faithful Agnes And Violet Kemble-Cooper, who couldn't be improved upon as Mr. Murdstone's harsh sister; Jessie Ralph, heart-warming as David's devoted nurse; Jean Cadell as the long-suffering Mrs. Micawber; Una O'Connor as the wailing and lone Mrs. Gummidge; Lennox Pawle, a magnificent caricature of the gently mad Mr. Dick, and Lewis Stone as the kindly Mr. Wickfield who is robbed by Roland Young's Uriah Heep.

Faithful to Novel

It's a sincere and affecting picture, and if it runs a bit too long—something over two hours—it's because the director and scenarists tried to incorporate as many of the incidents in the book as possible. It follows the novel faithfully and frequently in episodic manner, depicts young David's happiness with his mother; the heartbreak and misery caused by his cruel stepfather; the boy's apprenticeship in the London bottling works and his friendship with the Micawbers; his flight to Dover where aunt Betsy lived and Mr. Dick flew his kite; his school days in Canterbury; his entry into London to become a writer and his hero-worship for the dashing Steerforth who was later to become responsible for Little Emily's suicide; his marriage to the extravagant and impractical Dora, and finally his return to Agnes.

Mr. Cukor tells his story with the same sympathy and appreciative sentiment that distinguished his direction of "Little Women." The backgrounds, costumes and photography are superb, and much credit goes to those who undertook the difficult task of translating Dickens, whose genius was words, into an entirely alien medium. You'll find the cinematic "David Copperfield" an important and outstanding production.

'DAVID COPPERFIELD'

Herbert Mundin, Freddie Bartholomew, Jessie Ralph and Elizabeth Allen in a scene from "David Copperfield," now at the Capitol Theatre.

By KATE CAMERON.

All the important characters in Charles Dickens' immortal "David Copperfield" are now living on the Capitol screen, where the highlights of the widely read novel are to be seen in a tender, amusing and oft heart-rending screen version.

In order to get in enough material on the many masterfully-drawn characters of the book to make each one of them recognizable and as much a part of the warp and woof of the pictures as they were of Dickens' book, the adaptor, Hugh Walpole, the scenarist, Howard Estabrook and the director, George Cukor, had to make this an unusually long film. It runs, as it stands now, two hours and ten minutes.

That is much too long for an ordinary picture, but in the case of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "David Copperfield" that length is justified by the results. There are several scenes that might have been shortened without injuring the story, but on the whole, the tale of David's joys and tribulations is absorbing enough to keep one intent on the film throughout.

One has to see the picture to appreciate the great and loving care that went into the production. The players selected for the various characters, with the possible exception of Roland Young as Uriah Heep, are as nearly perfect as a Dickens' fan could wish.

Little Freddie Bartholomew, who plays the child David, is an ideal selection and a real film find. He is destined for fame and may now be classed with the other important child players of the screen. He enters into the character of the young David so thoroughly that he makes the audience laugh with him at his joy in his mother's gay spirits and his interest in his beloved nurse's affair of the heart with the terse but friendy Barkis, and weep with him at his mother's untimely death and shudder at the cruel treatment he receives from his stern step-father, and delight in his friendship for the dignified Micawber and cheer when his eccentric aunt, Betsy Trotwood, takes him in to live with her and the smiling and simple Mr. Dick.

Frank Lawton, as the elder David, gives a truly fine performance, as we see him meeting the flighty Dora for the first time and taking his friend Steerforth to visit the Peggottys. His friendship for Agnes and Mr. Wickfield is touched upon and his uncovering of the deceitful Heep's crooked work is one of the most exciting scenes in the picture. We are given a glimpse of the topsy-turvy household which Dora keeps for him after his marriage and the film ends on his reunion with Agnes after Dora's death.

Jessie Ralph is tender and loving as Peggotty. W. C. Fields' selection as Micawber was an inspiration on the part of the producers. Edna Mae Oliver's Aunt Betsy is one of the outstanding characterizations of the film, and Maureen O'Sullivan, as Dora, Madge Evans as Agnes and Elizabeth Allan as David's mother give satisfaction in their various roles. Basil Rathbone is excellent as the hard-hearted Murdstone and Violet Kemble-Cooper, thoroughly disguised in a black wig and heavy dark brows, makes an impression with her stiff-backed Jane Murdstone.

Lionel Barrymore's Dan'l is well done and Jean Cadell as Mrs. Micawber, Hugh Williams as the treacherous Steerforth, Lewis Stone as Wickfield, Una O'Connor as Mrs. Gummidge and Lennox Pawle in the role of Mr. Dick help to make the picture a memorable screen event. Roland Young reads his part competently, but he fails to suggest the evil, leering Uriah that lived in the pages of the book.

The photography is of a high order and the entire production has been carefully mounted and given the proper Dickensian atmosphere.

The New Talkies

David Copperfield,' a Rich and Delightful Picture—

By EILEEN CREELMAN.

The movies have again achieved the impossible. It must have seemed impossible at first to compress into the neat reels of talkie entertainment the verbose descriptions, meandering plots and colorful characters of a Dickens masterpiece. With courage and determination Hollywood tackled first the most beloved and perhaps greatest of them all, "David Cooperfield." Through one of southern California's minor miracles this arrived yesterday at the Capitol Theater with none of the full, rich Dickens flavor lost in the filming.

"David Copperfield," for an ordinary picture, is unusually long, running well over two hours, and a crowded, fragrant two hours they are. For a Dickens novel, this is incredibly short. There was so much to tell, so many familiar people to present. A smooth and workmanlike script, by Hugh Walpole and Howard Estabrook, who deserve a prize or two for their job, has gotten in everything.

Perhaps it isn't everything. David's school days had to be omitted and some of the thousand other details. But the important things are here, the personality of Dickens himself as well as that of his David, Aunt Betsy Trotwood, Peggotty, Dora, Agnes and the rest of them. The charm is here, the vitality and the sense of living. This is a fine picture.

It was months in the making, with Director Cukor scanning England as well as America for the perfect cast. He seems to have gotten it, with ten-year-old Freddie Bartholomew of England carrying off top honors as the frightened, earnest, good little David. A handsome curly-headed boy, he has the quaint appearance and sensitive face of a Dickens child. His performance is a real delight.

The cast is studded with electric light names, each popping up here or there for a brief vivid moment. There are the three young women, Elizabeth Allan as the gentle Mrs. Copperfield, Maureen O'Sullivan as David's gay, silly child-wife, Madge Evans as the tender, understanding Agnes. They wear their picturesque gowns deliciously and enter gracefully into the spirit of a Dickens background.

Edna May Oliver, at her best and the picture's best, too, is Aunt Betsey, a lovable hurricane of a woman. Frank Lawton, quiet and serious, is likable as the grown-up David. Roland Young tries a serious character role, the slimy Uriah Heep, and makes himself properly sinister and detestable. W. C. Fields's Mr. Micawber is amusing, if perhaps a little less flamboyant than the Dickens character, a little more Fields and less Micawber. Lionel Barrymore's Dan Peggotty is also very much of a Barrymore performance, and one occupying more space than it warranted.

Even the lesser characters have been assigned to such capable persons as Elsa Lanchester (Mrs. Charles Laughton), who plays Clickett, the Micawber slavey; Lennox Pawle as the affably lunatic Mr. Dick, Basil Rathbone, suave and dangerous as Mr. Murdstone; Violet Kemble-Cooper as his sister, Jessie Ralph as Peggotty, Herbert Mundin as Barkis, Hugh Williams as Steerforth, Una O'Connor as Mrs. Gummidge and Mr. Walpole himself as the vicar. They have all, under Mr. Cukor's sympathetic direction, refrained from any hint of caricature.

This "David Copperfield" is a rich treat, even to lovers of Dickens. It is one of the season's true delights.

A stage presentation featuring Radaelli, Patricia Bowman, Doris Daniels, the Capitol Singing Ensemble and the ballet corps supplements the picture.

40,869 Theatres Wired of World Total of 60,918

Sound-equipped theatres of the world have decreased by almost 1,000 in numbers, according to the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce, which this week reported 40,869 of the 60,918 theatres in existence at beginning of this year were wired, contrasted with 41,823 at the start of 1934. However, in its latest figures the Division has used the results of the Bureau of the Census survey of December, 1934, in reaching the total for the United States. The Bureau total was 10,143 wired theatres in the States, as against the 15,000 estimate for the previous year. This difference accounts for the decrease and at the same time reflects an increase in other countries.

Both those totals are at variance with the summarizations from reports made last week by the Film Boards of Trade of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. In the Film Board totals, which appeared in detail in the January 26th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the number of theatres in the United States listed as in operation was 14,552, while the total of theatres of all classifications was given as 18,263, all as of January 1, 1935.

On the following page appears a three-year comparison of the Department of Commerce totals of all theatres and wired houses, the world over.

While the Department of Commerce records showed fewer wired theatres throughout the world in the past year than in the previous calendar year, there was an increase of 3,914 over 1932.

In countries other than the United States the Division showed a definite gain in number of sound-equipped houses—23,460 compared with 20,934 in 1933. Germany led the increase, with 489 more than in 1933, and France had 2,900 as against 2,550.

The reports showed a very high percentage of sound theatres in the Scandinavian countries. For Sweden the estimate re-

40,869 of World Theatres Wired

flected a 100 per cent adoption of sound apparatus

Latin-America, at the beginning of this year, had 575 more sound theatres than the year before. Brazil reported the largest increase, with 275 added to the sound-equipped theatre column. On the other hand, reports to the Department from its representatives overseas showed a decline in Chile, Honduras, the Dominican Republic and Paraguay. In Europe fewer sound theatres were reported for Russia, Spain, Austria, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Lithuania.

The Far East was second only to Europe as a sound equipment market, with the gain of 823 wired theatres, made chiefly in Japan and India.

From the standpoint of total theatres, sound and silent, throughout the world, the Motion Picture Division reported a gain of 571 over the preceding year's 60,347. The 1934 total, on the other hand, was practically identical with that for 1932.

For Europe the Government figures were 39,547, almost 10,000 more than for the previous year. The total included all halls and other places of amusement in Russia. Latin-America dropped off 268 from 1933. The Far East increased its theatre holdings to 4,718 from the 4,639 of the previous year. Africa and the Near East added 44 but its wired theatre total dropped.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

ARGUMENTS with parents over the eligibility of their offspring to half-fare rates, and the difficulties encountered in trying to unloosen the carcasses of young ones from their seats after they have seen the complete show at least thrice, are problems encountered daily by motion picture theatre owners everywhere, from the rockbound coast of Maine to California and Istanbul.

For the former, William Thacker, operating the Royal, at Salina, Kansas, favors the Chinese method for determining ages. Ticket-takers of the Nanking railways have had so many arguments with mothers over the ages of children that the authorities decided hereafter height, not age, would determine whether a child is entitled to ride at reduced fare.

The ticket-takers carry rulers. Children under 2 feet, 6 inches, are considered less than four years of age and ride free. Those measuring between 2 feet, 6 inches, and 4 feet, 4 inches, are rated as between 4 and 12 years of age and ride at half fare. All others are "adults."

A solution has been found for the second problem, too. When the young audience continued to hold its seats through a whole Sunday afternoon at a Milwaukee neighborhood house, and the management was faced with finding seats for early evening patrons who had been waiting for more than an hour, it announced from the stage that all children leaving the theatre at that time would be given candy. The trick worked like a charm and enough kids stampeded toward the exits to provide seats for the standing contingent.

Correct official pronounciation is "Body Gur"—accented on the first syllable, like "Will Hays' body-gur."

THE dignified Fox Film publicity department in the home office, bordering on Hell's Kitchen at Tenth Avenue in New York, passes to the press, expecting publication, some reminiscences of the days long ago when John Boles, their Texan star, was a World War "gate crashing" spy in the employ of the Allies.

Young Mr. Boles, 34, covered enemy air raids. He admits to a deep-rooted sense of precaution at the time, usually leaving a dangerous spot "just in advance of a bombing." One day he was assigned to a debarkation point, from which American soldiers entrained for the front. The camp was located at the base of a hill, on the summit of which resided a very "suspicious woman." Agent Boles was detailed at once to investigate.

It seems that she had an inordinate hobby of drying her laundry on a clothesline which was so conspicuously situated on the hilltop that it could be viewed for miles around. Moreover, it was generally suspected by the camp's officers that with each fresh arrival of a shipload of American laddies, the lady would raise a red petticoat—on the line. But let the narrative continue from here on in the form in which we received it as "News from Fox," John Boles speaking:

"I soon discovered she was just a harmless, homely old peasant woman, who wore red petticoats, did her own washing, and was lonely. She lived alone on the hill, and the sight of thousands of young Americans whetted her appetite for companionship. She admitted she hoped that her red skirt dangling on the clothesline might serve as a signal to the men of her loneliness, and craving for companionship."

For the suit and the shoes his pop was wearing were discarded by the son before he departed these shores to make a picture for a British company. Buddy is bighearted that way.*

The thrifty judge explained to all who would listen that he hated to throw the suit away, since it had been worn by Buddy in pictures. And he got the shoes when they became too small for Buddy as a result of standing on his feet conducting a Hollywood orchestra. It seems Buddy's feet spread out. He'll be sending along some hats, too.

King George Film Abandoned; Trade Showing Is Snag

London Films, British producer, has suddenly dropped activity on the production of a film which was to have recorded, in celluloid, the highlights of the reign of King George V, and which was to have been exhibited throughout the British Empire during the Silver Jubilee. Winston Churchill wrote the scenario, no expense was to be spared in the acquisition of action material, and the production was to have cost $500,000.

London Films, officially explaining the abandonment of the ambitious picture, following considerable mystery as to the real reasons, said that in order to include incidents with actors and studio sets it would be necessary under the Cinematograph Act to trade show the film before booking by exhibitors. With an absolute May release date, there would be insufficient time between the film's completion and the release date. The film could be compiled from old newsreel shots, the statement said, and thus avoid the necessity of a trade show, but that was impracticable, particularly since at least one other company has announced its intention of giving away a jubilee film.

Pathe, in association with Sir Austen Chamberlain and John Drinkwater, plans to release "Twenty-five Years a King." This, like Gaumont British's planned free film, will be a compilation of newsreel material. It is understood principal circuits had booked the London Film production "blind" at 40 and 50 per cent.

Theatres in Move To Halt ASCAP

Reports emanating from the Midwest this week indicated that there is a definite movement underway among exhibitors in the territory to enjoin collection of the music tax by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers until the government's anti-trust suit against the organization is determined.

Exhibitor groups in one state are preparing to take action through the federal courts against collection by ASCAP of the increased schedule of fees which went into effect on October 1.

Counsel for these groups has been instructed to file an injunction suit against the Society on behalf of theatre owners jointly. It is planned to ask the court to impound fees already collected and to act as a repository for all fees to be paid by exhibitors. The court will be petitioned to hold the collections in escrow until the court hands down its decision in the anti-trust action. If ASCAP is found to be a monopoly and dissolved, the funds would be returned to the exhibitors.

Louisiana's new law taxing author-publishers $5,000 a year for each parish in which they collect royalties was challenged by Judge Dawkins, who said the law does not apply to "musical compositions."

Censor Notes Fewer Cuts Since Production Code

Samuel D. Schwartz, retiring chairman of the Pennsylvania state board of censors, revealed that since the functioning of the Production Code Administration there have been few eliminations needed in current films, at a Philadelphia MPTO dinner in his honor last week.

From the beginning of his period as censor until the formation of the new code, Schwartz revealed that 69 per cent of the films viewed by his board required eliminations. In comparison, the Ohio board made eliminations in 48 per cent of the films and New York in 36 per cent. In the last 28 films he viewed, Mr. Schwartz stated that there were only minor eliminations in four, with the possibility of cuts in two of them being restored. He also revealed that he will join the Warner Brothers organization at the home office.

Operators' Pay Fight Expected

Disagreement over provisions of the basic operators' wage scale for the Greater New York territory is expected to flare into an open fight when a hearing on the proposed scale finally reaches the floor in Washington on February 1. The hearing was again postponed this week, the previous date having been January 25.

Representatives of the fact-finding committee, which has been holding a series of meetings on the subject with Compliance Director Sol A. Rosenblatt during the past few weeks, will oppose the present basis, it is understood.

On still another side, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, acting for Local 306, is against the 30-hour work week provided in the schedule, preferring to continue the present 40-hour basis. The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, representing a number of small theatres, is opposed to the 75-cent minimum clause as well as the $60 a week low for booth costs, their contention being that many small exhibitors are now paying from $35 to $45 a week and cannot stand the increase.

A new field for operators' unions was indicated this week when it was revealed that the unions are gradually encroaching on the sound equipment servicing field. Under arrangements with theatre operators projectionists would take over the job of servicing reproducers as well as operating the machines. The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania already has effected such an agreement with the Philadelphia operators' local.

Columbia Closes With Osso for French Sales

Negotiations have been completed whereunder Adolphe Osso will distribute all Columbia product in France and Belgium the next two years. Mr. Osso returned to France Saturday and immediately will incorporate a new company to be known as Collosso Films. The arrangement is understood to be on a percentage basis with a minimum guarantee.

Academy's Award Nominations in; Results Feb. 27

Nominations for the seventh annual awards of merit of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences close on Thursday, January 31, the nominees to be announced about February 4, according to Frank Lloyd, Academy president. The balloting, by more than 600 members of the Academy, is now in progress, and counting of votes will begin shortly after the close of nominations.

Final ballots will be mailed February 12, the results to be announced at the annual awards dinner dance to be held February 27. Greater scope has been given the awards this year, with workers in other phases of production eligible for newly created merit awards, including music writing, music scoring, film editing and assistant direction or unit management.

Eleven assistant directors have been nominated for that award, including: Scott Beal, "Imitation of Life," Jasper Blystone, "Carolina"; William Cannon, "Wonderbar"; C. C. Coleman, "Broadway Bill"; James A. Duffy, "Night Alarm"; Ed Kelly, "Little Minister"; Robert Lee, "We Live Again"; Walter Mayo, "Catspaw"; Arthur Rosson, "Viva Villa"; Cullen Tate, "Cleopatra"; Mack Wright, "Shock."

Awards are made for best masculine performance, best feminine performance, best production, direction, cinematography, art direction, writing, sound reproduction, short subjects and scientific or technical achievement.

Bernerd Compares Block Sales to Old English Method

Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager of GB Productions, speaking at a Philadelphia luncheon given for him and Arthur A. Lee, vice-president this week compared block booking in this country with the procedure in England before the government ordered the practice stopped a few years ago.

He said he cannot understand why playdates cannot be inserted in contracts when a salesman visits an exhibitor. He has not come from England to realign GB's personnel, as was reported.

He indicated that GB has an agreement with Fox calling for an exchange of stars. Next season's program will range from six to 16 pictures. Mark Ostrer, company head, arrives from London shortly.

"My Heart Is Calling," starring Jan Kiepura and Marta Eggerth, was previewed at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York last week, at a benefit for the National Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild. The gold medal of the Institute of Amateur Cinematographers for the best British film of 1934 has been awarded to the GB mystery firm, "The Man Who Knew Too Much."

Joseph F. Woodward has resigned from the GB Kansas City sales staff to join Fox as northern Kansas salesman. Leon Abraham, former Universal Omaha booker, has joined GB as salesman and booker.

AUSTRALIAN INDUSTRY IS UNDOING HARM OF "SHOWING OFF" TO PUBLIC

Average Film Rental $13,926 Now; Box-Office Receipts Off One-Third Since 1930; Salaries Are Down 14 Per Cent

By CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

Unofficially, but none the less reliably, the gross earnings in the Commonwealth of the Australian-produced film, "On Our Selection," were reported as in the vicinity of £60,000. I remember that the New York office of an Australian distributing representative wrote down a quota of £45,000 on one of the first of the bigger musicals released here. "Rookery Nook," to mention but one of the highly successful British talking films first sold in Australia, realized a gross rental of £25,000. Yet authentic and official statistics show that the average rental of a film in Australia is now only £3,306. With the pound sterling at $3.91 as this is written, this week, that amounts to $13,926.

A curious notion has ever existed in the minds of the Australian public that the motion picture industry has always wallowed in millions. We have only ourselves to blame. We have built huge, ornate cinemas and boasted of the terrific expense entailed in their construction. We have circulated a lot of blatherskite about our "million dollar productions." Like the nouveau-riche of fiction (and sometimes fact) we have flaunted our wealth before the envious gaze of the pop-eyed, gullible public, even if we haven't been so wealthy. And now we have to set about undoing all the harm we did, when, boyishly, we were busy showing off.

As the first effectual step in this direction, the Motion Picture Distributors Association has gathered together some statistics that prove distinctly illuminating—far too illuminating, in fact. They have been compiled from the accounts of the companies which constitute the Association, and the figures have been certified by a chartered firm of accountants. From the £10,800,000 that flowed into motion picture box-offices in 1930, the figure shrunk to £7,300,000 in 1934. In other words nearly 33 per cent has disappeared in the space of four years.

In 1930 gross Australian film rentals stood at £2,162,109. Now they appear at £1,461,806. The amount available for remittance overseas has dropped from £1,022,534 to £580,932 in the same period. Further, the statistics show that out of every 1/— taken at the box-office, the producers receive approximately one penny farthing; and here's another striking point: Gross rentals in 1930 totaled £2,162,109, and the industry paid in duty, primage, etc., the sum of £309,180. Yet in 1934, when gross rentals slumped to £1,461,806, duty and primage stands at the colossal sum of £401,563.

It is a graphic illustration of what the industry has to contend with. Despite this, salaries have been maintained. In the boom year, 1930, the wages bill was £241,341. This year it stands at £207,886—a 14 per cent decrease, but a decrease that stands more than favorable comparison with the 33 per cent lost in total revenue.

In an endeavor to open the eyes of our politicians by plain facts—facts free of all biased propaganda—Sir Victor Wilson has sent a tabulation of the figures to every Parliamentarian in the Commonwealth. In his covering letter he refers to the false impression existing in Australia as to the true position of the film industry. He says, in part:

"It is common talk that 'millions' are sent out of Australia for films, whereas a careful perusal of the figures will show you that the total yearly remittances are actually in the vicinity of only half a million pounds, out of which the producers are called upon to provide for all the costs of preparation and manufacture of the entertainment for the whole of Australia. . . ."

It should be noted that the revenues of British Dominions Films and British Empire Films are not included in the statistics, these companies not being members of the MPDA.

Court Rules on Midnight Shows

Express written permission of exchanges must be contained in the schedule of the exhibition contract to permit midnight exhibitions prior to the first scheduled play date when contracts so provide, and oral permission is not sufficient.

So ruled District Judge Gibson, sitting in the United States district court at Pittsburgh, last Saturday, in actions brought by United Artists and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer against Bart Dattola, operating the Paramount theatre at New Kensington, Pa. The actions were for infringement of copyright arising out of alleged unauthorized "midnight" exhibitions commencing on the night prior to the first day of the scheduled run.

Bookers do not have the power to grant such oral permission, Judge Gibson ruled.

PRESS CHAMPIONS HARASSED MANAGER

Kansas City 'Times' Charges Film Theatres Are Breeding Ground for Young Hoodlums

Public and press finally have brought out into open discussion one of the oldest and most vexatious problems in theatre operation: disturbances created by too playful youngsters and, even more annoying, by hoodlums whose pranks menace the safety of those in the audience.

Having received complaints from readers, the Kansas City Times in Missouri last week made the bold declaration that motion picture theatres "have become the breeding ground for a certain type of youthful hoodlumism that disturbs the normal patrons, harms the theatre and does the children no good."

Dialogue On and Off Screen

One of the Times' readers, Mrs. M. H. W., of the Rosedale district of neighboring Kansas City, Kan., forced the issue when she wrote this somewhat tolerant letter to the editor:

"Certain parents and children make a visit to any neighborhood movie a thing of no joy whatsoever. My last five visits to widely situated neighborhood theatres have made me furious. Shouldn't there be any sort of etiquette taught to children? Isn't theatre etiquette as necessary as table etiquette or any other?

"Some of the elders are almost as bad. Last evening, in a medium priced theatre, I reached the breaking point, or should I say the maddening point? Next to me sat two little boys who carried on an argument as to the hero's bravery. Behind me two women carried on a friendly gossip, while across the aisle a little boy kept insisting loudly that he wanted a drink.

"In the days of silent pictures it wasn't so bad, but with the presence of low-voiced dialogue if one loses a sentence the whole continuity may be lost. I realize the theatre managers are almost helpless, not desiring to offend their patrons."

Dropping Bulbs Imperil Baby

Less gentle were other Kansas City Times accounts. "Earlier this year," said the publication, "it was reported a certain boy, who was old enough to know better, had thrown a lighted cannon cracker into a crowded Saturday night house and almost caused a riot. That boy needed a brisk massaging of his trousers and there wasn't a soul present who didn't hope that he eventually got it.

"Last week another such incident occurred. A young married couple went to a South Side theatre with their baby. They didn't particularly want to take the baby, it later developed, but they had no one to leave it with. Mother had been tied down to the apartment for so long that father urged her to go. The child was cradled in its mother's arms, so that the light from the screen would not reflect in its face.

"Suddenly a light bulb fell from the balcony, striking the father on the shoulder. Had it been six inches to the left it would have fallen in the baby's face. The father hastily shoved the wife and child into the aisle and as he did so another bulb fell where they had been sitting.

Refuse to File Charges

"Unnerved and indignant, the father ran to the house manager. He soon discovered that three boys between 11 and 14 years old had unscrewed light bulbs from the balcony fixtures and were dropping them in the house. The first two, striking the man's overcoat and the seat cushion, had not broken and exploded. The boys were in the act of dropping a third when the manager caught them.

"The manager was horrified at the thought that the baby or its mother might have been blinded. He called a policeman. The policeman tried to make the boys realize the selfishness and ruthlessness of their action, but met with small success. The boys were insolent and cocky. The policeman said he felt his talk had no effect and asked if they should be arrested. Neither the father nor the manager were willing to file charges, and the boys swaggered away.

"Before he left the policeman turned and delivered himself of a bit of practical philosophy:

Now Or Later

"'You should have filed charges,' he said. 'Those kids had exactly the same attitude toward the law and the police and the rights of other people as those bigshot gangsters have. I don't blame 'em for trying a prank, but I do blame 'em for not being sorry when they frightened a mother and put a baby in danger. They're well dressed kids. If some poor youngster swiped a few brass faucets from a vacant house, those three boys' fathers would file charges that would land the thief in juvenile court. And he should. Those kids might have made somebody spend all his life in blindness and they didn't care a snap.

"'They're going to have to learn to respect the rights of other people because they're going to have to live in a world with other people. Sooner or later, the remainder of society makes you learn that. The bigshot gangsters are learning it on slabs. If somebody could have made those kids realize it today, it might have saved some cop bending a billy over their heads in the future.'"

Fair to Handle Screen Ad Deals for Alexander

Al Fair, former general manager of Universal Chain Theatres, Inc., has arranged with the Alexander Film Company, of Colorado Springs, Colo., to handle negotiations for screen advertising privileges with theatre owners and circuits through the country. His headquarters will be at the Alexander New York offices, at 274 Madison avenue. Mr. Fair at one time handled the screen advertising of Paramount-Publix for five years.

Modernization of Theatre Property MPTOA Topic

Theatre modernization and the latest advancement in theatre architecture, servicing and illumination, all looking to the development of the theatre as a more attractive property, with concentration on the most economical methods of operation, are to be important phases of the program of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at its annual convention in New Orleans February 25-28.

Among the speakers will be Robert Boller, Kansas City theatre architect, who will discuss "Modern Trends in Theatre Architecture"; J. T. Knight, Jr., of New York, who will speak on developments in theatre mechanics and engineering, and equipment maintenance, and W. C. Brown, chief illuminating engineer of General Electric, who will address the meeting on the theatre exterior, auditorium and stage from the standpoint of lighting.

The re-election of Walter Vincent as treasurer and Edward Levy as general counsel is expected. Three directors have been added to the board, bringing the total to 26. The three are Morris Lowenstein, MPTO of Oklahoma president; George A. Giles, Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, and R. X. Williams, Jr., of the Tri-State group. Harold J. Wilkes has been named chairman of the convention film carnival committee. A boat trip on the Mississippi on the night of February 27 has been added to the program of social events planned for the entertainment of the delegates.

Dr. Jacob B. Fishman has been re-elected for a third term as president of the MPTO of Connecticut. Other officers are: Adolph G. Johnson, first vice-president; Leonard M. O'Neill, second vice-president; Edwin S. Raffile, treasurer, and Edward G. Levy for his ninth term as secretary and counsel. Directors include Louis Anger, Leo Bonoff, William Brennan, Joseph A. Davis, Irving C. Jacocks, Jr., Arthur H. Lockwood, Ralph Pasho, Louis Sagal, William Vuono.

New officers elected by the Independent Theatre Owners of Greater Kansas City are: Jay Means, president, reelected; Emanuel Rolsky, vice-president; E. S. Young, second vice-president; Charles Potter, treasurer, reelected; Ed Hartmann, secretary. A change in organization policy with respect to trade practices is expected as a result of the election. Mr. Means was reelected without opposition.

The Ohio Valley Independent Exhibitors' League, organized about two years ago in Cincinnati, has become non-existent, due, it is said, to failure of members to lend financial support. It was affiliated with the Ohio Independent Theatre Owners. Willis Vance was president.

Nathan Yamins, of Fall River, Mass., was re-elected president on Tuesday of the Independent Exhibitors of New England, an Allied unit. All other officers also were continued in office, including Max Levenston, Boston, first vice-president; Walter Littlefield, Roxbury, Mass., second vice-president; Ernest Horstmann, Boston, secretary, and Harold Stoneman, Boston, treasurer.

Unique Theatre Is Operated by Town Committee

Definitely unique, from the point of view of operating direction at any rate, is the Starr theatre, at Rhinebeck, small town in New York state. Physically, the house was once a Y.M.C.A. gymnasium, and now boasts a swimming pool (unused), an active men's club equipped with bowling alley, pool tables, and a public library and reading room. The theatre itself accommodates 300.

Operated by a committee of eight business men of the town, the active manager of the theatre is Frank L. Asher, who incidentally operates an insurance company, a coal company, and exercises the jurisdiction of a local police judge. Also on the committee are First National Bank president William H. Judson, a plumber, a lawyer, a veterinarian, a garage owner, a painter and the manager of the local power company. They serve without pay, and have been so doing since 1921, when the first feature played was "Old Kentucky Home." The house was originally under private ownership.

The building was donated to the town in memory of William Starr Miller, and the proceeds of the present operation are devoted to the support of the public library. More than 1,000 performances have been given, at first twice each week, more recently on Saturday evenings only. Two motor driven projectors have replaced the single hand-cranked projector. In 1929 a piano in the pit gave way to disc reproduction, and that in turn went the way of the outmoded late in 1930, sound-on-film apparatus taking its place. Wide range, walls acoustically treated, modern sound screen, upholstered chairs, have followed in turn.

Skouras Firm Owes Taxes, U. S. Claim

Referee in Bankruptcy Hope in St. Louis has taken under advisement evidence presented in the effort of the government to prove its claim for additional income taxes against the bankrupt Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., for 1920, 1928 and 1930, in the total amount of $32,480. If the government contention is upheld, the tax allegedly due would become a preferred claim against the company's assets.

The government contends the company realized a profit of $241,224 in 1928 on its sale of the first run franchise on Warner and First National product to Warner for $284,502. The company claims the profit was only $143,255.

The company further contends that a large portion of the bonds issued in the sale by Skouras of the Ambassador and Grand Central properties in 1928, as well as stock in the St. Louis Properties Company, to which the sale was made, are worthless today. The government claims the bonds were worth not less than $300,000 in 1928, which would indicate a profit of $202,000.

PREMIER QUESTIONS CENSOR QUIZ PLAN

Archbishop of Canterbury Heads Formidable Delegation Demanding Inquiry

By BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

The formidable movement to establish a more stringent form of film censorship in England revealed its strength openly last week, when a deputation headed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the leader of the Church of England, and representing twelve other national bodies, waited upon the prime minister, the Right Hon. J. Ramsay MacDonald, to request an inquiry into the workings of the British Board of Film Censors.

The deputation, for which Sir Charles Grant-Robertson, vice-chairman of Birmingham University, acted as official spokesman, included representatives of: The Free Church Council, Jewish Community, Salvation Army, Public Morality Council, National Cinema Inquiry Committee, National Council of Women, National Union of Teachers, Parents' National Educational Union, National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, Mothers' Union, National Association of Schoolmasters, National Union of Women Teachers.

The Archbishop, introducing the deputation, disclaimed any idea of attacking the British Board but said that the influence of motion pictures upon children and adolescents was a sufficient reason for an inquiry.

Sir Charles Grant-Robertson was much more outspoken, alluding to present conditions as "unsatisfactory and disquieting" and asserting that "25 per cent of films that have passed the censor are for one reason or another unsatisfactory and in many cases really demoralizing".

He asked for appointment of an "objective and authoritative" body to investigate, entrusted with power "to recommend constructive measures for the reform and improvement of existing conditions." Other speakers paid particular attention to the influence of the film upon children.

MacDonald Noncommittal

The reply of the prime minister was notably non-committal. His most significant remark was that "inquiries, particularly perhaps when any question of morals was involved, do not always yield all the results expected from them." He promised that "the subject shall receive examination at once to decide what is the wisest course to pursue."

More significant was the remark of the home secretary, Sir John Gilmour, that the power of censorship really rested with local authorities and that it was notoriously difficult to reach agreement "on a matter largely of taste."

Trade opinion generally takes the line that the exponents of official censorship have met with a decided rebuff by the apparent intention of the government to refuse an inquiry, but there is some fear that stipulations regarding the admission of children may be stiffened and that there may be a stricter classification of "universal" and "adult" films.

Twice Censored Already

Any American film which receives a certificate from the British Board has been twice censored, in New York and in London. Frequently, further cuts are made here in a print passed in America. There is a further power of censorship by local licensing authorities which is not infrequently exercised.

There is the instance of the Irish Free State by which to compare state and trade censorship. Mr. James Montgomery, a Government official adjudicating for the most part on films previously passed by both American and British censors, rejected 117 features entirely in 1934 and ordered drastic cuts in many others. In passing, he killed 799 posters.

He had a busy year, the features submitted totalling 1,504 and the subjects of all lengths 2,275. Footage was: features, 4,711,958; all films, 6,984,092. British films totalled 138.

Optimistic Developments

More 1934 statistics, just to hand, encourage the optimistic view with which the trade in general is regarding the new year. Summarizing the new money brought into British industry during the past twelve months, they definitely support the view that the commercial revival has begun. The total in all fields is £48,994,850 (at $5 is $244,974,250) more than in 1933. Cinema investments were: £1,895,435 in 259 new companies ($9,477,175). Theatre investment absorbed £482,635 ($2,413,175) of this total. There were 11 "public" companies, with a capital of £638,100 ($3,190,500) and 248 private companies, capitalized at £1,257,335 ($6,286,675). The total shows a decrease as compared with 1933's £2,258,290 ($11,291,450) but the trade's possibilities of expansion is not unlimited and its expectation of profit rests on the general situation rather than on internal growth. British banks are bursting with money, much of which must find its way into industry in 1935, and the box office will quickly feel the result.

Newman Leaves $137,000

The will of the late S. G. Newman, principal of Radio Pictures here, reveals an estate valued at £27,573 (approximately $137,865). After the death of his wife, he left a life interest in a third of his property to his stepdaughter, then to the Home for Aged Jews. One-third goes as a life interest to his stepson, passing to the Cinematograph Trade Benevolent Fund.

SEEK CODE OPINIONS OF IMPARTIAL MEMBERS

Authority Sends Questionnaire to Local Boards; Compromise of Code Amendments Heard

The motion picture Code Authority this week took preliminary steps in what promises to be a thorough check on the activities and methods of local clearance and zoning and grievance boards in the field during their first year of operation with the mailing of questionnaires to all impartial members of local boards for suggestions and recommendations on activities and procedure. The impartial members' answers will be included in a report being prepared by John C. Flinn, executive secretary of the Code Authority, on the year's work, and the resume will be submitted to the entire Code Authority membership for approval in the near future.

In addition to the questionnaire sent to each impartial board member, Mr. Flinn has compiled a complete record of all cases before local boards, together with the disposition of each complaint.

Questionnaire Comprehensive

The questionnaire is divided into eight separate sections, as follows:

"1. Are the members of your local code board sincere in their determinations and is the individual fair in reaching conclusions or is he swayed by the group he represents?

"2. What change in group representation or membership of your local board could you suggest?

"3. Can you suggest any improvement in the rules of procedure issued by the Code Authority?

"4. Can you enumerate any unfair trade practices or provisions which should be added to the code?

"5. Can you suggest any unfair trade practice or provision which should be eliminated from the code?

"6. How can appeals to the Code Authority be reduced in number without unfairness to any complainant or respondent?

"7. Within your experience and observation has the motion picture industry since the adoption of the code been benefited or retarded? What makes you think so?

"8. What should be done about clearance and zoning schedules?"

Amendment Compromises Heard

Modifications and compromises on pending amendments to the film code, worked out by the NRA since the hearing in Washington in December, were heard by the Code Authority in New York on Tuesday. Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth developed plans for meeting the two most controversial issues, lease interference provisions and the proposal to make exhibitors responsible for the payment of code salaries by unit owners.

The Administration is known to be opposed to elimination of the lease interference clause, but has worked out clarifying provisions recognizing the rights of property owners, holders of mortgages and others having a direct interest in seeking tenants.

After consideration of its own amendment to make exhibitors responsible for the payment by contractors in theatres of code salaries, the Administration is prepared to drop the matter on the grounds that there already is, in Section 10 of the code, a provision which gives the Code Authority the power to make rules concerning the relationship of independent contractors with exhibitors. This latter provision, it is believed, may be enforced to bring about the results which the Administration had in mind when it offered its amendment to require the exhibitor to see that the independent contractors did not "chisel."

To Clarify "Availability"

The Code Authority generally is brushing up loose ends in the code and its administration this week, the third item of importance to be taken up being the definition of "availability" in the code section dealing with selective contracts. The Code Authority's legal committee was working this week on a proposed amendment to the code to clarify the term. According to the code, films bought selectively must be rejected within 21 days after availability, otherwise the exhibitor must take the pictures at a later date.

The Authority also is planning an amendment to outlaw misleading advertising wherein an exhibitor uses a title which does not rightfully belong to the picture he is playing. Its first decision on such a complaint was rendered 10 days ago in the case of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Cleveland against B. W. Bickert of the Palace at Ashland, Ohio. The charge was made by the MGM office that Bickert used the title "Treasure Island" in advertising a picture known as "Pirate Treasure," and the Cleveland board, by a unanimous vote, certified the complaint to the Code Authority, which decided it constituted an unfair trade practice.

It was announced that week that any members of the industry in arrears on their 1934 code assessments must settle their accounts by February 15 or lose their right to file complaints with local boards.

The problem of effectuating a plan of clearance and zoning for Los Angeles which will meet with general approval failed again last week in New York when the Code Authority attempted to reconcile producers' representatives to a plan based on admission prices. The producers' representatives refused to accept such a plan, while the contention of distributors is that there never has been a schedule based on admissions and that were one to be adopted it could not possibly work. Distributors contend they can sell protection to the highest bidder regardless of admissions. It also is held that if all theatres in a given territory were to be given the same availability in accordance with admissions it would result in a critical print shortage or necessitate an increase of thousands of dollars for extra prints.

Cleveland exhibitors are continuing the clearance agreement which expired January 1, with a temporary plan.

Denver Claim Filed

Judgment for $95,000 was entered in Denver district court this week against Denver Orpheum Company in favor of Stadium Theatres Corporation, on two notes made in 1932 by the Orpheum Corporation to Orpheum Circuit, Inc., and later to Keith-Albee-Orpheum. Still later the notes were taken by Stadium, organized to take over some of the assets of the defunct RKO concern. The court action was taken to get the notes into record as a recognized claim against the Denver Orpheum.

Government Plans Coast Action on Monopoly Charge

Independent theatre owners who have petitioned Washington for federal relief from alleged monopolistic practices of distributor-circuits, were awaiting this week the next move of the Department of Justice in its investigation of the complaints. Washington reported that the Department was about to act in Los Angeles against Fox West Coast and had so advised independents in that area.

Pressed for action by independent owners in California, Kansas City and other sections, the Department was understood to be giving even further consideration to the motion picture situation.

The California matter has been pending before the Department for a number of months. Since the inception of the recent St. Louis proceedings, which resulted in federal grand jury indictments against Warners, RKO and Paramount, the demand for action has gained impetus in Los Angeles and elsewhere.

If the Department starts prosecutions in Los Angeles, as is expected, it was said at Washington that they may either be in the form of charges of violation by Fox West Coast of the consent decree of 1930, or else an action similar to that conducted in St. Louis. The principal complainants in Los Angeles are the members of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, who asked relief from competitive practices of Fox West Coast.

The California exhibitors were supposed to have received a letter this week from Assistant Attorney General Harold Stephens, of Washington, outlining the attitude of the Department toward the charges. The letter followed a first hand investigation by Department operatives in Los Angeles.

Minneapolis was mentioned this week as a possible future scene of federal action. Already mentioned in unofficial reports were Atlanta, Cleveland, Kansas City, New Orleans and Philadelphia.

Tentative suggestions were said to have reached the Department looking toward a settlement of the St. Louis indictments against Warners, RKO and Paramount.

Settlement by the government without trial by a consent decree, could be made by an action of the Department to nolle prosse the criminal indictments, initiating equity actions and withdrawing the criminal charges.

Warner Bros., RKO and Paramount were served Tuesday with copies of the criminal indictments obtained by the Department at St. Louis. The managements were orderd to appear in St. Louis federal court and enter pleas "forthwith." St. Louis counsel of the companies were expected to plead not guilty.

The troublesome protection situation this week caused Kansas City independents to threaten to appeal to the government for relief on the ground of violation by distributors and circuit theatres of the anti-trust laws. The independents also are protesting that most of the distributors will not sell product to be shown at 10-cent admissions and that they have placed restrictions on double billing.

Appointed to consider lines of action was a committee composed of Jay Means, E. Rolsky, J. F. Rigney, Mrs. A. Baier and E. S. Young. Fox Midwest circuit was cited as the principal target in the fight against allegedly unfair protection.

A TENT SHOW THAT FROZE TO DEATH

Bill Malin, of Augusta, Arkansas, Oldest Exhibitor in State, Recalls Songs Outdrew the Films

The little town of Augusta, down in the pioneer Arkansas county of Woodruff, has several distinctions. Within its confines runs what is called the shortest railroad in America, the Augusta Tramway and Transfer Company. And only a few miles away runs the longest railroad in the world, the Southern Pacific.

And it is the home of W. E. "Bill" Malin, who at 42 is known as the oldest motion picture exhibitor in the state, in point of service.

Mr. Malin opened his first show 25 years ago in a tent at Cotton Plant, near Augusta. Today he is the owner of the Lura theatre at Augusta, an institution that likewise can claim several records. It is called the smallest theatre in the state, with a seating capacity of 208, the only theatre in the county, and during its 18 years of operation it never has failed to have the show go on, except for interruptions of an hour or so due to mechanical delays.

Mr. Malin's experience in the motion picture business goes back farther than 24 years. In 1908, two years before the tent-show episode, he was operating a show for Laney and White in Cotton Plant, and three or four years before that he had obtained his first theatrical job—"sweeping out" at the old opera house in his home town. From janitor he was promoted to property man, stage manager, and bill poster. This at 16.

Days of "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

Those were the days when the only shows the small-town residents ever saw were given by touring dramatic companies, playing on a 60-40 percentage basis the blood-curdling cruelty and crocodile fearfulness of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"It was fun stealing makeup from the actors and trying it out on myself and my friends," Mr. Malin reminisced, gray eyes atwinkle. "When 'Railroad Jack' played, I swiped some heavy whiskers from the leading man and Horace Mathis and I wore them to school. I'll never forget the whipping that Professor Anderson gave us.

"And when I was 12 or 14, I slipped off with a tent show and stayed with them two weeks. It was fun sleeping in a tent, but it didn't last long. My father telephoned the mayor at Judsonia to send me home or put me in jail, so I went home!"

Bushel of Bustles

One night when Mathis had a crowded house, 18 reels of film caught fire and the operator kicked them out in front of the main entrance. The audience escaped by the back door, and the building was saved, but after the fire, Malin recalled, a bushel of bustles and "rats," lost in the scramble, were collected.

Whether because of the fire or the loss of personal beauty auxiliaries, the public became wary of theatres. They refused to allow them on Main street, and the opera house was moved to the city hall. In 1908 Mr. Malin was hired to run a moving picture show for Laney and White. It was the time the "illustrated song" vogue began.

W. E. MALIN

"We ran three reels each night—one western, one comedy and one drama," he said. "There would be Mabel Normand, 'Fatty' Arbuckle, Charlie Chaplin and Ford Sterling, all in one Mutual Keystone comedy. But the main attraction was not the moving pictures, but the illustrated songs, for which a piano player and a singer had to be hired at $1 a night, each. Every night we advertised a new song. We could get a crowd any time with 'Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight,' 'Red Wing,' or 'Hiawatha.'"

The show was moved back to Main street, where the walls of a burned building were used and the theatre was made an airdrome. Then Bill persuaded his father, George J. Malin, and Joe Greenfield, a merchant, now of Wynne, to join him in buying a tent and installing a show of his own, grandly named the Olympic. The 60 by 90-foot tent seated 700 or 800 and cost $300.

"The tent was nailed to a side wall of lumber about three feet high. We had two stoves in the tent. That was before an electric system was installed in Cotton Plant, so for lighting we tossed some carbide on to a piece of lime, which threw a soft light on to the curtain. When we cut the lights off at night, they made a loud noise, and the people invariably jumped as if they were shot. A tank of carbide lasted two or three months."

THE OLYMPIC IN ITS HEYDAY

Admission charges were 5 and 10 cents and the show made money. A whole week's program—three reels each night, with a change every night, all advertising and express charges paid one way—cost only $18. The 18 reels were sent in one shipment. There was no music tax, no occupation tax. The most expensive part was the illustrated song program. Mr. Malin recalled numerous instances where the piano player and the singer took over the show for what the manager owed them.

"It was hard to convince them that the people on the screen were not real—that there was no trick to it. We often had to shoo curious persons away from the curtain; they all wanted to feel the curtain, to see whether the characters were alive."

Show Snowed to Death

Then the tent show "froze to death!" Every time a wind came up, Mr. Malin had to let the tent down to keep it from blowing away. In the winter of 1912-13, Cotton Plant had one of the biggest snows in its history. The tent had been let down, and after being buried underneath snow for three weeks, the canvas was ruined. For a while the sides of the tent were used and the show was operated as an airdrome; then the old Deboe blacksmith shop was remodeled, and Mr. Malin moved into it.

In 1914, his father bought the old Colonial theatre in England, Ark., and sent his son there as manager. In a year he returned to take over the show—and to take Miss Lura Thomason of Siloam Springs as his bride.

Screen of Muslin Sheeting

The Lura then was a turn-around house with an unattractive entrance. Equipment consisted of 250 cane-bottomed chairs, a one-pin Edison machine, a player piano, and a screen made of three widths of muslin sheeting. There were four ceiling fans, and a stove was the only means of heating the house. Seats for whites and Negroes were separated by ropes.

One night when an advertisement for duPont powder was being shown, something fell off a table in the booth upstairs just as the powder charge in the picture exploded, and the picturegoers were so frightened they almost tore down the building trying to get out.

A Negress in the balcony, watching the approach of a train in a picture, the engine coming straight toward her, frantically climbed over the audience in an attempt to escape.

Mr. Malin's theatre today is one of the most uptodate in eastern Arkansas.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR

MGM

This production is is both a human interest story and a tribute to the U. S. Army Aviation Corps; it traces this branch of the service in spectacular fashion from its beginning to the present day. Story and screen play are by Lieutenant Commander Frank Wead, who has specialized in thrill aviation stories, as evidenced by "Dirigible," "The Flying Fleet," "Hell Divers" and "Air Mail," and by A. J. Beckhard and Harold Buckley. Direction is by Richard Rosson, who made "Today We Live."

Wallace Beery is starred. The cast features Robert Young, currently in "The Band Plays On"; Maureen O'Sullivan and Lewis Stone, who are now in "Copperfield"; Rosalind Russell, seen in "Evelyn Prentice"; Russell Hardie, now in "Sequoia"; Robert Taylor, outstanding in the current "Society Doctor"; Robert Linvingstone; Henry Wadsworth, seen in "Thin Man," and James Gleason.

Made in cooperation with the Army Air Corps at Randolph Field, the picture might be termed the big parade of the nation's army air forces. There being unusual value in the cast, there is just as much if not more in the topical atmosphere surrounding the production. One of its big features will be a thousand planes flying in military formation; others are aerial combat sequences, a scene in which 200 parachute jumps are made simultaneously.

To motivate the story there is a father and son theme with the grizzled old Beery courageously pointing the way to fame and glory to the boy he loves. Supplementing that, there is a romantic twist of a girl inspiring the boy to fight his way to greatness.

CALIENTE

Warner

Fundamentally a musical, this production is also a sparkling comedy romance drama. It presents Dolores Del Rio as a sensational, exotic Spanish dancer leading Pat O'Brien, magazine editor, into a wild love affair as revenge for some of his caustic criticism, and then, as a whole host of exciting and glamorous situations accrue, finding herself in love with the man she tried to ridicule.

The major locale is the wellknown Agua Caliente Casino. Against that background, dances arranged and directed by Busby Berkeley, who made "Golddiggers of 1935" and did the dance numbers in "42nd Street" and "Wonderbar," feature a new bevy of beautiful girls. Special music for Miss Del Rio and the ensembles has been prepared by Mort Dixon and Allie Wrubel. Included are "The Lady in Red," "Mexicano," and "In Caliente." Direction is by Lloyd Bacon, who was in charge of "42nd Street," "Wonderbar" and "Devil Dogs of the Air." Original story and screen play are by Ralph Block and Warren Duff, with adaptation and additional dialogue by Jerry Walk and Julius Epstein.

Settings and costumes being lavishly elaborate, with the group dance numbers to feature half a dozen novel evolutions, the picture has enough potential production value for several features.

The cast supporting the leading players is composed of wellknown screen personalities. Included are Glenda Farrell, Edward Everett Horton, Leo Carrillo, Harry Holman, Herman Bing, Phil Regan, Winifred Shaw, Olive Jones, John Hyams and Florence Fair.

While the production's spectacle undoubtedly will prove the chief instigator of curiosity, among the other salable assets, exclusive of personalities and girl glamour and music, is the unique comedy vein motivating the romantic and dramatic elements. It is an asset not to be overlooked.

A DOG OF FLANDERS

Radio

In this production, story value seems to be the best angle for exploitation and showmanship. The novel on which it is based, authored by "Quida," has long been considered one of literature's finest heroic love stories. The locale is Holland and it is a tender yet powerful story of simple folk and simple human lives. It deals with a poor boy, his grandfather, a dog, a young girl and her family, and the youth they had chosen for her to marry. It is full of those ingredients—romance, drama, comedy, tragedy, deception and triumph—that have proved their power. Wholesome throughout, it deals in the actual understandable realties of life, and in production, a sincere effort is being exerted to capture faithfully the spirit of the book and story.

Screen play and adaptation are by Ainsworth Morgan, who did "Man of Two Worlds," and Dorothy Yost, who collaborated on "The Gay Divorcee." Direction is by Edward Sloman.

The two principal personalities are children. Frankie Thomas, who plays the lead role, was seen in "Wednesday's Child." Helen Parrish, 11 years old, has been seen in several Paramount features. Another important principal, Richard Quine, is also a juvenile. The adult players are more generally familiar. O. P. Heggie, recently seen in "Count of Monte Cristo" and "Peck's Bad Boy," is the grandfather. Others are DeWitt Jennings, Ann Shoemaker, Christian Rub, Henry Kolker, Nella Walker, Addison Richards, Sarah Padden and Harry Beresford.

The action, dialogue and situations being keyed to play upon the heart strings, showmanship which reflects these qualities with dignity and good taste looks to be the type of interest creation to apply.

LADDIE

Radio

A moving story of rural family life in Indiana in the '70's, plus a wholesome romance of two young folk, all of which builds to a tense dramatic climax, "Laddie" is probably one of the best known, among the moderns, of all Gene Stratton Porter's works. While actually a story of the Stanton and Pryor families, their simple homely joys and sorrows, tragedies and triumphs, it does in featuring Laddie and Pamela develop a heart touching love story.

While made once before, eight or nine years ago, this version is entirely different. The current screen play is by Ray Harris and Dorothy Yost. It is being directed by George Stevens, maker of the recent "Kentucky Kernels."

John Beal, who made his screen debut in "The Little Minister," will be seen in the role of Laddie. Gloria Stuart, featured in many Universal pictures, plays the part of Pamela. In the supporting cast are Charlotte Henry, now in "Babes in Toyland," Donald Crisp, Gloria Shea, Willard Robertson, Dorothy Peterson, Virginia Weidler, Jimmy Butler, Grady Sutton and Greta Meyer.

As with all the Porter stories, evidenced by "Girl of the Limberlost," there is a wholesomeness with a unique modern appeal. In this production a sincere attempt is being made to preserve and embellish that quality. Not only are the rural locales being authentically created, but also costumes, furnishings incidental to family life, and dialogue and action reflecting the spirit and atmosphere of the time of the story, are being subjected to more than usual attention.

In every way "Laddie" gives indications of being an unusual all-family picture, as in its action and characterizations there is something of interest for all ages.

STOLEN HARMONY

Paramount

In the combination of good theatre elements of which this production is being concocted, the reputations of the personalities associated with practically every phase of it; the title, novel production assets and general atmosphere, there apparently is plenty of potential entertainment and exploitation merit. Essentially the yarn is a comedy romance thriller with music and dancing.

The original story is by Vera Caspary, noted short story writer and credited with the authorship of "Private Scandal" and "Such Women Are Dangerous." The screen play is by Leon Gordon and Harry Ruskin. Music and lyrics are by Harry Revel and Mack Gordon, who recently functioned similarly on "College Rhythm." Direction is by Alfred Werker, who made "House of Rothschild," "You Belong to Me" and "Advice to the Lovelorn."

George Raft is starred. The character of his role, an ex-convict essaying to be a saxophone-playing dancer, in an atmosphere that teams with gangster menace, seems to be the best fitting that he has had in some time. The production also brings Ben Bernie, noted dance band leader and radio broadcasting figure, into featured screen limelight. They, with Grace Bradley, appearing as Raft's dancing partner, are the principals. The supporting cast lists Lloyd Nolan, Harold Huber, Goodee Montgomery, Charlie Arnt, Paul Gerrits and Iris Adrian, who is currently appearing in "Rumba."

In the story, a gang kidnaps Bernie's busload of entertainers and embarks upon an excitement-packed cross-country tour. The situation is such that the befriended Raft seems to be in league with the crooks. However, not having been an "ex-con" for nothing, he manages to land the whole gang in a police station, and while he is slightly wounded in the gun-fighting tussle, he proves himself a real hero in the eyes of the girl and the rest of the band boys.

The week's news provokes much speculation concerning two sequels to MGM's "Sequoia", now being planned in Hollywood. As soon as MGM discovered they had a "natural" in their animal drama they immediately announced preparations for a similar story with John Considine and Chester Franklin repeating as producer and director. In the meantime Paramount has been rushing work on an outdoor picture to be produced by Charles R. Rogers and to be titled "Wild Glory". ## Rumba

(Paramount-LeBaron)

Romantic Musical

The major action of this picture is an expert lesson in how to do a refined rumba dance. While elaborately mounted to give plenty of production value in good looking sets, lavish costumes, lots of dancing girls, a continual air of exoticism and a strangely stirring musical accompaniment, the show's appeal is primarily to the moderns.

Thematically, the picture is a topical sequel to "Bolero." Not only are the stars of that show, Raft and Carole Lombard, again featured, but the dramatic-romantic situations to which it builds are graphically similar. Locales and backgrounds are different. Nevertheless the incidents surrounding the Raft-Lombard relationship are almost identical. With the drama surrounding this pair providing the main motivation, entertainment contrast is found in the jittery Charley Ruggles-like antics of Lynn Overman and the spectacular dance group features.

Opening in Havana, a mix-up over counterfeit lottery tickets causes Joe Martin to fall in love with heiress Diana Harrison by getting himself thoroughly disliked. Later, while he is dancing in a night club, Diana sees him and by some non-understandable womanly intuition thinks that he is the kind of real he-man with whom she would like to fall in love. Martin misunderstands her intentions. A fight is precipitated when Diana's playboy friend Fletcher resents the affair, and Martin loses his job.

In the interior, Martin sees a native rumba dance. As he also has struck up an acquaintance with Carmelita, he is struck with a great inspiration. Through the flim-flam connivance of Flash, he gets funds to open a ritzy club with himself and Carmelita in their interpretation of the rumba to be the sensational attraction.

Again comes the wandering Diana, simultaneously with a fabulous offer to transfer his act to New York, and more of the now Senor Jose Martinez's odd get-himself-disliked brand of love-making and another explosion is the result.

José is warned to stay out of New York, by supposedly revengeful gunmen who believe he has squealed on a pal. They warn him that he will be killed if he dares appear in Solanger's show. Newspapers tell the city all about it and the house is packed on opening night. Diana, who previously has completely snubbed the ardent and repentent swain on his return to call upon her, is in a stage box. Carmelita breaks under the terror of the strain. José wants to go on in a solo and be a ready target, but Diana rushes out of her box and does the dance with him.

Nobody gets killed, and in the finale it is revealed that the threat was a hare-brained publicity idea conceived by Flash. Anyway it brings about a complete understanding between Diana and José.

Because of the manner in which it deals with the rumba dance; showing the various steps and also all the evolutions and the type of romantic story, principal appeal probably will be to the moderns. In some localities, family audiences may get a kick out of it, but it is hardly anything to attract children. Where "Bolero" was popular, there should be a definite tying up of this picture with that.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Drama

The extremely novel situation of three men confessing to the same crime, the still greater novelty of all three being sentenced to death for that crime, and the climactic development in which a scientist, by means of a lie detection machine, discovers which of the three men fired first and consequently killed the victim, is the amazing theme of this murder-mystery drama.

The cast names are not outstanding and are not in consequence to be relied upon to any extent as box office magnets, the best selling idea being a concentration on the novel theme of the three separate and distinct "murders" of one man, and the revelation, in the death cell, of the one who fired first. It is pointed out, amazingly enough, that since any one of the three bullets found in the body produced instant death, the two who fired the second and third shots merely fired into a corpse, and hence were not guilty of murder. It is, to say the least, a novel premise. What can be done with it with respect to the attraction of patronage lies for the most part in the ingenuity of the showman in the case.

From the sales standpoint perhaps the most productive listing of names would be Conway Tearle, Hardie Albright, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Jameson Thomas. Boots Mallory and Mary Doran, the principal women in the picture, are at best but minor players.

The story is told largely in flashback, moving from the death cell to a recounting of the stories told by the three condemned men under the orders of the scientist who checks their reactions to their own stories on his machine. It may be mentioned that the title, far from indicative of the story, is almost misleading, since despite the fact that the stories are recounted from Sing Sing, that hostelry has little or nothing to do with the story.

When Tearle, big-time war correspondent, is found shot dead in his study in the midst of a celebration at his home, three men confess to the crime—Albright, Thomas and George Baxter. All refuse to talk, and all are sentenced to death. The governor, besieged by appeals to spare the men who obviously are not guilty, appeals to Gottschalk, scientist,

Thomas tells of his married life, on a coffee plantation in South America, into which Tearle dropped, stole his wife and left him without a position as a result of Tearle using his home as a base for the entry of illegal munitions. Albright was engaged to the secretary of a financier from whom Tearle wanted an interview. Incidentally he caused Miss Mallory to break her engagement to Albright. Actually it is revealed that Tearle is a munitions agent. Baxter tells a story of being an officer on the staff of a Chinese war lord, in love with a native girl, and recounts the manner in which Tearle took the girl from him. When they are finished, Gottschalk, rather too simply, names Baxter as the real murderer and tells the circumstances of the actual killing, again too simply. The others are pardoned, each, it is understood to return to the woman he loves.—Aaronson, New York.

Murder on a Honeymoon

(Radio)

Comedy Mystery

Popular stuff, served up in the fast moving style the great run of the mill picture fans undoubtedly understand and appreciate, this comedy mystery with a giggle for every gasp hits the ball as a more than satisfactory entertainmen and showmanship feature. Starting with a murder and three or four other crimes tossed in for good measure, but nevertheless never gruesome, it's a rare dish for the amateur crime sleuths, as well as being nicely balanced entertainment for those who like to have the laughs mingled with shudders.

With Edna May Oliver and James Gleason again in the roles they so successfully established in "Penguin Pool Murder Case" and "Murder on the Blackboard," the show moves its locale to Los Angeles and Catalina Island. A murder takes place on a plane bound from the mainland to the Island, under such circumstances that everybody aboard the plane is a suspect. Inspector Piper comes into the case to find that his nemesis, Hildegarde Withers, is already on the job with a set of clues that no respectable officer would deign to recognize. Mack next is discovered shot to death. As half a dozen passengers on the plane have reasons and motives for either or both crimes, Phyllis, Pilots French and Madden, Deving, Mack and Forrest each in turn comes under suspicion. Eventually, Hildegarde's comic super-sleuthing, for which Piper takes all credit, fixes responsibility for the first killing on the Devings, who Continually active, its dramatic and mysterious twists breaking with rapid fire speed and the comedy coming just as fast, there isn't a slow moment in the whole show. Not a big picture, by any means, yet withal a lively interest holding attraction, it makes possible not only a follow-up on the Withers-Inspector Piper team, but also their presentation against a colorful background which lends unique novelty to the association. Advance build-up should capitalize upon the picture's elements—mystery, drama, thrill, comedy, difference of locale, fast action and dialogue, thrill and even the almost inconsequential little romance—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Producer, Kenneth Macgowan. Directed by Lloyd Corrigan. From the novel by Stuart Palmer. Screen play by Seton I. Miller and Robert Benchley. ### Musical Romance

A lively and tuneful operetta, this musical romance from Germany and in German is a really entertaining picture, containing a sufficient number of subtitles in English to make for ready understanding of the story on the part of those not understanding German, and having the general appeal of attractive melody.

For those who are, in a sense, followers of the foreign product, there are the star names, Renate Mueller and Adolf Wohlbrueck, who played in "Waltz Time in Vienna," and Hermann Thimig. The theatre, probably in the metropolitan center, which customarily uses foreign product, may well sell this as real entertainment, or the theatre which has its location in a German-speaking community.

The story is the simple and amusing yarn of the girl who masquerades as a man, and all the difficult situations into which that masquerade carries her are here. The romance is the key to the final renunciation of her masculine role, which in turn brings about the eventual stage success of her partner in deception. Comedy plays a dominant part in the development of the story, so that comedy and romance, plus music, seem to be the outstanding sales elements.

Thimig is the would-be dramatic actor who can get nowhere. In the theatrical offices he meets Miss Mueller, a young actress trying to get work. Thimig's early attempts to impress the girl are dropped when she meets him again in a cheap restaurant, and he admits he is a girl impersonator at a cabaret. He has a bad cold and she consents to substitute for him for the evening. Her act is a hit, and a theatrical manager, in the cabaret, engages them for the "big time." Miss Mueller of course continues her masquerade. She, with Thimig as her personal manager, and the only person aware of the real sex of his performer, is a real hit, and they move on to Paris, and finally London.

There Wohlbrueck and his friends see the act in a theatre, and although he is disappointed to discover, at the close of the act, that the girl is a "man," he makes Miss Mueller's acquaintance, and she proceeds to fall in love with him, and can do nothing about it. Eventually Thimig is attracted to a chorus girl at the theatre, and to take her attention from the attractive young "man," tells her Miss Mueller is a girl. Wohlbrueck has learned the fact himself, and proceeds to lead the girl a merry chase, as she attempts to retain her masculine identity. Finally, she decides to quit London, but meets Wohlbrueck, to the complete satisfaction of both. Thimig goes on for the act in her place, and is a real hit as a comedian.—Aaronson, New York.

Drama

Weighty dramatic material, this picture, suggested by the novel of Carroll Graham, affords Paul Muni another opportunity for the type of strong character portrayal he has done so notably in the past, and of which he makes the most in this instance. However, the film cannot be classified as general, or family screen fare, as too much tragedy and the murderous recklessness of a headstrong woman stalk through the story. Much may be made of the performance of Bette Davis as the woman driven insane by the horror of a crime she committed to gain the attention of a man who cared nothing about her. It is the type of unsympathetic but heavily dramatic role with which she has attracted previous attention.

In the sense that the picture is extremely well done, chiefly from the standpoint of performances, it may be called entertaining material, but in its delineation of the utter uselessness of striving, the futility of a man's earnest and hard fought effort to make something better of himself, it is bitter portraiture. If there be any moral significance to it, it is a stern admonition to a man to stay on his own side of the tracks, which is hardly an appealing philosophy in any case.

The selling has the factor of names, those of Muni and Miss Davis being strong, and the dramatic weight of the story itself. The title is indicative of the setting of a large part of the film's development. In support are Margaret Lindsay, Robert Barrat and Eugene Pallette in particular.

Muni, a Mexican, and the idol of his mother, studies long and hard in a California town to become a lawyer, working during the day, studying at night. Becoming a lawyer, and ambitious, he is bitter at the small clientele he has accumulated, is cautioned to patience by Barrat, the padre. His first big case comes when an old Mexican friend is the victim of the careless driving of wealthy Miss Lindsay. In court, Muni's obviously incomplete knowledge of the law leads not only to loss of the case, but to his losing his temper, striking opposing counsel, and subsequently being disbarred.

Nearly breaking his mother's heart, he leaves home, comes to rest in Pallette's gambling casino on the border. His brains and energy bring success to the place and Miss Davis, Pallette's youthful and ambitious wife, is attracted to Muni, although he pays her no attention. Muni obtains a partnership, and Miss Davis, in a fit of rage and disgust, murders her husband by locking him, intoxicated, in the garage, with the car's motor running. Still Muni will have nothing to do with her, although he pursues his money-acquisition, building a new and handsome casino, which attracts the wealthy. He again meets Miss Lindsay, falls in love with her, and she, attracted by his coarseness and strength, permits him to see her.

Miss Davis, bitten by jealousy, goes to the police, declares her husband's death was not an accident, but was murder committed under the coercion of Muni. Muni is brought to trial, but on the stand Miss Davis is revealed as having gone insane under the strain of her double act of duplicity and crime. Muni is discharged, and learns the truth of Miss Lindsay's little game. As he quarrels with her, she is hurt. Beaten, he returns to his mother and "his own people," a terrible lesson learned.—Aaronson, New York.

A formula western, this appears acceptable material in the regular run theatre for the weekend action position. In the lead is John Wayne, screen cowboy with considerable popularity among the western action fans of the motion picture patronage. Sheila Terry plays opposite and the elderly and capable George Hayes and Yakima Canutt, standby western supporting players, are there also.

Against the usual background of rugged western scenery is pictured the activity of the riding, shooting, scrapping hero of the west, who pits his wits and his physical strength against the marauders, and saves the day—and the girl. What the exhibitor has done with previous westerns of moderate entertainment value, he can do with this one. It has a full quota of action, at least.

Wayne, itinerant cowboy, rescues Miss Terry as she and her father, Hayes, are pursued by bandits headed by a Mexican. Their eventual objective is capture of the girl, and ownership of Hayes' gold mine. More than a little attracted to the girl, Wayne puts himself at their disposal, and sets plans to trap the gang. But the completely stupid sheriff is convinced Wayne is himself one of the bandits, and he is in the position of evading the sheriff until he can prove his case, as well as uncover the bandits. Caught and held by the sheriff along with the Mexicans, Wayne succeeds in escaping, bringing the Mexican to justice and arranging the capture of the gang.—Aaronson, New York.

Melodrama

More melodrama than drama, this film has sufficient liveliness to warrant its use in the action position on the weekly program. It is, on the whole, entertaining material, with a bit of comedy and the romantic aspect as one of the chief motivating forces behind the action in which Columbia, and director Lambert Hillyer, specialize.

Heading the cast are Norman Foster, Donald Cook and Sheila Mannors, at least familiar names. Story is of a rich young man, turned poor and reporter, who saves a former sweetheart from marriage with a crook, and at the same time does a reporter-police job of turning up that crook and his gang. It is to be sold, for best results, as melodramatic action material, the exhibitor being the best judge of just where that type of material will best fit on the bill.

Foster, man of wealth and position, is indicated as the man of the hour in international sport, darting about the world and making headlines as he breaks one record after another. The failure of a bank denudes him of the fortune he was busily enjoying. He determines to be a newspaper reporter. The "Aunt Sally" of a large daily is an old friend, and through him he obtains a job on the society staff.

An assignment calls him to attend the engagement announcement party of Miss Mannors, former sweetheart, at her home, and there he meets the fiance, Cook, apparently a wealthy stock broker. He finds a cigaret case, discovers it belongs to Cook; and becomes suspicious when he discovers information on a note in the case tallies closely with the daring holdup of a company's payroll car. At Cook's office, he gains information which, in the hands of the police, permits the forestalling of another payroll job, but Foster refuses to reveal the brains behind the crimes, attempting to shield Miss Mannors. The police chief gives him until the evening of a certain day to reveal the important name, and Foster gives Cook an opportunity to get out of town.

But Foster is attacked. Cook goes into hiding, and is indicted for the crimes. To Foster comes Geneva Mitchell, posing as Cook's secretary, and offers to lead Foster to Cook's hideout. He goes with her, but is able to inform the editor, who in turn calls the police. It is a trap, and Foster is in a fair way to being put on the spot, when the police arrive on the scene in time to blast the gang, and Cook, out of existence. Foster finds himself not only a star reporter, but about to become a husband, Miss Mannors the object of his attention.—Aaronson, New York.

Lorna Doone

(A.B.F.D.-British)

Romantic Drama

R. D. Blackmore's book is read by successive generations of British schoolboys, and remembered by practically every British adult. The mere title outside a theatre promises glamour, adventure and re-creation of an idyllic love story. To the extent to which the same is true of America, "Lorna Doone" offers advance values of an unusual order. In itself, it provides a picture of a period of history—that of James II of England and of the Monmouth Rebellion—which has not been overworked on the screen and offers some exceptional opportunities of character drawing. Judge Jeffries, King James and his Queen, Mary of Modena, are among them. Outstanding in the story cast is the figure of Carver Doone, and minor types are varied and well drawn. The exteriors, shot amid the beauties of Exmoor, Devonshire, are a distinct asset.

The story epitomizes the novel very well. Jan Ridd is a farmer whose father has been murdered by the Doones, an outlawed family who terrorize the district from a remote valley. Jan falls in love with Lorna Doone, and incurs the hatred of "Carver" Doone, head of the clan, who wants her for himself. A rising against the Doones defeats Carver's attempt to murder Jan. Lorna is summoned to court, where it is revealed that she is not a Doone at all, but a member of a noble family. She returns to Devon to marry Jan. At the altar she is shot by Carver, who is killed by Jan. Lorna recovers.

Historical values and the authenticity of the settings are the obvious selling points. There is a very big cast and the character actors most distinguish themselves. Photographic and sound values are good. The film can, and probably will, be cut for America, and this will increase its appeal as an interesting, though not powerful, reconstruction of a romantic period of history.—Allan, London.

My Heart is Calling

(Gaumont-British)

Romantic Musical

This one has originality, melody and comedy, is done with speed, and uses some big sets and crowds. It looks like box office, if the proper campaign is put behind it. Three big scenes ask the showman to get busy. In one the tenor hero sings from the masthead to a stiff shirted audience on the deck of a big liner. In another, he repeats his operatic act in the gaming rooms at Monte Carlo, holding off the gendarmes with a couple of pistols. In the third the entire opera company sings "Tosca" in the Casino gardens, drawing all the people out of the theatre which has refused them a date.

This is not only new stuff, but done with a kick and done big. The tenor, Jan Kiepura, can sing; the comedians, Sonnie Hale, Hugh Wakefield and Ernest Thesiger, have good material and put it over. A lot of money has gone on production and hasn't been wasted. Marta Eggerth can act as well as look good. The music is opera plus ballads.

The Rosee Opera Company is traveling, third class, from South America to Monte Carlo, where the manager hopes to get a date. The tenor, Mario Delmonte, finds a girl stowaway under his cabin bed. To keep this girl, Carla, he climbs the rigging and sings to the saloon crowd; the collection pays her fare and a bit more.

At Monte Carlo, the expected date is not forthcoming. Pursuing the director to the Casino, Mario does his stuff in the gambling rooms and, with Rosee, is arrested, but not before he has seen that Carla is with the director. She is actually only trying to help the crowd to their engagement, but Mario thinks the worst. To explain matters, Carla slaps a policeman and gets arrested, but by this time the others have been released.

As a last hope, Rosee gets permission to stage "Tosca" in the Gardens. Mario sings so magnificently that the audience is drawn away from the other "Tosca" being performed in the theatre. Carla, released, brings the director to see the triumph and the company is engaged for a season.

Over and above the scene appeal already indicated, it is a selling point that this is an English version of the Cine-Alliance continental production. It certainly has the gaiety of its original. Carmine Gallone directed. Kiepura should be talked about as the latest discovery in the big tenor class.—Allan, London,

Produced by Gaumont-British, adapted from the Cine-Alliance production. Distributed by G.-B. Directed by Carmine Gallone. Associate producer, Ivor Montagu. Story by Ernst Marischka, adaptation, Sidney Gilliat. Script, Ricard Benson. New songs, Robert Stolz. Camera, Glen MacWilliams. Sound, Harold King. Running time, 90 minutes. General classification. ## The Old Curiosity Shop

(Associated British Pictures)

Period Drama

Outstanding in this British production is a presentation of the grotesque and gnome-like character of Quilp, which offers box office values of the type which were associated with the achievements, in make up and acting, of the late Lon Chaney. The British stage player Hay Petrie scores a personal triumph in the role and offers one very effective method of exploitation.

The other big quality of the film is its fidelity to the Dickens original. It is a period piece in atmosphere as well as in setting, and though this means that the acting in parts seems somewhat stilted and the sentiment rather forced, it also means that readers of Dickens will get a real visualization of the author's scene; a picture of the England of Dickens' day as Dickens saw it. Most of the dialogue, also, is straight from the book. The backgrounds of old inns, old streets through which run stage coaches and cabriolets, and country fields and highways, are an asset.

The narrative of the novel is closely followed from the time when Nell and her grandfather are first met in the old curiosity shop. The old man, a secret gambler, is in the power of Quilp, a malevolent dwarf, who delights in torturing his wife and anyone else. Quilp discovers through Dick Swiveller, one of his debtors, that the money he lends to the grandfather is lost at the card table. He takes possession of the shop. Fearing that he intends to have her grandfater seized as a lunatic, Nell leads the old man out of the house while Quilp is sleeping. Man and child are sought by the former's brother, returned from abroad with a fortune. Quilp hears of his mission and manages to arrange that the stranger shall lodge with Sampson Brass, a shady lawyer in his power.

Nell and her grandfather, after many adventures, fall in with a company of queer characters, performers and mountebanks who follow the Fairs, and ultimately are given shelter by Mrs. Jarley, owner of a Waxworks show, who teaches Nell to lecture to the patrons. The girl discovers her grandfather stealing money, in order to gamble and, to keep him from temptation, secretly leads him away. The child collapses under the hardships of the road and the pilgrims are given shelter by a kindly schoolmaster.

Quilp tricks Kit, message boy at the old curiosity shop, into consignment to prison on a false charge, but is himself at last cornered by the police at his ramshackle wharf on the bank of the Thames and plunges to death in the river in attempting to escape. The refuge place of Nell and her grandfather is discovered, but the old man is distraught; Nell is dead.

It is a point of interest that Walter Dexter, editor of "The Dickensian," has collaborated with Thomas Bentley, the director, to insure

Mr. Widget

Good Comedy

Joe Cook, ace comedian of the Broadway stage, herein stars in his first Educational short comedy, as the real estate salesman who cannot sell real estate. He thinks the boss's daughter loves him, and when she leaves a note arranging her elopement with the manager, Cook gets it, and thinks she means him. He is left standing on the corner. The wide-mouthed Mr. Cook has an opportunity here to show many of the Rube Goldberg type of gadgets for which he has long been famous on the stage. The yarn doesn't mean much, but it affords Cook an opportunity to do his tricks, and the result is really entertaining.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Robinson Crusoe Isle
(Universal)

Entertaining)

An entertaining Oswald cartoon, in which our hero, cast upon Crusoe's isle, becomes his Man Friday, the predecessors having ended in a savage soup pot. He is enjoying life with his radio, when the goat swallows it. When the savages start to boil Oswald and the goat, the radio goes into action, and Oswald is supreme on the cannibal isle.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Casting for Luck
(Fox)

Interesting

Another of the Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman, the carries the audience with the camera crew into the waters of the world, as Isaak Waltons of every clime try their luck, with "striking" success. Trout in mountain streams, tarpon in the Gulf of Mexico, lobsters in the southern seas, pearl oysters off the coast of Japan, big game fish in the north Atlantic, all feel the hand or hook of man. The subject is interesting, and should make the hands of any fisherman itch to join the cameraman.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Spirit of 1976
(RKO)

Sporadically Fair

For one who did not see the stage play "Of Thee I Sing" the election parade and music may be expected to provide an unusual measure of novelty. Here it's "Elmer Green for President"; in the play it was "Wintergreen for President". The supreme court scene also is similar. Walter King as Elmer wins the presidency on a platform of wealth for all—work for nobody. But when his sweetheart's father is arrested for digging in the front yard of his estate, it all goes wrong—so King wins the next campaign with a return-to-work program. King's singing is good and spirited; indeed, so is that of Betty Grable.—Running time, 22 minutes.

A & P Gypsies
(Vitaphone)

Good

Harry Horlick, well known director of the A & P Gypsies, radio orchestra of real quality, conducts his group in several selections with more or less of a gypsy flavor, while the equally well known Frank Parker renders a song in his excellent voice, and a dancing team does a tango effectively. The names of Parker and Horlick and the orchestra should be known to thousands, and the subject is highly entertaining in musical fashion.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Pharaohland
(RKO)

Excellent

Lifting this picture out of the realm of the straight travelogue, interesting and fresh as are the scenic shots, is the sparkling dialogue of Easy Aces, radio comedy team, who, introduced as seated in the audience, comment on the picture, the one giving more or less serious description while the girl interrupts with "dumb" questions. If the references to the camels might loft one eyebrow of the exhibitor as advertising, the other also would go up at the girl's frequent complaining that she wants to see the feature. Nevertheless it's novel and spirited treatment.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Dog Show

Entertaining

An entertaining number of the Terry-Toons series of cartoons, this has the entire population of dogtown going to the show, where the canine performers thrill the audience until the dog catcher arrives on the scene. The dogs are all drawn into the wagon, but a lengthy daschhund cleverly releases the rear door and the pups return to the show. It is amusing material.—Running time, 6 minutes.

The Simp-Phoney Concert
(RKO)

Funny—in Spots

Were this one-half its length its comedy values would be tripled. There's endless introduction of the self-inflated would-be artists, but the actual performance, led by Eddie Conrad, has several moments of healthful burlesque that go direct to the center of the risibilities. Conrad labors earnestly to stretch comedy over the footage but it's too much. The barnyard locale of the concert provides fun.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Song Plugger

Tuneful

Sylvia Froos and Brook Adams render several popular numbers in effective fashion, as they play the roles of two song pluggers in a department store, selling sheet music. Miss Froos is about to lose her job because of low sales, while Adams is doing well. But he comes to the rescue of his partner in song by forcing her to sing a duet with him, which sells innumerable copies, and saves the girl's job.—Running time, 9 minutes.

In a Pig's Eye
(RKO Radio)

Fair Comedy

The apparently unquenchable Clark and McCullough in another of their comedy efforts, playing as a pair of tailors who make waffles on the pressing machine and throw patrons to a trapeze to remove their trousers. They steal the kilts and bagpipe from a visting Scotchman, are mistaken for an expected munitions maker, and invited to the home of the inventor of a new explosive. Their pet pig swallows the explosive capsule, and the hectic attempts at recovery end in its detonation, with the usual results. It rates as a fair comedy, or better for those who have a particular fondness for the comedy team.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Good Morning, Eve
(Vitaphone)

Colorful

This short subject in Technicolor is at least highly colorful and possessed of novelty of idea, if it does not succeed in being especially humorous. Leon Erroll, usually able comedian, is featured, but his talent is definitely subordinated in this subject. Errol, as Adam, awakens in the Garden of Eden and he and Eve wander through the ages, meeting with feminine pulchritude in great abundance. The result makes for effective dance ensembles. Eventually, after the, to Errol, stunning effect of the modern bathing beauty, he awakens—in the nudist colony. Fair entertainment.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Thrill Flashes

Hair-raising

The camera, in this number of the World of Sport series, has caught the daredevil in action in some of the most dangerous and death-defying of stunts. The audience hair is almost guaranteed to rise a certain distance from the scalp as the film unwinds. Seen are the steeplejacks and steel workers who work far above busy streets, the steel man who walks on stilts along a narrow girder, cyclists pedaling around a dome high in the air, the man who feigns intoxication on the edge of the roof of a tall building, and many others. It is a real thrill subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Little Big Top

Good

There is entertainment in this, one of the Frolics of Youth comedies, featuring Poodles Hanneford, Junior Coghlan, Dorothea Kent and Ben Turpin. The youngsters plan to put on a circus for the orphanage, and Coghlan buys a horse he discovers to be a circus animal. His plans are spoiled when the horse is taken away by Hanneford, circus owner. But at the last moment Hanneford and his troop appear and save the day by putting on the show for the youngsters. Turpin supplies amusing comedy, and the short is entertaining.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Parrotville Old Folks
(RKO)

Lively

After a rather slow-paced introduction, this Color picture of the Rainbow Parade Cartoon series steps up its cadence, and in the fun at the Old Folks Home much happens when the parrots use their crutches and stands as pogo sticks for dancing to the music. The color is vivid, riotous, as in all the series.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Ireland, the Emerald Isle
(MGM)

Excellent

Of excellent quality is this subject in the FitzPatrick travel series. In fine color are photographed representative scenes of Ireland, the sometimes metropolitan, sometimes quaint, but always physically attractive country. Chiefly characteristic, and occupying most of the footage is the Irish countryside, with its delightful scenery, simple country folk and attractive young women. The accompanying explanatory dialogue is clear and entertaining. The subject as a whole is very much worth while.—Running time, 8 minutes.

YOU CAN LEAD A SMALL TOWN, BUT—

CAN'T MAKE 'EM LIKE EVERYTHING: ADAMS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Some weeks ago, in commenting on the fertile "Crime Without Passion" theme, Mr. Al Zimbalist of St. Louis intimated that my people turned thumbs down on this picture because it was not properly presented to them. Searching the files, I find it announced as follows:

"A vividly exciting, handsomely mounted and presented Paramount picture, produced by Hecht and MacArthur, makers of many previous successes, presenting Claude Rains, last seen here as 'The Invisible Man,' in the role of an unscrupulous lawyer. At the startling climax his own cynical cleverness leads to his final undoing. Two new players introduced, Whitney Bourne, stage actress and Park Avenue beauty, and Margo, Spanish-American dancer."

It drew a fair attendance on the opening night, but they walked out on it and passed the word around that it was terrible, so the second night was a flop. Whether I tried to sell the picture with a sneer on my face, or a smile, or eighteen inches of whiskers, a la Hecht and MacArthur, is not so important as the fact that my patrons found no entertainment in the picture and are still criticizing me for showing it. These people may not know much about art, but they certainly know what they don't like, and how they are telling me! Judging from the comments we read, there are many other communities, the majority of whose theatregoers are cold to novel scenic innovations, subtleties of plot or niceties of direction when these are employed in telling a tale of the sordid doings of a group of very unpleasant people, the humorless record of whose dreary lives, no matter how artistically depicted, adds nothing to the sum of human happiness.

In last week's Motion Picture Herald was a new revelation direct from the oracles of Astoria, like most sibylline utterances not too plain in intent, but apparently reducible to this basic proposition, that you mustn't burble on any bandwagon unless it's the Hecht and MacArthur bandwagon.

There are many things that suggest themselves after reading this latest effusion: One might descend to the Hecht and MacArthur level of puerile and pointless Billingsgate; or essay the facetious, and as a member in good standing of the Nitwit Exhibitors of America, Unlimited, propose these gentlemen and their pet whiskers for an honorary fellowship in our order, with the exalted rank of fur-bearing troglodytes.

But, seriously, I am moved to nominate "Crime Without Passion" as Heaven's greatest gift to our industry, affording as it does that abundant opportunity for self-expression which psychologists tell us is mankind's most precious boon, and of which in this connection so many availed themselves with vim, vigor and sometimes vituperation, from Hecht and MacArthur clear down to little Howard Monroe. Painful as all this publicity doubtless is to the gentlemen chiefly concerned, we all must suffer for the common good, and out of this travail of great minds is born the irrefutable truth, that you can lead a small town audience into the theatre, but if it's a Hecht and MacArthur picture you can't always make them take it and like it.—Roy W. Adams, The Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich.

HOPES "CRIME" DISCUSSION WILL LAST TWO YEARS

To the Editor of the Herald:

My check enclosed is for two years' subscription to the Herald. I am registering for two years because I think it will be that long before the end of all this wrangling about "Crime Without Passion" and I like to read it.

In the Herald this week I note some of the contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" seem just a little timid about criticizing a certain picture, and I just wonder if the producers of "Crime Without Passion" didn't have this in mind when they so grossly attacked Mr. Adams. If "Crime Without Passion" really is a fine motion picture, the big circuit bookers must be the nit-wits instead of us hill-billies who tried to show it.

As I remember, the picture didn't get to play any of the class A houses in this part of the country. Someone should tell them how much dough they are losing by not playing it. It seems to me that the producers of this picture should realize by this time that all the revenue they get from this picture will come from second-runs who are glad to get it or from small towns who either have to play it or pay for it. and be thankful they are getting that much. My people didn't like it and some of them wondered if it wasn't an old silent picture with talk added.

Pictures are good or bad only by comparison and I am positive that all the bad ones for the next five years will be compared to "Crime Without Passion."—H. C. Musgrave, Cozy Theatre, Minneapolis, Kansas.

HOW AN EXHIBITOR AIDED COMMUNITY

To the Editor of the Herald:

For our Parent-Teachers benefit show at the El Portal Theatre, North Hollywood, the picture requested was Eddie Quillan in "Gridiron Flash." This young star is a great favorite of women and children and should be used more frequently to offset the demands of many critics for cleaner pictures. Not only is this young man clean, but he is also exceedingly clever.

Let's have more of Eddie Quillan.—C. S. Crews.

Following is a copy of a letter which Mrs. Eaton McDermott, motion picture chairman of the North Hollywood-Van Nuys Council of the Parents and Teachers Association, sent to Eddie Quillan following the showing:

Dear Mr. Quillan:

The North Hollywood-Van Nuys Parent Teacher Association wish to take this opportunity of thanking you for making an appearance at our Theatre Party given December 22, 1934, at the El Portal Theatre, along with your picture "Gridiron Flash."

We feel honored that a picture star who is so busy would take time to appear at one of our benefits, we enjoyed your picture as we enjoy all of your work.

We are looking forward to seeing you again soon, thanking you again.

Yours truly,
(Signed) Mrs. Eaton McDermott

In his advertising of the showing, Mr. Crews had these words: "Complimentary to the North Hollywood-Van Nuys P. T. A., who are sponsoring this program for children's Christmas baskets. Eddie is the model young man of the children and his comedy is always clean, clever and funny."

SUBSCRIBER "AS LONG AS HE CAN REMEMBER"

To the Editor of the Herald:

Your representative, Mr. E. D. McIntire, called and sold us the new combination of the Motion Picture Daily and Motion Picture Herald. We, my father and I, have been a subscriber to the Motion Picture Herald ever since I can remember. Dad has been in the business here for more than twenty-six years and both he and I heartily endorse the Motion Picture Herald as one of the best trade magazines in the business.

Mr. McIntire just happened to visit us just after our installation of the Western Electric Wide Range Sound System and noticing our advertising campaign on our grand opening, asked me to mail copies of our local papers in to the magazines. Therefore enclosed you may find copies of same.

Thanks to you for the service you have been giving the exhibitors through your Daily and Motion Picture Herald and best wishes for your continuance of this excellent trade service.—E. W. Calvert, Lompoc Theatre, Lompoc, Cal.

Hecht and MacArthur Start Third Paramount Feature

Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur continued this week as directors and producers of motion pictures when they began production of "Miracle in 49th Street," in Astoria, Long Island, with Noel Coward making his debut as a screen actor in the starring role.

"Miracle in 49th Street" was written by Hecht and MacArthur as the third of four feature films which they are making for Paramount release. "Crime Without Passion" and "Once In A Blue Moon" were the first two.

Lee Garmes is photographing and also functioning as associate director of "Miracle in 49th Street," a drama with a modern Manhattan background, written especially as a vehicle for Coward.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

No. 102—WAGES AND WORKING SCHEDULES FOR "LAB" PRINTERS

QUESTION—Will you let me know the correct minimum wage for a film printer, the number of hours for a regular day, and the provisions for overtime work. Does it make any difference how many printers the company employs?—NEW YORK.

ANSWER—The motion picture laboratory code says that film printers shall be paid no less than $25.00 per week and that the maximum working hours shall be 40 hours per week for a minimum $25.00 per week wage.

The overtime rate for time worked over an eight hour day shall be paid at the higher scale of time and one-half for all film work except on newsreel printing.

No. 103—LOTTERIES; DETERMINATION OF COMPETITION; CODE FINES

QUESTION—Will you kindly advise us if a "Cash Night" one night each week violates the code in any way?

We have a small theatre, the only one in a town of 1,500. There are several other theatres close around in towns of from 12 to 22 miles from our town and they do not have Cash Nights.

We were intending to give coupon tickets each Cash Night and put one part of the ticket in a box and let some one draw out a number and possibly give the one holding the corresponding number $5.00 in cash.

We do not know whether these other towns have anything like that eitner because they do not want to participate in such a practice or because it is a violation of the code.

How would it be for us to start a Cash Night and then if it was against the rules of the code governing theatres to discontinue the practice? And would there be any fine (under the code) if we should start the Cash Night?—MISSOURI.

The Cash Night stunt described above appears to be a direct violation of the code clause (Section 1, Part 3, Article V-E) governing lotteries or drawings for prizes by means of lucky number awards, and which clause says, in part: "No exhibitor shall lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of lotteries, prizes. . . ."

However, state or local statutes permitting, any exhibitor whose theatre is definitely not in competition with another theatre, being so far removed from any other theatre as to eliminate the house as a competitor, could not be prevented under the code from indulging in the practice of lucky number awards, drawings and the like, because the clause and others in the code are intended to prevent unfair competition. Unfair competition could not exist when there is no competition in the first place.

Whether the distance of 12 to 22 miles which separates this theatre from others is sufficient to eliminate the factor of competition would, if in dispute, have to be determined by the Local Grievance Board.

In any event there is nothing that can prevent the exhibitor from preparing to engage in the stunt, or to actually carry out the plan in operation. The procedure for controlling such a practice when it is in violation of the code is for a competing exhibitor to file a complaint with the Local Grievance Board in the territory in which the theatres are operating. A hearing is held, and if the Grievance Board finds that the practice is in violation of the code, it will then formally order the defendant exhibitor to cease and desist. The exhibitor has the right to appeal the decision to the Code Authority in New York, which, in cases like the one in discussion, usually sustains the Grievance Board's original ruling.

There can be no fine under the code for such a violation, if the practice is found to be one. If the exhibitor, after a ruling is made against him either by the Grievance Board and/or the Code Authority, refuses to cease and desist the Board or the Authority may order exchanges to refuse to serve him with film until he does cease and desist.

No. 104—UNUSUAL SITUATION INVOLVING GROUP ADMISSIONS ON CLUB BASIS

QUESTION—We are operating a motion picture theatre and charge admissions (four changes weekly) as follows: Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday, 10, 15 and 25 cents; Friday, 5, 10 and 15 cents; Friday matinee, 5 cents to school children. The Friday evening admission of 10 and 15 cents is described as "Bargain Day."

Our competitor (three changes weekly) is running the same on a club basis or membership—the factory here operates it and charges the employees $1.00 per month per family. This includes guests also, if any are visiting the family. They also accept outside families in which they have no employees, at a charge of $2.00 per month per family, with guests admitted, too.

We have had this to contend with for years, but felt that as long as we could make out we did not complain. Now they are trying to get the films we get second run, and we feel that its time we should protect our interests. Please let us know the best way to protect our investment.—LOUISIANA.

ANSWER—The complaining exhibitor appears to have a rather unusual problem that can only be determined by the Local Grievance Board on proper presentation of the situation. Nobody can tell authoritatively in advance as to what the decision of the local Board would be. The procedure for him to follow is to bring a complaint against the factory-owned competing theatre under Part 3, Article V-E of the code and have this Board decide whether or not the exhibitor against whom the complaint is made has lowered the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre, or failed to maintain the minimum price of admission specified in any exhibition contract in such a way as to violate this provision of the code. These are questions of fact that can be only determined by the local Board.

No. 105—CODE CANNOT COMPEL DISTRIBUTOR TO SERVICE EXHIBITOR

QUESTION—Fox Film refuses to sell me second-run features. . . . Kindly advise me what action I may take against Fox Film in order that I may obtain their pictures second run.—PENNSYLVANIA.

ANSWER—There is nothing in the motion picture code nor in the laws of the land which can compel a motion picture distributor to sell the licenses for his product to any exhibitor if the distributor does not care to.

In the ordinary course of the business the licenses granted are exclusive in certain respects; that is, a license for first-run exhibition guarantees an exhibitor contracting for such first-run exhibition that no other theatre in the competitive area will be licensed to exhibit the particular picture specified first-run in that area. On the other hand, where the contract gives the first-run exhibitor only a period of clearance over the second-run, and does not give the first-run an exclusive license to the picture for that area, the distributor may or may not sell the second and subsequent rights, as he sees fit.

However, the motion picture code does protect a second-run exhibitor, and all other exhibitors, from overbuying on the part of their competitors.

In order to overcome possible unfair competition by an exhibitor who may endeavor to license more pictures than are reasonably required for the operation of his theatre, with the intent and purpose of depriving his competitor of feature motion pictures, the code prohibits such a practice and established Local Grievance Boards to determine the facts in each specific instance on their merits as to whether or not more pictures had been licensed than were reasonably required.

If, upon complaint of an exhibitor, the Local Grievance Board decided, after a hearing, that a competing exhibitor had purchased more feature pictures than he reasonably required, with the intent and purpose of depriving the complaining exhibitor of product, then the Board will order the exhibitor who over-bought to release a specified number of pictures to the complaining exhibitor.

The individual distributor otherwise has the unquestionable right, acting alone and not in conjunction with any other distributor or exhibitor, to select his own customers and to refuse to do business with any exhibitor for any reason, which he is under no obligation to disclose.

Cleveland Independents Seek Renewal of Dual Feature Ban

Although five theatres, operating in the Greater Cleveland area, are using double features regularly, owners of other independent subsequent runs in the city declare themselves well satisfied with the results of a single feature policy, under which all theatres in the area have been operating since a one-year agreement outlawing duals became effective July 8, 1934. The five double bill houses were opened subsequent to the effective date of the agreement.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Alamo, Texas

Dear Herald:

This town of Alamo was originally laid out by real estate agents with the expectation that it would become a city, but they left it in the rain one night and it caught cold, after which they planted a part of it to grape fruit and oranges and pastured the cows on some more of it. We like this town though, for it is a good place to sleep. The street cars or fire gongs don't wake you up. The town has a mayor but nobody knows who he is. The postmaster is a Republican and a curiosity here in Texas. The town is about a mile long and widens out in the middle and the Mexicans live on the north side of the railroad. We like this place because it is a nice, quiet place in which to live and they have plenty of grape fruit and oranges in their back yards. The town has something like 1,200 people, including 800 Mexicans, and the most of the younger generation work in the carrot and beet fields when they are not gathering grape fruit and oranges for the packing companies.

Doesn't it beat all what funny things kids will say once in a while? A boy just old enough to talk plain came over to our house from a tourist camp yesterday and we asked him where he came from and he said from Dodge City, Kansas, and we said, "Oh, you are a Jayhawker, are you?" and he replied, "Nope, I ain't, but the boys are and the girls ain't either, but we haint got but one girl, but my mother she's a mule." We said "What's that? You better not tell your mother that, young man, or she'll paddle your pants."

They Call Him "Shine"

We were down to McAllen this morning and called on Shine Masin. Shine, you know, manages the Palace and Queen theatres. When we were there and called on him a few days ago he gave us several passes to his theatre and when we called this time he wanted to give us some more but we hadn't used what he gave us before. Now, can you beat that for a regular guy?

We can't see any doggone sense in their calling him Shine just because he happens to be baldheaded. We expect they will be calling us Shine pretty soon, and if they do we are going to hit 'em right on the nose.

Shine took us around to a place and introduced us to a tarpon fisher and he impressed us as being one fisherman who tells the truth and so we didn't give him any of our experiences fishing with H. J. Longaker at Glenwood or Andy Anderson at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, but boy, you ought to hear F. W. Zimmerman of the Palace theatre at San Marcos, Texas, tell about his catches in the Blue Wing Lake. Gee whiz.

Down at San Juan (pronounce it San Wan) is a fellow who operates the San Juan theatre, a fellow by the name of Hugo Ptath. We don't know how he pronounces it and we don't care whether you try to pronounce it at all or not, but if you do it must be at your own risk. But he is a mighty swell guy just the same. He invited us to bring our friends down to his theatre any time and he allows us to get his copy of the HERALD any time we want it, and if it wasn't for him we wouldn't know whether the HERALD is still being printed or not, since Ernie went up to Minneapolis to see Tillie Olson. They don't make many better theatre boys than these here in the Rio Grande valley.

Government Loans

As Andy Gump said to Min, "And then there's another thing." There is a fruit and vegetable stand on the lot next to where we live and a government agent furnished the operator with a list of the fruit farmers who had government loans on their orchards and the operator was told that if he bought any vegetables from any of the farmers who had government loans on their orchards, even five cents worth of radishes or carrots, he must not pay the farmer, but must hold the money and pay it to the agent when he called. Can you beat that in this "Land of the free and home of the brave?"

We read over the list of the farmers having government loans, which was furnished by the agent, and we counted up to 500 and didn't get much more than half way through the list when we stopped, and these were all in Hidalgo county, too. We don't know how many there are in the whole state, and yet this state didn't go very strong for Al Smith either.

Then again, we were told that a lady had some potted plants for sale and she advertised them in a local paper and that a government agent called on her and told her she would have to take out a government license. The next thing we know they will have to take out a license to sell a mule. Let's see, didn't someone once say that this is a government "Of the people, by the people and for the people?"

We saw a Mexican drink a bottle of goat's milk in a cafe the other day. We'll betcha that guy would eat spinach and play the saxophone.

We have just received a letter from P. B. Herbst of the Palacette theatre at Roanoke, Illinois, advising us that he was reopening the Palacette after it had been closed for four years. This indicates that business is picking up in Roanoke. We are glad to learn this. He also requested us to send him the HERALD, which we will be glad to do. He says that he was advised to write us for it by a Mr. Brodski, a film salesman for MGM. We have no personal acquaintance with Mr. Herbst or Mr. Brodski, but we wish to thank each of them for their kindness. Somehow these film boys are awfully good friends of ours.

The other day we went over to Matamorris. Matamorris is just across the Rio Grande river from Brownville. Did you ever go over to Matamorris? Well, you can do as you please about it but we don't intend to ever go over there again. When you get over there the Mexican kids will swarm around your car like a swarm of bees, all hollering "Give me nickly, nickly, nickly," and if you don't throw them some nickles they will climb right into your car. Matamorris is the best place to stay away from that we know of. If you can get out of there with any change you will be fortunate. And don't let the guide hold you up.

As soon as it warms up up north we are going back to where men are men and women will swear to it.

CHICAGO

Russ Swann, the magician who has delighted Chez Paree audiences, entertained the 40 who attended the open luncheon of Chicago Amusement Publicists Association at the Congress hotel last week. Future luncheons will also be open. Exhibitors, exchanges and others connected with the industry are invited.

The usual procedure is to pop in at association headquarters—B 10 and 12 at the Congress, at 12:30. From that point on, things will take care of themselves.

Magician Swann, among other things, pulled his famous trick of extracting a dollar bill, a five and a twenty from a lemon. His act almost foundered until Jack Miller produced the twenty spot. But Jack got his twenty back and drew a chuckle besides, when he said, "That's the first time I ever got any dough out of a lemon."

Ed Safier, formerly with United Artists, returned from a jaunt to Florida, Cuba and other warm climes.

Bending low over his books Sol Gollman, booker for Ben Judell, is striving valiantly to appear nonchalant while he nourishes and cultivates the hirsute on his upper lip. Or maybe you missed it altogether.

A gala and ultra party is planned for Friday evening at the Chicago theatre to commemorate the introduction of the "March of Times" films at the Balaban and Katz and Great States theatres. It is to be a swanky affair with the big wigs of social and business life of the city as guests.

Steve Montgomery and Frank Young of United Artists both found spots to spend away from the office in which to indulge in a vacation.

It is understood that Jake Gross has taken over the Imperial theatre.

With Ben Eisenberg holding down the fort on the Row, Ben Judell is reverting to his earlier experiences of hitting the road and at any given time may be anywhere in Indianapolis, St. Louis or Milwaukee.

The World Wide product, through an arrangement which makes William Weinshenker a member of the Judell organization, is now handled by the Judell staff.

Charles Walsh, for 17 years head shipper at the Fox exchange, passed away last week.

Abe Gumbiner has reopened the Banner theatre as an example of the trend in modern theatre remodeling. Some $35,000 was spent in rejuvenation under the direction of Mark Kalischer, architect, who did the Adelphi.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 258.—(A) By what simple, easily applied experiment may the projectionist prove that the best view of picture detail cannot be had at long viewing distance? (B) Does it not then follow that if good view of picture detail cannot be had at long viewing distance, it will be impossible for projectionist to maintain sharpness of focus unless he has the aid of a good opera glass? (C) Will an opera glass compensate perfectly where projection distance is such that it is impossible to judge sharpness of focus with the unaided eye? (D) Is it not plain common-sense to presume that if the projection distance is such that sharpness of focus cannot be judged with the naked eye and the management supplies no glass, the picture will not be kept in sharp focus?

Answer to Question No. 253

Bluebook School Question No. 253 was: (A) What relation has dimensions of screen image to the distance from the screen to front seats? (B) What effect has picture brilliancy to viewing distance?

The following made creditable answers: C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; J. Wentworth; R. J. Arntson; A. F. Sprafkee; T. Van Vaulkenburg; C. Oldham; H. Edwards; L. Cimikoski; Bill Doe; C. Mellinger and H. Pitchkey; D. Breaston and R. Haber; E. Hodson and S. Johnson. F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; B. R. and M. Walker; D. L. Sinklow; G. Wayne and D. Stellegos; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; S. L. Arenson; L. M. Goss and T. Danielson; P. H. Kay; C. Umphrey; T. Turk; B. R. Danielson; R. Davis, J. Frazier, and G. B. Lantree; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; J. R. Sanborne, D. L. Hubbard; H. Munier and T. L. Samuels; N. L. Boyd; M. and J. Devoy; F. H. and L. Klar; B. L. Jackson and N. K. Hendries; G. E. Osborn; J. Lansing and D. Oberleigh; N. L. Haynes and A. Richardson; T. N. Onby; R. H. Sullivan; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; D. T. Bennett and C. B. Murray; R. Crawford; B. L. Hutchinson; S. T. Daniels; T. R. Smith; P. and L. Felt; S. C. Hollenbeck; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; L. Grant and R. Geddings; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Savlor; T. Rosenblatt; E. Mantol and H. Hughes; R. C. Nathan and O. Holly; G. Harrison and F. Harlow; G. Thompson; P. L. Nathan; N. N. Boyd and L. Thomas; B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; R. and K. Wells; N. Goldberg; W. S. Tomlinson and D. Patterson; T. L. Irwin and B. McCoy; N. F. Sanderson, B. L. Barker and G. Cohan.

We will listen to L. Cimikoski on Section A. He says, "The dimensions of the picture are very important when considered with relation to distance from the front rows of seats. This is true for the reason that if the picture proportions be too large, those occupying the front seats will be subjected to heavy eye strain, besides having a highly unsatisfactory view of the picture. The value of these seats will therefore be reduced.

There are two excellent reasons why a picture of excessive size will cause discomfort to patrons in the front seats. First, the picture will not appear as in sharp focus, which in itself will be very uncomfortable to the eyes. Second, if a theatre patron be seated too close to a large screen image, the movement of the eyes necessary to follow moving objects on the screen will be sufficiently excessive to set up heavy eye strain.

"On the other hand, if the picture is too small to permit of its details being clearly seen from the rear seats, then also will eye strain be involved.'"

It is likely Brother Cimikoski won't recognize his answer. However, if he will examine it carefully he will find that in rewriting it I have said exactly the same thing he said, though in somewhat different form.

(B) Rau and Evans say, "The more brilliant the picture the better is the condition for those in the extreme back rows, especially if the auditorium is a deep one, notwithstanding the fact that picture dimensions may err on the small side. This latter fact will, however, add to the naturalness of its appearance to people of normal eyesight.

"But for those in the front seats, especially if they are too close to the screen, a brilliantly illuminated screen image may approach too closely to a 'glare,' especially in its white portions."

And now here is an answer to Section B that I'm going to ask you to criticize or comment upon. I'll not tell you who it is, hence there can be no embarrassment. Examine and consider it. Then tell me whether it is correct or is not correct. It seems to me this might be an interesting and excellent way to utilize some of the school space. What do you think about it? Here is the answer, word-for-word as received. Watch your step!

"Picture brilliancy does not fade as rapidly with viewing distance as any indirect lighted scene or object, the reason being the picture is originally projected with one beam of light from one source and the screen (depending upon type) tends more or less to confine reflection of picture within moderate bounds. With new modern type light sources some screens on cartoons and light outdoor scenes are too brilliant. The picture should present a clear, sharp, undistorted scene to view and be of such quality as to appear soft and restful. A too brilliant picture, even at great distances, puts a strain on the eyes, as does an underlighted one, and sends many theatregoers home with a headache.

"An analogy might be made that a theatre is somewhat like reflecting a flashlight beam of light with a mirror where greater distance does not rob the brilliance of the light beam with great rapidity."

And now I'm going to ask you another question: What would you think about laying off on the Bluebook School for a while and devoting this page to general projection matter? Let us hear what you think about that idea.

Argentina Would Tax Corporation Profits

The national government of Argentina is preparing plans to institute a surtax of five per cent on all dividends or other profits sent abroad by corporations operating in the country. # We feel simply COLOSSAL!

- Full of drama . . . full of action . . . full of romance and contentment . . .
- You see it's our birthday...our 15th Anniversary . . . and what a tale we have to tell!
- The drama lies in our small beginnings . . . and present place of trailer-supremacy . . .
- And the action comes from our Service Departments...Editorial...Camera...Art and Traffic...seat-selling trailers always on time...
- But oh...the romance in the perfect harmony between National Screen Service and more than 9000 Exhibitors who use National Screen Trailers . . .
- So, please excuse the adjectives . . . but we feel simply COLOSSAL!!! . . . and we'll do our best to make you feel the same by keeping one step ahead of the seat-selling parade with National Screen Trailers!

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Robert Armstrong, Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Wilson—We made money on this picture. Our crowd seems to crave the excitement of airplane pictures and we cannot get enough of them. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 7.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown, Sally Blane—60 minutes of thrilling action with a nervy ambulance driver, a doctor on the spot and a tough gang of racketeers. As good as any one would want for mid-week or Saturday showing. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 16-17.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Walter Connolly, Helen Vinson—Patrons enjoyed this picture of horse-racing. It has comedy, romance and action. Personally, I consider it a very good picture. Running time, 11 reels. Played January 18-19.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Good. Play it.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. C. General patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Played this with "The First World War" and it counter-balanced the war pictures very well. Patrons found it entertaining, with some swell comedy, especially by Brophy and Lightner. Played January 15.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

KING OF WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—This picture drew well, but was not as good as we expected; too much horse fighting.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

LET'S FALL IN LOVE: Ann Sothern, Edmund Lowe—Ann Sothern is a most attractive actress and put out a good performance on this picture. We were proud to show the picture and it drew well for a Sunday date.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

LINE-UP, THE: William Gargan, Marian Nixon, Noel Francis—A good mystery drama that suited our Saturday crowd.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MEN OF THE NIGHT: Bruce Cabot—Did not know that this picture was on the black list until after I had played it, but it gave universal satisfaction. Not one draggy moment in the whole picture and that is what my public likes. Very glad we played it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Victor Jory, Fay Wray—Here is a picture that offers only fair entertainment. It is a story of depression and trouble among workers and their employer in a large factory. There is very little romance and the only outstanding thing is the fine acting of Miss Robson. If you have not played this, then don't. We played on a late Saturday night show to very poor business. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell—We ran this on Bargain Night and one realizing the patrons we had on it would think that a picture of this type wouldn't take, but they ate it and praised the acting of Jean Arthur as the greatest since Helen Hayes won the Award. Played January 19.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small mining town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—We had more kicks on this picture than any we have run for months. Still, a few liked it, and had some say it was the best picture they had ever seen. Personally, I don't want this type picture for a small town theatre, but for people who care for classical music, it is fine. Played on January 7-8-9-10.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Daxie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—Wonderful production and enjoyed by seventy-five per cent of our patrons, the other twenty-five per cent, of course, being those that care for nothing but westerns and action pictures. Picture has had wonderful publicity and you will make no mistake in playing it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

SQUARE SHOOTER: Tim McCoy—Good western picture. Not as much action as usual, but everybody seemed to like it. McCoy is improving as a western star, and this one drew fine.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

First National

DR. MONICA: Kay Francis, Warren William, Jean Muir—This feature offers excellent adult entertainment and is deserving of preferred dates. It received splendid audience response and was appreciated by both the class and the mass patronage.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—This is even better than Clyde Pratt, the salesman, said it was and he said plenty. Good music, good acting, pretty scenes. Pleased 100 per cent.—J. A. Meredith, Garden Theatre, Sigourney, Iowa. General patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck, Lyle Talbot—A splendid picture by a star that never made a poor one. This star could make good entertainment out of a poor story.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Very well received. Patrons appeared to like it very much and our second night was considerably in excess of average. Believe Josephine Hutchinson will be a star some day. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 13-14.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—This is a very good picture that pleased every one who saw it—and in my town that is saying a great deal. It is a love story, with plenty of action, romance, comedy and good music. Dick Powell sings several popular song hits and this feature alone will please many. This offers great entertainment for the entire family. Played two days to very good business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played December 31, January 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck, Lyle Talbot—Just another one of those usually very good Barbara Stanwyck dramas. She is not a big drawing card in our town, but those who are Barbara Stanwyck fans never fail to see her pictures. Running time, 61 minutes. Played January 6-7.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck—Voted best picture on my screen for some time by women patrons. They simply ate it up, and the men, if they had any kicks, failed to register them. A good clean, wholesome picture with Barbara at her best as usual and Frank Morgan better than he ever was before. Ricardo Cortez wasn't given much to do but proved to be a fast worker what time he was on the screen. Played January 15-16.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown, Maxine Doyle—This is a very good picture of the comedy type and should please all who see it. It offers lively entertainment for the whole family with plenty of laughs, thrills and action. At the finish are scenes from the Six Day Bike Race that are amusing and thrilling, although a bit far-fetched. The trailer sold the show for us and we played one day to good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 10.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown, Maxine Doyle—Not as good as "Circus Clown," but it got the money and the laughs, too. So why worry. Played December 23-24.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown, Johnny Mack Brown—Here is a great comedy that brought folks in from all directions. And they brought their children, knowing there would have to be no embarrassing moments in any of the gags. Next to Will Rogers, Joe E. Brown is a great favorite around here. Running time, 73 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Fox

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—A fair picture of the college type. Not big but it's OK.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

BOTTOMS UP: Spencer Tracy, John Boles, "Pat" Paterson, Thelma Todd, Sid Silvers—This is a fine picture with music and plenty of comedy. "Pat" Paterson is beautiful and charming and sings very nicely. Sid Silvers is a scream in his funny, awkward, ridiculous way. Spencer Tracy and Herbert Mundin put out a striking performance.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—It's a waste of space to say that Shirley Temple's pictures are anything but A No. 1. If you haven't got 'em you're not giving them what they want. Don't grow up, Shirley. Running time, 83 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—There isn't enough space to note all favorable phrases and comment received. Shirley with Jimmy Dunn brings 'em in as only Will Rogers does. Shirley does her part in grand style and endears herself to everyone. Capacity crowds with many turned away. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 6-7-8.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—Here is Shirley's best picture. Should do a fine business at any time in the week.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—This is the best picture that Shirley Temple has ever made. Could be classed as almost perfect entertainment. We showed it in two theatres at the same time to take care of the crowds. This picture broke our all-time high record. Advertise it heavily. You will clean up. Thanks, Fox, for the early date on this. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 15-16-17-18.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—The star offers a good medium of advertising. This is a comedy and picture that is truly different. We did a good business on this one. And everyone was well pleased. It kept them laughing and guessing all the way through. Running time, 101 minutes. Played December 16-17.—Chas. Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—Believe this was liked better than any Chan picture we have played yet.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—One of the best of Rogers' pictures. Brought this back after fifteen months. Maybe it was the bad weather, or possibly everybody saw it on the first run, anyway, we had a small crowd.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—This is a very good picture that should please all who see it. It has a western atmosphere and combines romance, drama, action and comedy. This offers good entertainment for the whole family, being based on the book by Zane Grey. The beautiful scenery adds much to the entertainment. Played one day, Saturday, to good business and pleased all. Running time, 61 minutes. Played January 12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Very good out-door picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien, Irene Hervey—A dandy good picture that pleased, the kind of western that you can use on any day of the week and Miss Hervey please note. My patrons, especially the boys, wanted to know why they didn't have good looking girls like her in all the westerns. Played January 19.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ELINOR NORTON: Claire Trevor, Norman Foster—Mary Roberts Rinehart may have written it, but don't run it. It's not so bad, but if you can pay for it and book something better, you'll come out better in audience satisfaction, in the long run. As a picture, it's just a film. Played November 27-28.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

ELINOR NORTON: Claire Trevor, Norman Foster, Hugh Williams, Gilbert Boland—This picture is not up to the standard Fox has been setting for the new product. Still, the story was popular and with vaudeville we got by fine. No kicks.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

ELINOR NORTON: Claire Trevor, Norman Foster, Hugh Williams, Gilbert Roland—I advise small town exhibitors to lay off, in fact away off, of this one. No good for small towns. Too much love. They went out with that puzzled look on their faces, just wondering what it was all about. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 23-24.—Chas. Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: This picture will prove great entertainment for many, but there are also many who will not like it. It is one of the best pictures yet dealing with the World War. It has no story, but is a compilation of newsreel shots before and during the war, with Laurence Stallings as the commentator. Good entertainment of its type. Played one day to good business. Running time, 77 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: Double-featured this and glad I did. Good for men with its war scenes, but worthless for women and children. Background voice throughout entire picture. I found it interesting but my business could have gotten along well without it. Suggest a tieup with Legion boys, as it attracts the men. Played January 15.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: We kinda flunked out on this one. If you can tie up with the American Legion, you might do something on this one. They expected more than there was to the picture. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 28-29.—Charles Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Just a program picture. Cohan is not as good on the screen as he was on the stage, and as far as drawing power, none whatever. Got by with stage show in addition.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—An eventful series of episodes carry you along, entertaining and satisfying, until the last few minutes, at which time everything goes flooey. By that I mean a poor ending. Arlen and Evans, two stars that always produce, are completely wasted. Could have been great. OK for a Saturday, but don't play it as a big picture. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 13-14-15.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Here is a picture that offers only fair entertainment and did not go over well. It is different from the usual run of pictures, but has plenty of drama, romance, comedy and thrills. It is the story of a modern "gold strike" and is more of an adventure picture than a mystery thriller. Good entertainment for the family. Played one day to only fair business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 2.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—They've just got to throw away all those old stock airplane stunt and crash negative shots. I've had them so often now it looks like home talent. It's a good action romance, but the patrons recognize the thrill shots, and kid me about it.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—This is a good war story of the air. Warner Baxter as usual turns in a good performance.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow, Preston Foster, Richard Cromwell—A circus picture that drew well. Everyone has heard of Clara Bow and her name still means something, and they come out to see her even though they know she's quit the movies. Running time, 78 minutes—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—All I can say about this picture is that it is A-1. It's just about as good as "State Fair."—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Will Rogers' best picture to date. One reason is he is surrounded by the best cast he ever had and lots of credit goes to that veteran of stage and screen, Henry B. Walthall. This picture will get the business and will please. Played December 25-26.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE TIME: "Pat" Paterson, Nils Asther—A pleasant little program picture that received satisfactory audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LOVE TIME: Nils Asther, "Pat" Paterson—Women liked this (a majority of them). The men walked out on it. Kids in school, had none of them, so don't know what they would have done but rather think they would have joined the men. Played January 8-9.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian—A splendid picture that no one came to see. I think the producers could have found a better title. What is the use of making a good picture and then giving it a title that means absolutely nothing. Played January 9-10.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Ketti Gallian, Spencer Tracy—Another good picture. Well produced and well acted. A good evening's entertainment.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Kitti Gallian, Spencer Tracy—This picture gave general satisfaction. It's a little different in theme and this new girl didn't have to play French, as I judge she was "it" already. Played January 10-11.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts, Rochelle Hudson—This is a very good picture, but not as good as the usual Rogers picture. It is a typical Rogers show and he is the whole show. Zasu Pitts and the others in the splendid cast turn in a great performance, but due to the age of the picture, we played two days to about average business. The scenery in this adds much to the entertainment. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 7-8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: John Boles, Gloria Swanson—This just didn't go over at all. It's no comeback for Swanson. She can sing but our patrons thought she overacted throughout trying to be funny. It's not so bad but our patrons didn't like it and we ran it on a night our most intelligent bunch came. Running time, 81 minutes. Played December 23-24.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles—Just 81 minutes of hooey. Cannot understand why producers will attempt to bring back old stars in feature roles. The story of this picture was not even agreeable, being filled entirely too much with silliness. June Lang had a very nice part and filled it very well. Running time, 81 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—No good. An operetta set in the Alps or some foreign country. Wasn't interested enough to look it up. Just say foreign picture to the audience, then they yawn and politely say "No, Thanks!" Don't be misled by the star named in this one. The picture and the acting is absolutely ridiculous. There was no reason whatsoever for the picture or acting or anything about it. Running time, 81 minutes. Played January 13-14.—Chas. Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

MYSTERY WOMAN: Mona Barrie, Gilbert Roland—Lack of draw names hurt this one although the cast do well with the story which drags all through to last reel, when there is a little action. Those who like mystery stories will be pleased. Put this on double bill with "Blue Steel" (John Wayne always good) and did way above average business. Attribute big draw to the western. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 16-17.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter, Walter Connolly, Margaret Lindsay—Fox always sends us good pictures and they keep right on getting better. This fact, added to the fact that the distributors from Denver are usually courteous and helpful, makes these pictures a favorite with us. This picture is laid with an Irish setting, and how they loved it.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Dorothy Peterson, Jackie Searl—I have read some reports on this picture that were not very favorable, but I call it as good a production as anyone would want to use. The acting was good, the action was lively, and it is good enough for any theatre, anywhere, anytime.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

PURSUED: Rosemary Ames, Victor Jory, Russell Hardie—Don't play this sordid tale of a woman gone wrong falling for a man that has got off the straight and narrow. We got up in the projection room and hid after this was over with. And was ashamed to go to town till we had another good show. Why producers insist on making such stuff is more than we can see. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 2-3.—Chas Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—This is a honey! It really did the business here. Exploit this picture and you can't go wrong. In fact, we even had requests for a return showing. Janet and Lew make a good team. This is the answer to an exhibitor's prayer. Comedy. Romance. Drama. And a nice clean picture throughout. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 9-10.—Chas. Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE WAS A LADY: Helen Twelvetrees, Donald Woods, Ralph Morgan—This proved to be a very good program picture, but was a very poor draw. The story is very interesting.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatre, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley—We did a fine business on this one, and had a lot of compliments from the farmers and ranchers of the community. Running time, 70 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Good program picture. Plenty of comedy, and a good all around program picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—Nothing but praise for this one. Get behind it. There are tears and laughs but don't let the hospital background make you think it is sordid. It is a story of student nurses mostly off duty and that means something. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 25-26.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—Believe this is one of the best dramas that we have played in this town in many, many months. It drew exceptionally well and stood up fine the second night. Jane Darwell, who as "Sailor," stood out very prominently along with Loretta Young and John Boles, who had exceptionally fine parts and played them to perfection. The rest of the cast was especially well selected and the parts taken exceedingly well. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 30-31.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—Story of a young nurse's life the first few years in a hospital. Splendid acting with well balanced comedy and pathos puts this picture above the average. Both men and women liked it, although it is more for women. Played January 16-17.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—A good picture with locale in a hospital. Very heavy. Book strong shorts. Played December 20-21.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—The kind of picture that makes friends and patrons for the theatre. Clean, wholesome entertainment. Pleased 100 per cent, although the girls thought Loretta should have given up her profession as a nurse and gone with John Boles. However, they decided that this was exactly what she did after a year or so. Played January 13-14.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

GB Productions

CHU CHIN CHOW: Anna May Wong, George Robey—This picture is extremely difficult to report upon. It is one of the most extravagantly lavish films produced since the silent days when almost every real special was a roadshow production. It has awe-inspiring settings, a great deal of novelty, and splendid characterizations. It is the sort of film that will receive mixed reaction if presented "cold," but if ballyhooed as a roadshow production at increased admissions, not unlike some of the old Doug Fairbanks films, it will doubtless please. The British accent is hardly noticeable and is much less pronounced than in some of our American made films. The picture has but one real fault and that is slowness in a few spots, which results from several unnecessary over-long songs in operetta style. The film would be greatly speeded up if these scenes were cut down. There is a sprightly musical accompaniment that is highly effective in creating suspense and comedy effect. The story is utterly fantastic and is highly entertaining, if accepted as nothing more than a fable. An amusing example of the lavishness of this film is a pet monkey who wears a gold turban with large white plumes. At the preview the audience reaction for the most part was favorable.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Mascot

MARINES ARE COMING, THE: William Haines, Esther Ralston, Conrad Nagel, Armida—This is a good action and comedy picture. It was well liked and they came back to see it the second night. Haines' acting in this picture carries it along with a carefree swing that keeps the audience amused and entertained. If you advertise this one, you will see the results the second night. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 11-12.—Chas. Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines, Judith Allen—Very good with comedy, music, and fast action keeps it interesting all the way to a swell finish. Features Wampas stars of 1934, Ted Fio-Rito and orchestra, Shaw and Lee, Vince Barnett and Warren Hymer. Played on Friday and Saturday to average business in hard rain Friday and turn-away crowds on Saturday. Will please any audience. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 18-19.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

MGM

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Played to fair business and all liked it. Good for both children and adults. Played January 11.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Wonderful. Laurel and Hardy do some fine work and the story is good. Production, cast, story, sound, sets and in fact everything is all that one could ask or expect.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young, Betty Furness—Fairly good football picture. Nothing big but just fair.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—Not a small town picture by a long shot. Very poor draw, but we have to admit the acting was perfect. Shearer and March deserve better stories than this. Running time, 11 reels.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan, Madge Evans, Eddie Quillan, Jimmy Durante—Here is one of the finest pictures we have played. We heard some of the boys commenting that it was better than "Footlight Parade." This is a big picture with a good story, plenty of humor, lots of music and an appeal to children and the young folks as well as the older patronage. Running time, 85 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—These two make a wondeful pair of lovers. The picture went over fine. Sunday business was extra good and it held up fairly well for the other two days. Played January 13-15.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—By far the best that this team has ever made. Patrons surely praised this one. We showed "Chained" to the largest mid-week crowd we have ever had. You can't go wrong on this one. Played December 25.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Did best business of the week in a steady downpour of rain both days of run. It's an A-1 picture that draws and pleases. Comedy enough furnished by Stew Erwin and romance of the romantic kind by Joan and Clark. Book it and boost it and you'll be satisfied.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—An extra good baseball mystery picture. Something different. Pleased all with this and a vaudeville act. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans—This is a very good picture that will appeal mostly to men and young boys, because it is a baseball story. Most of the action takes place on the baseball field or in the players' quarters. This offers good entertainment with plenty of romance, comedy and mystery and should please the whole family. Played one day to very good business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ESKIMO: This picture drew well. It is full of great adventures of the North, but the story not so well outlined. Running time, 117 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Excellent picture to excellent business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Good picture, but not as good as "The Thin Man." This one lacks the light, piquant humor which made "The Thin Man" such a delightful piece of entertainment. This picture goes a little more dramatic, which, I think, is a mistake for this team. Did not do the business the picture deserved due to one of our annual blizzards. Played January 12.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Pretty good picture. Not a big special by any means, and don't get the idea that you have a "Thin Man." It's good entertainment, but not a special.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—Don't let the title influence you because this production is excellent in every respect. It is fast moving entertainment and will be long remembered. Many said it outshines "It Happened One Night." The misleading title kept many away. They expected Joan Crawford in another tearful role; it is anything but that. The humorous sentences do not follow each other so closely that the audience misses half of them while laughing at the preceding one. Several patrons commented on this. Thanks, Metro, and Director Van Dyke for a superlative picture, except for the title, which is "murder" for small towns. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 10-11.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Charles Butterworth—A superb picture. Enough said.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Lionel Barrymore—Who said Jean couldn't do something more than look good when given a chance? This picture got plenty of business and pleased the customers. Played December 30-31.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—This is a fairly good program picture and will please the majority of your patrons. It is a romantic drama with a bit of comedy in spots. It is the story of a crippled girl who finally finds happiness with the man of her choice. This is suitable for the entire family and will make an excellent one day showing. Played one day to fair business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 9.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Una Merkel, Stuart Erwin—A splendid program picture. The star fine and story good. Dunn, Merkel and Erwin a funny bunch. One of the best all around entertainments we have had in some time was the verdict of all that saw it last night. They mentioned it as they left the theatre.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theare, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—Used on Bargain Nights to very good business. Not a big picture, still it pleased.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HER SWEETHEART, CHRISTOPHER BEAN: Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack, Beulah Bondi—A wonderful picture that everyone came to see.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—This clever comedy-drama is one of the best pictures made during the past six months and will entertain any type of audience. It is wholesome down-to-earth entertainment that not only makes them come again, but also go out and tell their friends.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—This is just about the most pleasing picture we have ever run. Plenty of comedy, thrills, and everything to make it good entertainment. Drawing power fine. Played December 27-28.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette McDonald—Here is a big picture in every way. Everything one could ask for, a high-class show. It is everything MGM claims for it. We played it shortly after the holiday season but it did a good business and everyone is still raving about it.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Maurice Chevalier—A great picture. Wonderfully produced. Miss MacDonald did some wonderful singing. Maurice did some clowning and some very good acting. The picture gave good satisfaction to the few high-brows we got to see it but it did not draw. I claim too good for the small towns. Played January 13-14.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Hugh Williams—This is another Metro picture that offers only fair entertainment. It is a romantic drama of the sophisticated type. This is a woman's picture and strictly adult entertainment. The entire cast perform splendidly, but the story is weak and our patrons did not like it. Played one day to fair business. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 11.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Phillips Holmes, Charles Butterworth—Showed this picture with a home talent celebration for five newly wedded couples, and didn't know whether the picture or the celebration drew the crowd, but we did well. Running time, 88 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—A very good picture. One of the best starring Garbo. After reading several reviews of this, I thought it would be terrible, but it isn't. It is one of her best and she is the whole show. This is just the type of picture for her and she plays her part wonderfully. All of my patrons liked this and they came out and told me. Played two days to good business. Running time, 89 minutes. Played January 17-18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Max Baer, Myrna Loy, Jack Dempsey, Primo Carnera, Walter Huston—A most interesting drama that drew well. Plenty of action for the Saturday crowd, and plenty of star names to draw the more choicy patronage. Running time, 102 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore, Diana Wynyard—A re-release, that we were afraid of, but the folks came out to see it. It has an appeal to the more intelligent and better-read of our patrons.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley, May Robson, Gladys George—A swell picture that received many favorable comments. It has a gangster angle, but it is well handled, the story is good and the supporting cast handle their parts nicely. The romantic side appeals to the masses. Played January 16.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Charles Butterworth, Jimmie Durante—Business poor. Very few liked it. Just another picture. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 5.—K. A. Vaveris, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—What a picture. The kind that makes you want to stand in the door as they come out and listen to the favorable comments. Just a little too much drinking for some but aside from that it's marvelous. Played January 3-4.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—Repulsive characters lost sympathy for a woman who could love them. Many favorable comments, however, and poor business. Male lead wrongly directed and the Barrie touch lost. Lacking in broad comedy relief.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—Good program offering, fair business. Played January 2.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—Good.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

J. O. SMITH COMMENTS ON FAIR REPORTING

Writes J. O. Smith, of the Paramount, Ashland and Dixie theatres, at Ashland and Lineville, Alabama:

I am enclosing a number of reports on current pictures, and I have tried to give these reports the way your department is titled, just "what the picture did for me."

I notice that my former competitor, Mr. E. F. Ingram of Ashland, Ala., recommends fair and unprejudiced reports on all pictures. From his article, it seems to me that he is hitting at some particular exhibitors.

When an exhibitor in a small town can only get three film companies to stick with him, he surely ought to give their pictures fair reports. They deserve it.

I have been reporting on pictures from eight companies for several years and have tried to give fair reports, giving just the reaction that the picture had with my patrons, and I intend to continue doing this.

Of course it may be to some exhibitors' advantage to give good reports on certain companies' product just because they were the only ones that would sell him films. I am not in this position, so I have not been advertising the fact that I have been giving fair reports on films.

While I am writing, want to let you know that your department in the HERALD is more help to me than all other trade papers put together.

More power to you.—J. O. SMITH, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala.

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—This was one of the shows I booked through public demand and it did the biggest business in two months. Pleased everyone. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 4-5-6.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—This is a very good little picture that pleased all of my patrons. It is a comedy drama that is both lively and interesting. It is the story of a college track star who is very conceited, but he is finally cured. This offers good entertainment, especially for the younger patrons. Played on a late Saturday night show to good business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SUCCESSFUL FAILURE, A: William Collier, Sr., Lucille Gleason—This picture gave splendid satisfaction to our Saturday crowd. Played on a double bill with a western and the natives were more than satisfied.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Verna Hillie—A very good western of program type. Played December 22.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—A good enough picture but did no business. As a box-office attraction Sylvia Sidney means nothing here. Played it one day. Played January 18.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon, Gertrude Michael, Joseph Schildkraut—Another big DeMille spectacle, very good of its type, gigantic scenes as always in his pictures. Good story and Colbert is good in the role. But it is my opinion and mine only, that the picture (and I understand that he has the Crusaders in productions that are historical and way back in early history) should have a short prologue to refresh the public's minds. Not many know these facts of history, that is, not the audiences that we cater to, and I think that it would be a great help to understanding the picture as it unfolded. It has been done and I think that these pictures of early history need the old prologue to help them.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—A fast-moving picture with lots of action and comedy. Joe Penner is a riot. Had the few people that came well pleased. Would have had a good house but the weather was very bad, so did no business. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 11-12-13.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—A swell picture and a big draw. Everybody pleased. The radio fans sure turned out to this one. Played January 9-10.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

HERE COMES THE GROOM: Jack Haley—A clever comedy that will please those looking for something to laugh at. Played January 12.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle—Plenty of comedy in this and Bing doesn't hog the show with his crooning. That's why the men liked it. However, everybody liked it, so that's that. It's all you tell them it is. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 1-2.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—A good western. Played January 16-17.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Randolph Scott—This is one of the best high type westerns with good cast, good story by Zane Grey. Interesting and will please. First time ever to play western on Sunday, Monday Tuesday. Turned people away Sunday matinee in downpour of rain and to capacity Sunday night in rain, sleet and snow. Put on Sunday as experiment and was big success. Would have broken record in good weather. Running time, 56 minutes. Played January 20-22.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—Paramount has them all beat in prolucing Westerns, and they beat their best record in this. The most pleasing Western of the season. Drew and pleased better than their "Last Round-up." We showed it on Monday and Tuesday instead of Saturday, the usual day for Westerns.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—A comedy that will go over big with your patrons. We did a fair business on it and would have done better, but the weather was against us. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 1-2.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—Not much of a story, but a lot of swell comedy that goes over with a bang. The cash customers thought it was great. Average business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 9.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker, Anna May Wong, Kent Taylor—This is a good picture with a no-good title. Limehouse, as I know, is the slums of London on the waterfront, but that the public does not know, and the picture would have had a lot better chance for box office pull if it had a different title. And from my experience with this picture, they don't give a damn where Limehouse is. And, so help me, they all had the English cockney accent, even Jean Parker. Of course, they were in character, I will grant that, but it did not help the picture, as I said above.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen—This is so darn silly it actually gets funny in places. I advertised it as nuttiest show that I had ever run and my patrons (those that came) agreed with me. Played January 1-2.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—The best small town picture we have played in a long time. The acting by Pauline Lord is surely a finished piece of work. If you have a family trade, fellow exhibitors, by all means play this one. Played January 19-20.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord—This is a typical small town production and should do exceedingly well in all small towns. The cast is exceptionally fine, especially Pauline Lord and her brood of children. Held up well for two days, including matinee. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 11-12.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Arthur Byron, Janet Beecher—This is heavy stuff and story very difficult to follow with too much left to surmise. Not much draw to it for small community. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 20-21.—Hobert H. Ramsdell, Lyric Theatre, Gaithersburg, Md. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Charles Ruggles—It's light entertainment with costume angle against it but with "bundling" angle to help it. Feature Charlie Ruggles and "bundling." We small towners have to be careful advertising "bundling" but with Ruggles and Boland tied to the gag—it can't be wrong! Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 16-17.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Good show that should please 90 per cent.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer—A very nice picture of the early days showing a lot of the quaint customs from which some of our foolish laws came from. Lederer's naturalness and his contagious laughter make you feel as though you were living the scenes right with him. An excellent production. I must mention that Charlie Ruggles as usual is grand.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Terrible title for Arlen. They expect him in a more virile role. You'll have tough selling, and little audience satisfaction, but it isn't a bad picture at all. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 15.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—I can't remember when I've had so much favorable comment about a star, as I had on Ida Lupino. No one said much about the picture and I made a big mistake by playing it on Friday-Saturday, but Ida surely made a big hit here.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin, Verna Hillie—I wish we could get hold of more pictures as good as this one. We have had Stuart Erwin a dozen times since, but never since have had one where he carries things along so well with that inimitable humorous touch. Good support. Running time, 63 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, N. D. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Excellent western play of the days of 1844. Showed the hold-ups those sturdy pioneers overcame. Anyone who likes this kind of show will say that it is one of the best. Running time, 57 minutes. Played December 29-30.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General Patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—This is a Paramount for which I have only praise. It pleased everybody and brought us a crowd. We occasionally try a first-class western on Sunday and Monday instead of Friday and Saturday and it gets patrons we do not get any other time and the regulars besides. It is worth trying in any small community. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 13-14.—Hobert H. Ramsdell, Lyric Theatre, Gaithersburg, Md. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Business good. Zane Grey stories make a hit in this town. Patrons did not like it as well a "The Last Round-Up." Running time, 59 minutes. Played December 28-29.—K. A. Vaveris, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack—An average program picture, nothing more, except the wonderful acting of the kid, David Holt. Played December 18-19.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU'RE TELLING ME: W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, Larry ("Buster") Crabbe—This is a clever comedy. Fields kept them laughing all the time. Played December 20-21.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allan, Ralph Bellamy, Bill Cagney—This went over big here, everybody went out with that contented smile on their face. This is a very good story and picture. Plenty of action and thrills. Don't fail to play this one, although it is a little late. It will do the business, anyway. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 7-8.—Chas. Summers, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

AGE OF INNOCENCE: Irene Dunn, John Boles—A mighty fine picture well acted, but these two are singers and every one expects to hear them sing and when they don't sing they are disappointed. All were satisfied with the show, but did not draw at the box.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A wonderful entertaining picture. Clean, stars great and a very fine cast. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction. Did not draw as it should, but none of them do, but pleased them all. Anne Shirley is certainly great in this picture. Played January 6-7-8.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin, Pert Kelton, Rochelle Hudson, Skeets Gallagher—Fair production—not a big picture, but a good all-around show for a small town. Played January 5.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

CONQUERORS, THE: Ann Harding, Richard Dix—This picture is old, but the age makes no difference, and the print was in good condition. A wonderful picture admired by every one, and one that I will not soon forget.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

FLYING DEVILS: Arline Judge, Bruce Cabot, Eric Linden, Ralph Bellamy, Cliff Edwards—Lots of thrills in this one, and it drew well and pleased all. Running time, 62 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

FOUNTAIN, THE: Ann Harding, Brian Aherne—A very fine picture. Everything about it great but no drawing power. Too slow. These people out in the sticks crave action and comedy and all the slow pictures don't make any difference how big and good they are. Failed to draw film rental. Pleased all we got in to see it.—Played January 3-4.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Very long, but entertaining. The audience won't notice the time, and you won't need so many shorts, for you have a big show in the feature. If they don't like this, open a garage, because it's hopeless. Here's hoping for more Rogers and Astaire, and that RKO don't flop their growing popularity with a quickie. Running time, 107 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—Very good. This is the kind of film that goes over in a small town as well as larger situations. Did very good business on this. Played January 5.—B. Hollenbeck Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—This is a great picture of the musical type and will please all patrons. It is a romantic comedy with plenty of music and dancing. The outstanding shot of the entire picture is the "Continental" and that offers excellent entertainment for all. Fred Astaire is certainly a great dancer and Ginger Rogers does well with her part. Played two days to only fair business. Played January 14-15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—Astaire and Ginger Rogers are well liked in my town. A fast-moving musical that pleased every one that was willing to buck a bad snow storm. Business was much better than we expected. Played January 1-2-3.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Biggest disappointment at box office of any picture this season. Maybe was expecting too much. No fault, however, of the picture as it's plenty good. You could leave off the musical numbers altogether and you would have left a darn good comedy drama. The only unfavorable comment I had was that the dance scene of the Continental was a little too long drawn out. Nevertheless it's a wonderful show and the producers of same deserve all the praise that has been accorded them for making it. Played January 6-7.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton, Betty Grable—Business fair. Liked by all that saw it. Astaire and Rogers make a good team. We should have more of their pictures. Played January 2-3-4.—K. A. Vaveris, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—Business good. Played it the day before Christmas. Football comedy drama that was liked by all. Quillan again proves his ability as he has in the past. Cannot understand why we do not get more of Quillan's pictures. They're O. K. Here's hoping that we will have more than one picture of Quillan this year, so I can put out the S. R. O. sign more often. Running time, 64 minutes. Played December 24.—K. A. Vaveris, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

HIPS, HIPS, HOORAY: Wheeler and Woolsey—Here is the kind of picture our people come in for, every child and all the young folks enjoyed it, and some of the older ones. Drew very well indeed.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—A clean comeback for these boys and justified. If they can get the ladies to coming to see them again, they'll get the preferred dates again, as they used to be a big draw here till the dirt started. Running time, 72 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Absolutely the best picture this pair have made in years. "Spanky" McFarland and all the rest of the cast were splendid. If we wanted to be critical we could point out several mistakes the director made concerning Kentucky, but what's the use? The picture is one grand lot of fun and that is what counts in a Wheeler-Woolsey picture. Business was good but not the big rush we expected. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 6-8.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a surprise picture, a clean picture that did bring results. My public likes clean comedy and no kicks from the church-goers. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 8-9.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Pert Kelton—This is only fair entertainment of the comedy type and did not please my patrons. This is a typical RKO picture with all-talking and no action. There are practically no star names in the cast and therefore no business. Played on a late Saturday night show to poor business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAN OF TWO WORLDS: Francis Lederer, Elissa Landi—This picture compares very favorably with a somewhat similar picture of the North, "Eskimo," and drew well on a hot summer day. The winter scenes were very attractive and struggles of the North perfectly thrilling.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, Pert Kelton, El Brendel—A good little picture of the light comedy type.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charlie Ruggles, Phil Harris, Greta Nissen, Helen Mack—We put in this picture in place of a new one we were not so sure of, on the strength of remarks in this column. We did not think it deserved quite all the high praise given it, although it was a nice little musical. Phil Harris is not possessed of the life and magnetism of a Bing Crosby or Dick Powell. Running time, 76 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—This was a good western, but it failed to take with our patrons. Played January 8-9.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Reginald Denny—Story of a rich girl who wanted to be sure that the fellow she loved loved her just as much, how she tested him and finally marrying him. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 5-6.—William Day, Jr., Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Miriam Hopkins is a favorite in Hay Springs and this picture did not hurt her reputation in the least. Was generally very well liked. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—A nice picture. Plenty of comedy mixed with the romance, and this girl Miriam Hopkins always pleases my patrons. Played December 27-28.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—Good action novelty picture to good business.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—OK speed and action thriller, but the tieups will make it look like an advertising film if you are not careful. Extra good for week-ends. Running time, 72 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—A little slow for first two reels, but after that it's a wow. Good for Saturday. Fans who like action will certainly like this one. It is the story of a young engineer who attempts and finally succeeds in convincing an old time railroad man that his new type streamline Diesel engined train can put it all over the steam trains. The run from Chicago to Boulder Dam at 120 miles an hour is a thriller. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 18-19.—Hobart H. Ramsdell, Lyric Theatre, Gaithersburg, Md. Small town patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Edward Arnold, Karen Morley, Frankie Thomas—A picture without any drawing power and one that is hard to put over, yet it is one of the best pictures I've played this winter. It presents the problem of divorce, from the child's angle and will give a person something to think about without being the least preachy. It was liked here.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN: Marian Nixon, Joan Marsh, Gloria Shea, Edna May Oliver, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, Buster Crabbe—One lady asked me why they made pictures like this. A big disappointment.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WOMAN IN THE DARK: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Believe this feature was generally very well liked although we as exhibitors believe it to be rather weak, which was possibly on account of the fact that we have been playing exceptionally fine programs. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 9.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Constance Bennett, Frederic March, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray—Here is a cast worthy a great story, a cast if given an opportunity would have made box office history, but as it now stands a picture unworthy the cast. It has but little entertainment for the classes and absolutely no value for the masses. Any exhibitor has a right to expect entertainment when he buys this picture. Your patrons have a right to expect an evening of pleasure when they see an ad in the paper offering a great cast of this kind, but both exhibitor and patrons are badly disappointed at this attempt at comedy. Since seeing this picture myself, I wondered if it's possible that I may be wrong, as I asked my patrons both high brows and low brows and ninety per cent said "very poor entertainment." Then I looked up the reports on "What the Picture Did For Me" in the Herald, and I find eight different reports from different parts of the country, and all say poor picture. There is only one thing the matter with the picture, it's no good, and eight out of eight exhibitors say so. Of course, people will go to see it because it has a great cast. Don't excuse this by saying it's not a small town picture. It's not a big town picture either. People are not different in the city than the country when it comes to entertainment of this kind. The picture in spite of its great sets and cast shows lack of intelligence.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—The critics have at last praised a picture that lives up to their promises. This production is worthy of any amount of praise. It combines superb acting by Robert Donat, and marvelous direction by Rowland Lee along with perfect production elements. It is full of adventure, action, romance and stirring drama. Donat is a sensation. Running time, 115 minutes. Played November 22-23.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va.. College and small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Here is one of the greatest pictures produced this year. It is in every respect a wonderful picture. I notice it's classed with the ten best, and it deserves it. Here is a picture sold in the top class that is worth every dime they ask for it, not that I made money on it, because I didn't, the price was too high to make money, but my patrons had the pleasure of seeing and hearing one of the greatest pictures produced this year. We can afford to lose money on a picture like this and still be glad we ran it. Buy it and boost it to the sky.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman, Elissa Landi—This picture offers very poor entertainment and did not please my patrons. It is an English story and entirely too slow moving and too much talking. This is an old picture and if you did not play it, you acted wisely, for the story and cast have no drawing power at the box offce. Played one day to very poor business and did not please. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 3.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery—Just fair. Without Beery it would be poor entertainment. Balance of cast handle parts and are well cast. Even with good cast this picture did not draw above the average business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played January 13-15.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery—Wallace Beery gives another excellent portrayal. Business not above average. Will be more successful in larger towns. Entertaining. Running time, 88 minutes. Played January 7-8.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson—Personally, I enjoyed this picture very much, but it was not liked by those who saw it. I expected very good business but was greatly disappointed. A much overrated picture. People expected a circus picture, but there were only a few such scenes in the beginning of the picture. Played January 15-16.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

NANA: Anna Sten, Lionel Atwill, Richard Bennett, Mae Clarke, Phillips Holmes—This is very poor entertainment and did not please our cash customers. The acting is wonderful, but the story is terrible. I thought United Artists would have gotten a great story for Anna Sten's first starring picture, but they didn't. This certainly would not help her. Played one day to poor business. Running time, 91 minutes. Played January 16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Tom Keene, Karen Morley—We had the poorest Friday night business in months and I couldn't see that the picture was as good as the reviews stated, so I went home feeling pretty blue. However, Saturday business picked up to point where I was satisfied and folks seemed to like it, so I should worry. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 4-5.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Universal

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Ruth Etting, Phil Baker, Alexander Woollcott, Ethel Waters, Helen Vinson, Paul Lukas, Binnie Barnes, Bela Lugosi, Graham McNamee, Chester Morris—All kinds of stars—thirty of them, Universal says. Enough action, comedy and acting to keep everybody interested. Better than the average show, but nothing big. Played January 12.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Jane Wyatt, Phillips Holmes—Wonderful picture. My patrons were divided on the entertainment value, but all agreed it was a great picture. The English dialect was not liked and is never liked here, but remember here is a great show.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GUN JUSTICE: Ken Maynard—Good western—slightly better than the average. Seemed to please and held the interest of our patrons. Played December 29.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

HUMAN SIDE, THE: Adolphe Menjou, Doris Kenyon—This is a mighty fine program picture. Story great and well acted. Has no drawing power as the title means nothing, but will please any audience.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Phillips Holmes, Edward Arnold—Edward Arnold as a reformed racketeer plays sympathy role in a rather disappointing picture. Just another program film a slight bit better than average. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 9-10.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—Just a dandy little picture. This girl Binnie Barnes has a wonderful voice, and sings a couple of numbers that are exceptionally good. This is not a big picture, but is a good picture and that's all we want.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones, Shelia Terry—The usual western but looks like money was spent on it and it had plenty of comedy which made it A-1 with the Saturday night western fans. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 29.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Elizabeth Young—A very entertaining program picture. Story fine and very well acted. Gave good satisfaction to the few we got in to see it. Deserved better business but we did not get it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WAKE UP AND DREAM: Russ Columbo, Roger Pryor, June Knight—Only a fair program picture. Not for Sunday.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—A good western. Buck is somewhat dressed up in part of the picture and looks and acts very well. This is right up to the standard of what a western should be, and all one could expect. Keep coming Buck.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—A very good western. This star has got the "whoopee" fans all for him since we played his serial "Red Riders." I call it the best serial we ever played and all the patrons say so too.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage. ■

Warner Bros.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—One of the most interesting mystery stories that has been brought to the screen. Where they like mystery, this will more than please. Played December 29.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DESIRABLE: Jean Muir, George Brent—Good program picture.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

HEADLESS HORSEMAN, THE: Comicolor Cartoons—Have run about seven of the Comicolors. Some are extra good, but all are satisfactory, well liked and the only fault with any is in the coloring in some sequences. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

Columbia

HAPPY BUTTERFLY, THE—A dandy cartoon. Would have been wonderful in colors. Nothing better for a Saturday matinee.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

IN THE ARCTICS: Laughing With Medbury Series—A fairly interesting novelty with some wise-cracks by the narrator. Good enough, but not outstanding.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

IN THE DOG HOUSE: Andy Clyde—Another good Columbia comedy. They have sure improved with the new product. We have not received a bad one yet. This one has plenty of laughs.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatre, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

KRAZY KAT'S WATERLOO—Burlesque on Napoleon's Waterloo and very amusing. Be sure and use it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LIFE'S LAST LAUGHS: This offers good entertainment of a different type from the usual short. It presents some very amusing and unusual epitaphs from some of the country's graveyards.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHIVERS: Harry Langdon—A good comedy. Plenty of laughs. Our Saturday fans sure like Langdon.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE: Krazy Kat Kartoon—A cartoon depicting the southern negro and his antics with a musical background that is catchy. Good enough for any spot. Running time, 1 reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small mining town patronage.

TRAPEZE ARTIST: Krazy Kat Kartoon—A fair cartoon set to story and song of "The Man On The Flying Trapeze." Worth running on any program.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

Educational

CANYON OF ROMANCE: Romantic Journeys—This was in beautiful color and recording good, also print in good condition. Patrons remarked about the fine scenes in the picture. Running time, 10 minutes. —Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

GAY OLD DAYS: Song Hit Stories—Fair. Not good, not bad. Makes a good filler on program. All singing. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regan Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

GOOD LUCK—BEST WISHES: Pickens Sisters—Very mediocre musical comedy with the Pickens Sisters furnishing the vocal. They are great but needed songs to put them over. Skip it if your program calls for belly-laughs.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

GOOD LUCK—BEST WISHES: Pickens Sisters—At last Educational has made a good musical comedy that pleased all. The Pickens Sisters sing several popular songs and the story offers good entertainment. Let's have more of these. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GYPSY FIDDLER, A: Terry-Toon—A cartoon about average. Some liked it and some did not care much for it. Recording good, print not so good. Running time, 6 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

HARLEM HARMONY: Treasure Chest—Very good singing by colored boys and girls choir singing spirituals and then turning to popular tunes and some neat dancing with colored band. Should please. Running time, 10 minutes.—W. A. Collins, New Regan Theatre, Elvins, Mo. General patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Buster West—Good comedy and Buster West's dancing is a knockout. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

JAIL BIRDS: Terry-Toon Series—This is a fairly good cartoon comedy and will please all who like cartoons. It seems this series is gradually improving and the entertaining qualities are better. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LITTLE BOY BLUE: Terry-Toon—Fine short good for children and liked by adults, too. It was a take-off on the modern industry and it sure got the laughs from the audience. Running time, 6½ minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

PALOOKA FROM PADUCAH: Buster Keaton—This comedy contains more laughs than any comedy ever run. Keep you laughing from start to finish. RURAL ROMEOS: Harry Gribbon—This is silly, stupid and vulgar. If Harry Gribbon has made a good comedy in the last two years it has not been my good luck to run it. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RURAL ROMEOS: Gribbon Comedy—A not-so-hot Gribbon comedy, but I guess it will do. I have a Gribbon comedy from 1912 or earlier named "The Rip-and-Stitch Tailor" and it's twice as funny, although a silent. Running time, 2 reels.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylersville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SUMMERS, IT'S BETTER LATE THAN NEVER

YOUR STARS FOR 1935: Treasure Chest—Horoscope stuff by Wynn, with a finish boosting Roosevelt. This is a real novelty, forecasting 1935 and, of course, the sooner you run it, the better. Running time, 11 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

Fox

FOX NEWS: Believe this to be one of the best newsreels on the market. The special arrangement dividing the various features into the particular departments has made quite a hit with our patrons.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MOVIE DAZE: All-Star Comedies Series—If Metro would put these stars to work slinging hash they would both be better off. Let's have better shorts or stop producing them. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

MRS. BARNACLE BILL: All-Star Comedies Series—This is one of the best numbers of this series we have played. It is of the slapstick variety and has plenty of laughs. Metro should secure better story material for their shorts. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SCOTLAND AND BONNIE: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—This is a very interesting and entertaining one reeler showing many beautiful scenes in Scotland. These one reelers offer great entertainment and are very educational. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STRATOS-FEAR: Willie Whopper—Only a fair cartoon.—J. O. Smith, Paramount, Ashland and Dixie Theatres, Ashland and Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THEM THAR HILLS: Laurel and Hardy—This was a disappointment. Although it is better than the average comedy, it is not as good as we expect from this pair. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WASH-EE IRON-EE: Our Gang—As usual, Our Gang clicks with another good comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small mining town patronage.

THEATRE ACCOUNTING

a method book that is also an account ledger

It performs two services: (1) It is a complete text on the proper way to keep your theatre accounts of expenses and receipts and (2) it contains enough pages for a full year's bookkeeping. Because it is so practical, time-saving and accurately simple, thousands of exhibitors have already exchanged their old, cumbersome and expensive methods for this easy, self-operating system. Its use is becoming more widespread each day.

Exhibitors who are already using this system are reminded to order their 1935 book at the earliest moment so as to permit no break in the daily continuity of your accounts-keeping.

Those exhibitors who have not yet changed over to this new method should do so at once—to guard against losses, avoid income tax troubles, guarantee your profits—and to do it effortlessly, a few minutes a day.

KEEPING TIME: Grantland Rice Sportlight—A wonderful sport reel. You could hear a pin drop the audience was so interested in this one and when they are quiet you know they like it.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House Theatre, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LADIES THAT PLAY: Phil Spitalny and His Musical Ladies—Put this on your class nights, as it has just that, and is good. Girl orchestra that also does specialties, without going ha-cha. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR: Mary Small—This is a very good Screen Song starring Mary Small singing the popular selection of the same name. The cartoon and music are both good and this is great entertainment. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FERRY GO ROUND: Gene Austin—Unusually good musical comedy. Several people wanted to know when we would have Gene Austin again. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK: Toddle Tale Cartoon—Very poor entertainment, but about the average from RKO. This producer cannot make cartoons and they should discontinue making such trash as this and putting it off on the poor exhibitors. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK: Toddle Tale Cartoons—This is something new in cartoons and it pleased the adults as well as the children. Running time, 9 minutes.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

IN A PIG'S EYE: Clark and McCullough—Will someone please devise a way whereby producers can start making some good two-reel comedies? Nothing in the picture show business is as poorly made as the majority of present day two-reel comedies. Running time, 21 minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Universal

CHRIS COLUMBO, JR.: Oswald Cartoon—Another clever cartoon of Chris proving the world is round. Running time, 8 minutes.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town patronage.

HENRY'S SOCIAL SPLASH: Henry Armetta—It's silly, but Henry Armetta is a favorite with everybody. His appearance in features or comedy shorts gets the laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

KNICKERBOCKER KNIGHTS: Mentone—Can't get enough of this vaudeville film stuff. No story, just a master of ceremonies and big time acts, but do they like it? Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

PEST, THE: Mentone—I was ashamed of showing this, but couldn't help myself. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Samll town patronage.

Better than any comedy you can get, and brings to small towns the big time acts, even if it's on film. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Cal. General patronage.

Vitaphone

CAMERA SPEAKS: Pepper Pot—A very interesting short of shots of the old timers like Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Gloria Swanson. To us old timers it was very interesting. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theare, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLES AHEARN: Pepper Pot Series—Very entertaining. Everyone thoroughly enjoyed this reel of first class vaudeville. Deserves extra billing. Running time, one reel.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

FLAME SONG, THE: Bernice Claire, J. Harold Murray—This is very poor entertainment of the musical type. It is more of a light operetta with all of the old time costumes. Why give the public costumes pictures, when they continually show that they do not want them? Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

GEM OF THE OCEAN: Jeanne Aubert—Weakest Broadway Brevity so far from Warner Bros. Will not please. Running time, 2 reels.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

JERUSALEM, THE HOLY CITY: Musical World Journeys, E. M. Newman—A very interesting short. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LOOK FOR THE SILVER LINING: Dorothy Stone—This is only fair entertainment of the musical comedy type. This is another of the three-reel specials and so far none of them have come up to the two-reelers. They are just two-reel material stretched out another reel and they become boresome. Running time, 28 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHOW KIDS: Broadway Brevities—One of the best two-reel Brevities that Warner has produced. The kids, a hundred of them, are too cute for words and being all in color adds charm to the beauty, certainly would be a wonderful short to have sometime to use wth a weak feature for no matter how weak you could close the show with this and they'd forget to squawk. —Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

THOSE BEAUTIFUL DAMES: Merrie Melodies Series—These colored Melody cartoons are generally very good. Running time, seven minutes.—Horn & Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THOSE BEAUTIFUL DAMES: Merrie Melodies—Warner charged extra for this account of color which made color come high as that was all there was to it. Running time, one reel.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Miscellaneous

SHORTS: We tried a novel program and played seven shorts dealing with Biology for a club at the local Junior College. It was a great success. The pictures were "Spotted Wings," "Nature's Gangsters," "Desert Demons," "City of Wax," "Born to Die," "Woodland Pals," "The Sea." We charged students 10c and adults 20c and it was a great stunt. The films were in perfect condition and some of the prints were brand new and the recording was perfect, the best that we have had for a long time. Hope some of you will try it sometimes and let me know how it comes out.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

AWARD WINNER PROMOTED

And now Ed M. Hart, holder of the Award for August, joins the select group of Quigley winners who have been promoted because of their success in the Competitions. As announced by Leo G. Justin, of Walter Reade Theatres, Hart now becomes the new district manager for the northern New Jersey houses of that circuit, Mr. Justin stating that Ed's Award distinction had a definite bearing on his selection for this important post. Thus the number of promotions mounts to the satisfying total of six, and the Quigley project only a year old.

In an address at the Grand Awards luncheon, your chairman had occasion to point out to the Honorable Judges that the expanding list of promotions definitely establishes the Quigley Awards as a source of manpower for executives seeking the right man from among their managers to hold down bigger jobs. The recent action of the Reade executives further confirms this observation.

YES, THAT'S SHOWMANSHIP

Having stressed quick-thinking repeatedly in these columns as part of the stock in trade of your able theatreman, that term may well be applied to the ingenuity of the well-known C. L. "Bill" Yearsley, Warner representative in Parkersburg, West Virginia, in reference to his recent action detailed on a following page.

The story treats of Charlie Einfeld's circular letter requesting opinions on the possibilities of Warner junior stars and how Bill turned the query into a profitable exploitation stunt on a date that was not expected to do much more than a respectable gross.

Yearsley's ability to think fast at the right time and to translate the thought into box office terms is therefore offered as yet another answer to that oft repeated question—"What's showmanship?"

SNOW STUFF

During the recent heavy snowfall, Round Tabler Tom Olsen came visiting to report on the excitement aroused in Times Square by a horse-drawn sleigh bally plugging one of the stage musicals. Which led us to wonder why picture publicity men in the big cities do not take advantage of these opportunities when Nature seems so willing to cooperate. Snow exploitation in the smaller spots is usual and profitable. There is no reason why it should not be, even on sophisticated(?) Broadway.

HOW ABOUT THE MANAGER?

As stated in a news story in this issue, the Code Authority has sent questionnaires to all impartial members of the various local boards in the field for suggestions and recommendations for code changes. The questionnaire embraces eight questions of which our immediate interest is centered upon Number Four, reading as follows:

> "Can you enumerate any unfair practices or provisions which should be added to the code?"

We can. Provision should be made for the restriction of manager's hours, daily and weekly, to a fair and less than man-killing number. Further provision must also be made for a day off out of each seven for every manager!

Whether or not he wants to, no theatreman can give his all 12 to 14 hours a day, seven days a week, unless he is allowed sufficient rest and relaxation away from his exacting duties. The Code Authority may send questionnaires from now to the end of time, if not to the end of the code, but until the manager's welfare is considered—until the manager is given a fair "shake," the questionnaires in our opinion mean nothing more than a lot of words written on a lot of paper.

Why? Because clearance, zoning, trade practice grievances and everything else the local boards treat with have, in the final analysis, to do with the theatre—the field of exhibition. What the picture does at the box office is the only answer, and that is predicated to an appreciable extent upon the ability of the manager to put over his attractions.

The industry might as well face the fact that the protection of the manager from those who exploit him, is an economic necessity.

MOTION SELLS MOTION

Recent experimenting with animation in display by meat packers Wilson & Company has been very successful, according to Advertising Age, which states that this device is favored by the meat men because the motion attracts attention and enables the presentation to be dramatized.

We should like to see plans worked out by the home office advertising departments so that managers could do more with this proven form of display. Motion sells motion.

Hewitt's "Gables" Lobby Has All the Accessories

Joe Hewitt says many of the folks were attacked by old fashioned homesickness after viewing the complete lobby display at the Lincoln, Robinson, Ill., illustrated in the accompanying photo on "Green Gables." Of course the flash was good for a lot of laughs what with all the conventional back yard accessories, such as the Chic Saler, and little dog in action.

Rain spout was made of soda straws painted green and running into tiny rain barrels. Ground was covered with snow and sand walk ran from front gate to porch, with Anne Shirley herself on the porch. Windows were made of cellophane with holly wreaths on inside and green floodlight provided the moonlight in the darkened foyer. Hewitt supplied the billing with one of Metro's new miniature 24's and his own painting.

Hewitt's Novel Lobby Display

Another typical Hewitt is an ad enclosed on Shirley Temple. Seems that two cars crashed in front of the theatre, damaging the lobby, and Joe immediately jumped into print with following copy:

"We can't blame people for crashing in our theatre to see Shirley Temple in 'Bright Eyes,' but Shirley won't be here until tomorrow." And the P. S. said—"Please park your car across the street in the City Parking Lot."

Leading Stores Feature India Stuff on "Clive"

The atmospheric background of "Clive of India" was highlighted in the exploitation for the opening at the New York Rivoli with a number of presentations of various kinds of leading Broadway and Fifth Avenue establishments. India rugs and jewelry were featured in windows and ads, and the local offices of the India State Railways displayed enlargements of scenic shots from the picture.

Cooperation was obtained from the Public Library on a special collection of books on Clive and on India, some forty in number, the exhibit also carrying special posters with theatre credits. Newspaper coverage was comprehensive and on a radio hookup tickets were given for the best answers to the question—"Why I would like to see the picture, 'Clive of India.'"

Fourteen Theatres Join for Giveaways

Fourteen theatremen, representing that many houses in the Quad-City section, comprising the three Illinois cities of Rock Island, Moline, East Moline, and Davenport, Iowa, recently combined their forces to put over what District Manager Joe Kinsky, Tri-States Theatres, reports as the most successful giveaway put on in that sector.

As the four above spots are really one big city, it was possible for Kinsky to sell all the exhibitors to join in the idea, being aided by the Quad-Cities Theatre Managers' Association. One of the members promoted a new 1935 auto free of charge.

Each participating theatre ran trailers plugging the car and the night of the drawing, and models were displayed in houses having sufficient foyer space for three weeks ahead. Radio was also used, as was a special newspaper campaign, dailies also running lots of stuff on the stunt. Coupons were given to all adults at all theatres during the three week advance.

The actual drawing took place at the Fort Theatre, in Rock Island, that house being the most centrally located. All participating theatres were connected to the stage of the Fort by a special telephone hookup to permit the simultaneous announcement of the winning number. P.A. systems were also set up for the benefit of those outside. Four prominent citizens acted as judges and supervised the drawings. Over 21,000 tickets were reported sold on the night of the drawing in the 14 houses.

Kinsky supervised the entire setup, aided by Manager H. D. Grove, of the Fort. Other theatremen concerned were Dale MacFarland, C. E. Lockard, John McKay, William Prass, William Sears, Joe Jacobsen, Julius Geertz, Barney Brotman, John Koletis, Abe Brotman, Buster Brotman, Charles and Emil Carpenter.

Speaks Before Advertising Club

Joe Rosenfield, advertising manager of the John Hamrick Theatres, Seattle, Wash., made a talk to the Advertising Club of that city. Joe speaking on the highlights of theatrical advertising stressed the fact that the newspaper is the basic medium for a theatre, citing instances of papers completing theatre sales campaigns by appreciating news values of certain personalities.

Preview Features "Sequoia" Premiere

Just about every organization and citizen of importance accepted Les Pollock's invite to the special screening of "Sequoia" at Loew's, Rochester, N. Y., those present filling out comment cards. Les made up a unique throwaway by using a flock of the signed endorsements in a special herald, permission being secured from those listed whose prominence made an effective plug for the date.

At a special meeting of local Better Films Council, Pollock spoke on the merits of the picture, and in the audience were numerous public school English teachers who were contacted and accepted for distribution in their schools, the booklets on the picture sent out by the Hays office.

To combat the heavy snow, Les put out horse drawn bob-sled bannered bally the novelty of which brought out of the ordinary attention. Live animal display in lobby also stopped 'em, featured in the flash being California raccoon and horned owl. Art department arranged background of rocks and trees. Exhibit was in charge of Mrs. Captain Volney Phifer, who answered questions about the picture and the various animals appearing in it.

Among the outside tieups was a confectionery special named after the picture, and tickets were given to clerks making the highest sales. Drug chain cooperating plugged this in ads, windows, and on menus. Doorknob hangers in shape of blue ribbon with appropriate copy distributed in residential sections, as were booklets containing audience comments and critics' raves.

Press book "hero" contest was planted in one paper, and another in local German sheet. Newspaper score was very high, topped by editorials on the attraction in two dailies.

LEADING TENNESSEANS HONOR BILL HENDRICKS

December Co-Winner Receives Plaque; Col. Howard Waugh Host at Award Luncheon

by HARRY MARTIN

Special Correspondent

With Colonel Howard Waugh, the southern division manager for Warner Theatres, supervising the ceremonies, Bill Hendricks was presented with the Quigley award here by Colonel James Hammond, publisher of The Commercial Appeal (photo on picture page).

The ceremonies took place in Colonel Hammond's luxurious offices and later Hendricks was honored with a buffet luncheon by friends and employees of the theatre.

Winner Rose from Ranks

Hendricks is regarded as an excellent example of the young man who makes good from the ranks. He started with Waugh years ago as an usher when the present zone manager was then house manager at the Palace Theatre. Later he followed Waugh into the Warner ranks and was manager of the Warner Strand in Oshkosh, Wisconsin, when the colonel was promoted from local Warner manager to zone manager with offices in Memphis. Waugh immediately sent for Hendricks to come to Memphis and the blonde blizzard of exploitation remained in Oshkosh only long enough to win Paramount's national contest on the second Mae West picture.

Colonel Hammond congratulated Hendricks upon winning this signal honor and spoke of the incentive the awards would be to other theatre managers. Colonel Waugh congratulated Hendricks as the first Memphian in recent years to capture one of the coveted Quigley trophies.

Among others who offered their congratulations were: Mayor Watkins Overton, Vice-Mayor Clifford Davis, Harry Martin, motion picture editor, critic and columnist for The Commercial Appeal; John D Martin, president of the Southern Baseball Association; Judge William M. Stanton, Moe Gurian, of the Warner office and a host of others.

Akin's Bike Parade Standout "6-Day" Gag

Every prominent bicycle dealer in Dallas, Texas, cooperated with Wally Akin on a street parade as a plug for "Six Day Rider" at the Melba, where Wally did his stuff before going to Abilene as City Manager of the Paramount, Queen and Palace.

Selling the bike merchants on the publicity value of the buildup, a legion of boy and girl riders were secured, at least 50 representing each merchant participating. All riders were bannered with theatre copy. Permission for the parade was secured from the City Council, and as an extra inducement, Akin made arrangements for all riders to be admitted free to the State fair held at that time, where free bicycles were given away.

Displays Old Time Bikes

Lobby stunt that clicked was the bike race stunt wherein two riders competed against each other, their mileage registered as they rode. Mezzanine display of old time bikes also attracted. Road race was also put on, distance 15 miles, ending in front of theatre, for cash prizes and tickets. Free admission was offered to youngsters attending Wally's Big Brother matinee, kids bringing freak bikes to the show taking down the ducats.

Army Plane Drops Flowers Over Theatre

The opening of "Flirtation Walk" was heralded in a little different manner in St. Louis by Homer Harman at the Shubert Rialto, where he arranged for an army plane to fly over theatre and drop a wreath of flowers on roof as a salute to the premiere. Drum and Band Corps marched to theatre in full regalia, where they played hits. Radio station broadcast entire proceedings, including the bugle fanfare with Mayor officially opening ceremonies.

Cameraman in front took pictures of notables as they arrived and these were later shown in the newsreel. Promoted roses were handed out to all ladies as they entered and style writer for one of the leading papers described over radio hookup costumes worn by those attending.

Hamilton Uses Displays To Plug "Bright Eyes"

To introduce "Bright Eyes" at the Palace Theatre, in Norwich, Conn., B. B. Hamilton used a 16-foot wide by 12-foot high shadow box. In the frame Bob had cut-out silver letters of Shirley Temple and it made a very attractive flash when the operator turned the color wheel on display.

In the foyer a large head of Shirley was painted in oil and surrounded by stills. Another attractive display was shown in the lobby (see accompanying photo) in which a mask was used simply showing Shirley's eyes. Merchant gave over window to dolls and County Home Children who were guests of the theatre marched there with placards.

Gilman Flies Title For "Widow" Advance

An old time horse-driven victoria carriage with footman and driver in character and good looker in costume lifted a lot of eyes in Harrisburg, Pa., where Sam Gilman used the stunt as a bally on "Merry Widow" at the Regent. Carriage was said to be 75 years old, back being bannered.

Smart trailer idea was used a week ahead in the form of the title in cutout flittered letters, which after each show was lowered in front of traveler (see photo) to the stage and illuminated while music from the picture was played.

Different was Sam's idea of pasting gummed labels to ordinary building bricks and distributed to all newsstands as paper weights. Newsboys wore silk badges. Girls in five-and-ten also wore the badges as tiein on "Widow" sundae, store flying large pennant to advertise this.

Newspaper breaks were gratifying, including much display space on classified tieup wherein readers were asked to clip any three ads on want page, and write 100 words on why they were chosen. Tickets were given for best answers and paper ran copy as follows at head of ad—"The Merry Widow has a message for you," ad being illustrated with cut of star, picture and theatre mentioned prominently in the flash. Unusual was Gilman's two-column house ad with cut of crowds, copy tying in that the whole town was turning out to see the picture.

Capsules containing prescription with laugh dope were handed out on streets and in offices. Liberty boys paraded to theatre with banners, and hotels, night clubs and radio station supplied with orchestrations.

Huge bike parade led by motorcycle escort went through residential and business districts all properly bannered.

In lobby, George had a stationary bike which patrons were invited to ride, testing their endurance; high score for the day was entitled to passes to show. Brown funny bike books and buttons were distributed, as were imprinted paper napkins in restaurants and lunchrooms.

Loew-ites Sponsor Front Page Club

For the second year, Loew Theatre managers are competing to gain admission to that circuit's Front Page Club, supervised by Oscar Doob, ad head. Membership is open to Loew managers who land on page one of their local dailies with theatre stories, and during 1934, many of the theatremen concerned clicked time and again.

Quite a few are already listed in this year's standings, and among those recently reported are Joe Di Pesa, of Boston; Ed McBride, of Syracuse, and Les Pollock, of Rochester, in H. M. Addison's Northeastern division. Addy, by the way, is pepping up the boys with an offer of a new Stetson to any manager in his sector who lands, and these Round Tablers are now showing off the new headpieces.

Randforce Ad Meetings Reported by MacLevy

Monty MacLevy, ad head, Randforce Circuit, over in Brooklyn, New York, details the proceedings at the weekly publicity meetings, conducted by Louis Frisch as chairman, and attended by his assistant, Harold Rinzler, and following supervisors:

Erwin Gold, Bensonhurst; Sidney P. Levine, Crown Heights; George Langbart, Park Slope; George Davis, East New York; Harry Davey, Ridgewood and Queens; Irving Berman, Greenpoint and Williamsburg, and of course, MacLevy.

Campaigns on coming pictures are discussed far in advance. All pictures are previewed by chief Sam Rinzler and his bookers, Irving Kaplan and Jack Birnbaum, whose suggestions are incorporated, are preparing campaigns.

Preliminary outlines are then drawn up, and further discussed at the individual managers' meetings called by each supervisor. Other slants are also in order, and from them Monty reports a lot of profitable tieups.

In the past few months "Peck's Bad Boy" essay contest and promoted graphoscope sets as prizes have proven successful, as have magazine tie-ups, and of course the holiday matinee, special kids' matinees.

Monty also sends along a flock of snappy novelty heralds and folders. Quite a few of these have room for outside advertising which has been utilized by the managers in meeting printing and distribution costs.

Yearsley Asks Patrons To Vote Approval of Stars

To find out what managers think of the stellar potentialities of Warner junior stars, ad head Charley Einfeld recently wrote to the men in the field querying them on their reactions. C. L. "Bill" Yearsley, Warner representative in Parkersburg, West Va., picked up the gag immediately for a bit of fancy exploitation by planting ballot boxes in the lobby of the Strand, in that spot, and invited the folks, via ads, trailers, etc., to express their opinions on whether or not Gloria Stuart and Ross Alexander currently playing in "Maybe It's Love," were ready for stardom.

Voting beans were made available, a white for the affirmative and a black for the negative. Papers made much to do over the gag and carried full reports on the results. Bill says it did help the grosses, and though put on as a stunt, the comment aroused leads him to believe that the idea has nationwide possibilities.

Local merchants cooperated and presented gal with what she selected from their stocks. Prizes of complimentary tickets were given to those first recognizing her at the different stores. "Empress" was driven about town in bannered deluxe Hudson.

Ross dressed his front by laying red carpets across entire sidewalk and marquee lights were dipped in scarlet. Local dance hall tied up for a "Scarlet Empress" Ball with prizes to the best Dietrich figure and impersonator. Theatre planted masked "Empress" and to the first 25 men who succeeded in dancing with her, passes were awarded.

British Club Cables Holiday Greetings

Hands across the sea, was really that, with an exchange of cabled Christmas greetings from the 2,000 members of Manager Wally Baker's Kiddies' Birthday Club at the Tivoli, Sutton-in-Ashfield, England, to the youngsters in Manager Joe La Rose's Birthday Club at the Easttown, Detroit, Mich.

The story behind the greetings is very interesting, originating some time ago when this department was requested by Baker to suggest a theatre on this side with a birthday organization similar in size and purpose. The names of a number of theatres and managers were forwarded and from the list, the British member selected the Easttown Club with which to make the international link.

La Rose immediately entered into the spirit of the occasion by presenting the cable at the next meeting of the Club and on behalf of the membership, dispatched return greetings overseas.

The British papers picked up the story, as did those in Detroit, the Sutton dailies running to a half column and more, with stories publicizing the theatres and activities of both clubs.

St. Louisans Plan March "Hit March"

Titled "March March of Hits" is the business drive for next month, now in processs of execution by the St. Louis Warner-ites, details of which are forwarded by Al Zimbalist, division ad head, who states a number of the ideas are already functioning.

Included among them, and put down in the sequence listed by Zimbalist are special snipe trailer one week ahead of main trailer, also flash announcements while advance snipe was screened in houses having p.a. systems. Round plaques, 24 inches in diameter, double faced to be hung from fixtures in all retiring rooms, lobbies, inside of house, etc., doormen and ushers to wear badges with drive copy.

Tieup is planned for bumper strips on delivery trucks and hotels are to be covered.

Radio plugs, special heralds, Western Union tieups are set, and local clubs and organizations are being contacted in person and with letters, the latter also going to mailing lists. ## Entire City Cooperates On Smithies' "Week"

Kingston, Ontario, went completely happiness-conscious a short time back, according to Gene Curtis, who reports Ernie Smithies' excellent campaign at the Capitol, in that spot, for "Happiness Ahead."

Ernie's first gun in the barrage was a contact with his Chamber of Commerce on the "week" idea, which led to an endorsement from the Mayor and city council. Service clubs and merchants' association were next in line, followed by church and women's organizations.

Drive started two weeks ahead with committees functioning from every important local group and the entire campaign as planned was covered by the dailies at all meetings. Then three days ahead, "Happiness Week" window cards were displayed in stores and homes, broadcasts put on, band concerts arranged, and merchants carried slugs in all advertising.

Opening day was ushered in with proclamation by Mayor, and newspaper editorials. Happiness tags were sold on streets for benefit of unemployment fund, and Happiness sales put on in all stores. Streets were decorated and lit up, special shows given at the theatre for underprivileged children, and unemployment drive sponsored by committee at City Hall. And most encouraging was the Sunday feature of the campaign, all ministers delivering sermons on "happiness."

As can be seen from accompanying photo the children must have seen the account in the papers.

Newspapers cooperated on the "cheering section" contest, offering gratis tickets to those filling in "Goo Goo." Candy shop paid for distribution of heralds with their own and theatre ad imprinted. For street bally boys were used with individual letters on their backs spelling out title of picture, and two weeks prior a whispering campaign was started with house staff asking one and all "Do you wanna buy a duck?"

"Nell Gwyn" Girls Plug Date for Greenfield

Among our newest contributors from overseas is William Greenfield, general manager, Paramount Theatre, Manchester, England, who evidently did a highly commendable piece of work on "Nell Gwyn." Among his featured exploitations were girls in Nell Gwyn costumes distributing oranges in the lobby, putting the stunt on also in various parts of town. The atmosphere was carried out further in a musical prologue and ballet of Gwyn dancers.

All the above was carried in addition to other publicity by the local press and other instances of Greenfield's newspaper breaks include page co-op on "Here Comes the Groom" and color page on "Cleopatra." Well done also is a brochure in honor of the opening of the new Paramount.

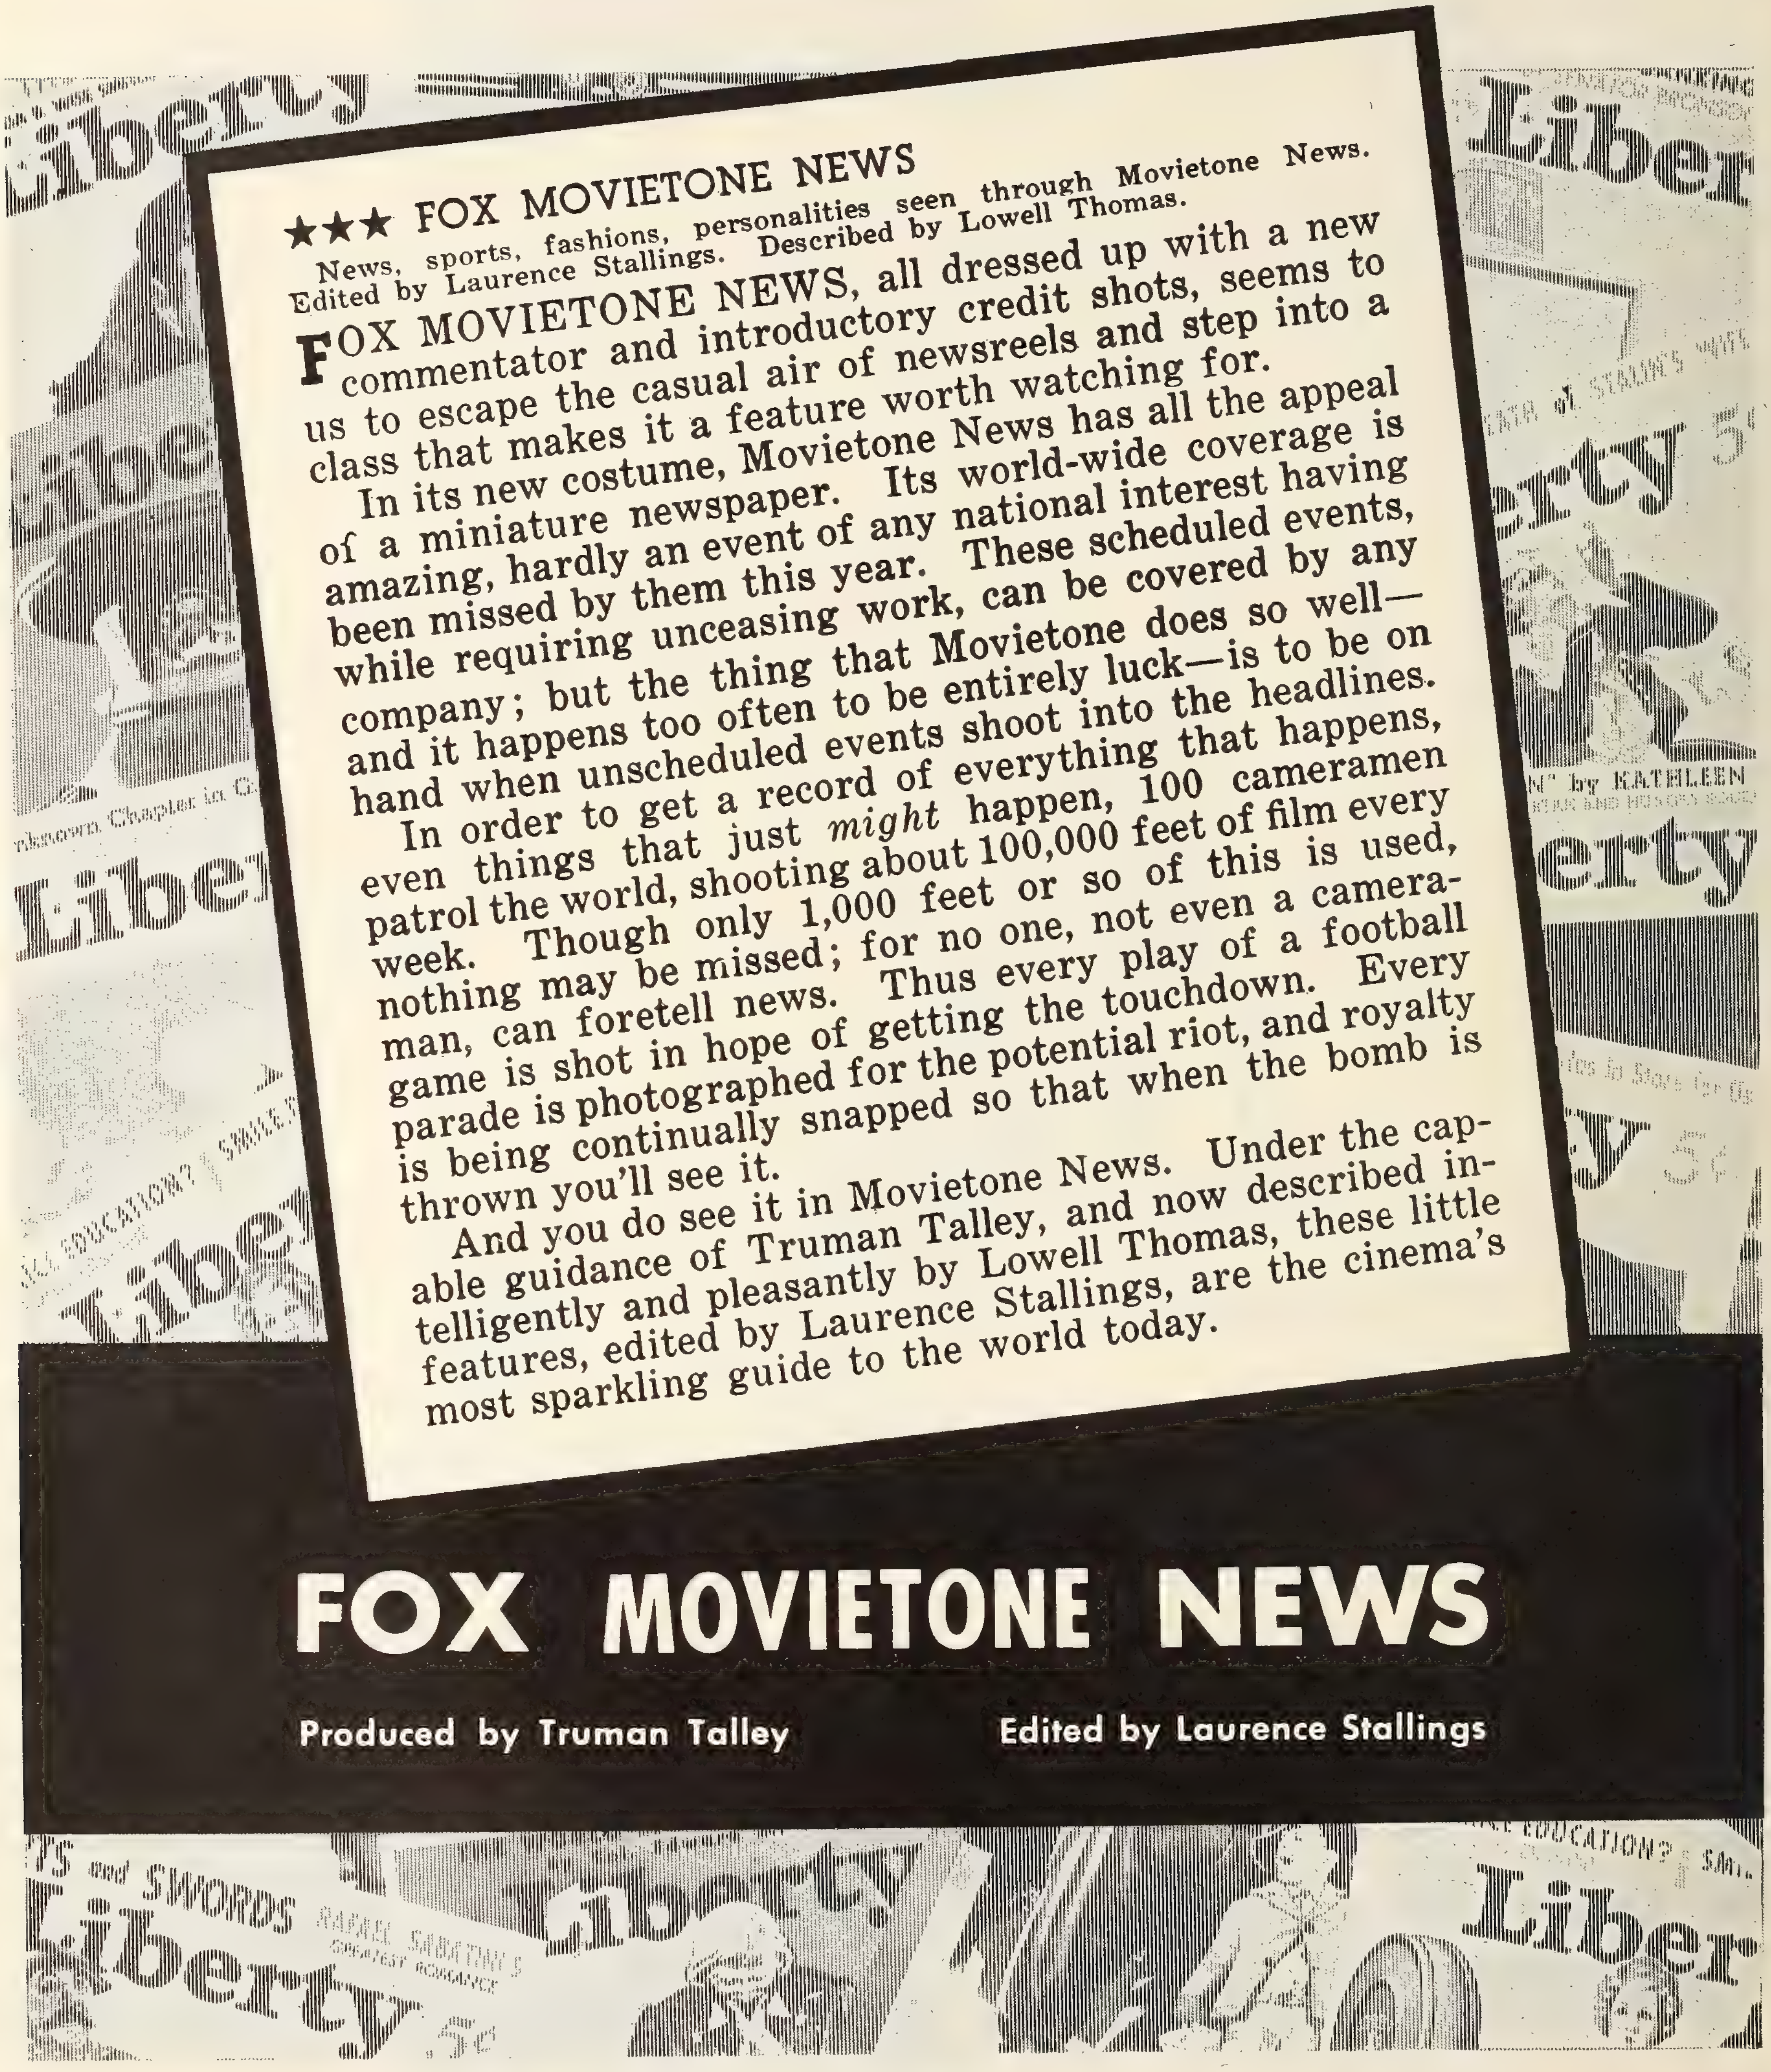
"The cinema's most sparkling guide to the world today . . . a feature worth waiting for,"

—LIBERTY MAGAZINE tells its 2,300,000 readers.



★★★ FOX MOVIETONE NEWS

News, sports, fashions, personalities seen through Movietone News. Edited by Laurence Stallings. Described by Lowell Thomas.

FOX MOVIETONE NEWS, all dressed up with a new commentator and introductory credit shots, seems to us to escape the casual air of newsreels and step into a class that makes it a feature worth watching for.

In its new costume, Movietone News has all the appeal of a miniature newspaper. Its world-wide coverage is amazing, hardly an event of any national interest having been missed by them this year. These scheduled events, while requiring unceasing work, can be covered by any company; but the thing that Movietone does so well—and it happens too often to be entirely luck—is to be on hand when unscheduled events shoot into the headlines.

In order to get a record of everything that happens, even things that just might happen, 100 cameramen patrol the world, shooting about 100,000 feet of film every week. Though only 1,000 feet or so of this is used, nothing may be missed; for no one, not even a cameraman, can foretell news. Thus every play of a football game is shot in hope of getting the touchdown. Every parade is photographed for the potential riot, and royalty is being continually snapped so that when the bomb is thrown you'll see it.

And you do see it in Movietone News. Under the capable guidance of Truman Talley, and now described intelligently and pleasantly by Lowell Thomas, these little features, edited by Laurence Stallings, are the cinema's most sparkling guide to the world today.

BROADWAY DIPLOMAT

MR. JOHN P. G. McPHEE, executive secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Red Bank, New Jersey, according to Film Daily, which quotes the correspondence, wrote to Mr. Walter Reade of Broadway to observe that the Reade house in Red Bank was playing pictures fourteen days after Asbury Park and seven days after Long Branch, with a plea in behalf of Red Bank.

Whereupon Mr. Reade replied, according to Film Daily: "I am too busy to explain to every sucker in the world why pictures play here and why pictures play there. If you want to find out why pictures play here and why pictures play there, go into the picture business."

That ought to help Mr. Reade's Red Bank manager a lot. It also demonstrates how the Broadway frame of mind can help build good-will for the screen.

THE LAW

SIGNIFICANCE attaches to the observation of Mr. W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures Corporation, that: "It would be much better if the industry would act to cure its own evils instead of forcing the Federal courts to take action on them." Unhappy is the home that whistles for a cop.

Also it is clear enough that whereas we need "more business in government and less government in business" this going-to-court is a continuous invitation to government to come in.

The progress and well being of this, and all other, industry would be served by an attitude which respects law as a protection of the right, but does not seek to exploit it as a device for the devious, a tool of special interest.

SPRAY OF EDELWEIS

THE New York Times, through the agency of its screen editor, Mr. Andre Sennwald, makes comparison between "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and the Soviet's "Chapayev", saying: "Although it is perhaps less scintillantly suave in its manufacture than the Hollywood film, it makes a more profound impression because its theme is more immediately vital than the somewhat outmoded Kiplingesque heroics of the Bengal lancers."

"Less scintillantly suave in its manufacture" is merely a spray of edelweis calculated to cover the fact that the Russian picture is lumpy, jumpy, photographically half-baked.

"Its theme is more immediately vital" in the opinion which Mr. Sennwald confers upon the New York Times, one must gather because he likes the Red cause and the picture's cry that "Revolution Marches On" better than the "outmoded" notion of loyalty to empire, to white man's civilization, to discipline, which are the theme of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer", product of Hollywood.

Further Mr. Sennwald ventures to say that "The film . . . may be recommended even to Terry Ramsaye as an example of first rate cinema". Mr. Ramsaye's evaluation of "Chapayev" was presented on page 42 of MOTION PICTURE HERALD of January 26. He didn't like it.

Meanwhile, reflecting on New York Times policy, it would seem to be a constructive suggestion that Mr. Sennwald might find it profitable to have a chat some day with Mr. Frederick T. Birchall, of the Times' foreign staff and for many years its able managing editor in New York, or Mr. Adolph Ochs. They are both Bengal Lancers in spirit.

Many young buds start out pink.

CATEGORY

OUR red contemporary "The Evening Moscow" is considerably wrought up, says a cable to the New York Herald-Tribune, because two heads of foreign diplomatic missions, attending a sessions of the All-Union Congress of Soviets, remained seated during the singing of the "Internationale." One gathers that the Soviet wants its song classified with "God Save the King" and "The Star Spangled Banner." What quaint old ritualists they are, after all.

PROMISE

BETWEEN radio and the sound picture the world is becoming tremendously sound conscious and the microphone is an every day tool. The other day the researchers found that a Madison Avenue car made a noise of 89 decibels, which is something compared to the estimate of 180 decibels for the crack that Krakatoa made in 1883. Decibels are becoming as commonplace as pints, pounds and inches. If the scientists eventually make good on their threat of "Telefaction" for the recording and broadcasting of odors, one may expect to see Miss Carole Lombard's perfumes rated in decismells.

DIVIDENDS

Last week the board of directors of Columbia Pictures declared a regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents per on the preference stock, marking the 24th consecutive payment, none of which has been missed since the stock's issue. The dividend is payable March 1 to holders of record February 14. . . .

ZEIDMAN OUT

B. F. Zeidman, Universal, has concluded a three-year association as producer, resigning, he said, of his own volition, and due to dissatisfaction with an offer involving three months' extension of his recently expired option. Three offers, which he has not yet disclosed, are being considered by Mr. Zeidman. . . .

COMPETITION

Local exhibitors, led by George W. Trendle, president of United Detroit Theatres, loudly protested the proposal of J. J. Shubert, New York theatrical producer, to stage municipal opera in Navin Field, Detroit, as was done in St. Louis last summer. Mr. Trendle pointed out the unfairness of such an undertaking with respect to theatres. . . .

BEST SELLERS PLUS

Bigger and better best sellers might well be the slogan of Eleanor Packer, Hollywood writer who does small story versions of films for sale in 10-cent stores. Her sales are almost incomprehensible, for example: "Our Gang," more than 1,500,000; "Life Story of Jackie Cooper," 1,200,000; "Johnnie Weissmuller as Tarzan," 750,000; "Treasure Island," 900,000,—and with more to come. . . .

NO WEST

Denying reports that he had signed Mae West for a stage production in London, Charles B. Cochran, British theatrical producer, frankly told the AMPA weekly luncheon in New York he would like to have Miss West in a London show, but could not possibly pay her the money she is making in pictures. . . .

ACADEMY COMMITTEE

Developments of a scientific or theoretical nature will be investigated by the newly appointed scientific subcommittee of the Research Council of the Coast Film Academy. The members: Carl Dreher, chairman; Gordon Chambers, J. G. Frayne, N. M. LaPorte, Hollis Moyse and R. C. Williams. . . .

RECORD GROSSES

Weekend box office grosses at the Capitol in New York for the weekends of January 18, 25 and February 1, have been the largest in the history of the theatre, according to managing director Edward M. Bowes. The picture involved, MGM's "David Copperfield," in consequence has been held for a fourth week, the third in the house's history so held. The film, in its second week, outdid other second week record holders. . . .

TICKET SUIT

Dismissed in the New York supreme court by Justice John E. McGeehan last week was the suit brought by five ticket agencies to prevent enforcement of the ticket provisions of the legitimate theatre code. . . .

NEW PROCESS

Perfected by MGM studio engineers is a new developing process, designed to eliminate "chemical flicker" from talking films. Increased brilliance, lessened eye strain, improved sound quality are claimed for the process, which involves bombarding the film with minute particles of chemicals. . . .

UNTAINTED

Arriving in Germany to play in a proposed production, Pola Negri found herself under ban of wizened Minister of Propaganda Paul Joseph Goebbels, because of a non-Aryan taint. # NEWSREEL RIGHTS # and the Flemington Hysteria

By TERRY RAMSAYE

THE piercing cries of the prosecutor of Bruno Hauptmann against the picturing by the newsreels of the defendant on the stand in the great trial at Flemington in New Jersey are hysterical manifestations.

Censorship of the screen as a medium of publication has not yet been delegated to David T. Wilentz, attorney general of the state of New Jersey in charge of the prosecution.

Mr. Wilentz is employed to convict Hauptmann if he is guilty. Mr. Wilentz's proper business is the quest of justice, and that is all.

His demand for the suppression of the newsreels presenting an unquestionably veracious record of Bruno Hauptmann on the witness stand in his own behalf is, in the law's own terminology, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

In all the frothing utterances there appears not even the semblance of an indication of any citation of an argument that the course of justice has been in any degree invaded or menaced.

The contention of Mr. Wilentz proceeds upon the a priori assumption that pictures of a witness in court constitute an offense against society.

Why? Why?

The plain truth is that the camera and microphone as instruments of journalistic record are new to the court-room, new to lawyers.

The law, the courts and the lawyers, fusty, dusty and musty with codes of precedent and medieval language and ritualism, are last, always last, among social institutions to become aware of, to recognize and assimilate elements of progress.

The fact is that the motion picture camera can better serve the purposes of true record than the whole army of professional court reporters with their notebooks and pothooks of an outmoded art.

And, in the very truth, the camera only can do an adequate job of reporting, if one is in quest of realism.

The very pictures at issue are perfect evidence. While the newsreel camera was recording Hauptmann on the stand there were some news dispatches on the wire burdened with "color" asserting that he was embarrassed, confused, fumbling, fearful. But the pictures of that same testimony showed a calculating, coldly careful defendant witness, listening attentively, weighing carefully, answering craftily.

The motion picture carries with it the ancient curse against the theatre, never well thought of in the law and the courts, and the persistent prejudice of the institution of law-craft against that which is new.

Mr. Wilentz is outraged against the picturing of his sacred person in the pursuit of the causes of justice pertaining to a person charged with murder, by precisely the same instrument and institution deemed fit to record the inauguration of the President of the United States, fit to go with America's soldiers over the top in the Argonne and across the wheatfields of Chateau-Thierry.

We have heard nothing from Mr. Wilentz or other personages of the court raising issue with the journalistic practice of the press in converting the trial into penny vaudeville vended from the newsstands.

What service of society is especially achieved by the attendance of an army of fiction writers, cartoonists and pulpwood page entertainers?

The art of the printed word has sent in some two hundred performers, whose functions, capabilities and contributions have no evident fruitful connection with the special service of the causes of society.

The array of what is called "the press" in attendance has included:

Alexander Woollcott, dramatic critic and essayist
Arthur B. Reeve, detective stories
Philip Dunning, playwright
Adela Rogers St. Johns, novelist
Ford Madox Ford, novelist
Kathleen Norris, novelist
Boake Carter, radio news reciter
Bill Corum, sports writer
Heywood Broun, columnist
Westbrook Pegler, columnist
Damon Runyon, sports writer
Walter Winchell, Broadway chatter columnist

Interesting and charming as the contributions of these persons may have been among the annals of the trial, they represent a function and activity in no wise different from that of the motion picture camera.

None Aware That Picture Was Being Made

The newspaper feature column, and celebrity-signed special article, is just as definitely amusement pabulum as anything that the motion picture screen can offer.

So far as the real interests of society are concerned, the newspaper job at Flemington could be ably and amply done by one competent reporter assisted by an office boy to carry his copy to the wire. There has been no day's events in the Hauptmann trial which could not have been adequately presented in two newspaper columns, and better told than they have been. But Mr. Wilentz has been experienced of and conditioned by newspaper practice. It is old and familiar to him. He has nothing to say about it. Besides, if he did, it would not get him very much space in the papers.

The trial at Flemington is a show, a signal effort by the State of New Jersey to vindicate itself, to prove itself a commonwealth of law and order, but none the less a demonstration, a show. It is a publicity made event, with Mr. Wilentz a definitely conscious and obvious publicity contribution to the demonstration. The whole case has been born of showmanship and publicity, from the day that Charles Lindbergh flew the Atlantic, the feat that brought him fame and all his woes, down to the decision of the State of New Jersey to appropriate $100,000 and to delegate a special prosecutor for the trial of Bruno Hauptmann. Despite the fame of Jersey justice, the state still has its quota of unsolved and unpunished crimes, many of them quite as serious but not so conspicuous as the publicity-lighted events culminating in the Flemington courtroom. For those less conspicuous cases there is no appropriation, no show. So it is clear enough that the State of New Jersey, by which Mr. Wilentz is employed as an agent of demonstration, is in this case engaged in a job of public relations, motivated and controlled by publicity considerations—proper, right, but still publicity.

It is also clearly a mal-adroit publicity policy which would ignore the screen or discriminate against it. If the courts have an obligation to stand open to the public's gaze and inspection that obligation is manyfold to the sound camera which is the eye and ear of the millions.

Any charge that the newsreel camera which recorded Hauptmann on the stand was an invasion of the peace and dignity of the courtroom is rendered obviously absurd by the fact that none there was aware that the picture was being made.

It would be unfortunate indeed if it proved to be strictly true that the word of any proper representative of the newsreels was given to the presiding judge only to be broken. It would, however, be hard to understand a point of view which would permit newsreel cameras in the courtroom to work at intermissions and at no other time, unless it were a precaution against disturbing activity—of which there was none.

Question may be raised, within the motion picture industry, about what proper part crime reporting can have in theatre programs, but that is the motion picture's own problem.

The newsreel camera is as definitely the representative of the people as the newspaper.

But, once again, it is demonstrated that the motion picture has yet to establish its rights on a parity with the press and its respectability in the eyes of courts.

The camera is damned because it is new, and the law is very old.

Three Plans Complicate Booth Cost Decision

Because of last-minute submission of two new plans for determining booth costs in metropolitan New York, the long delayed public hearing last week served only to bring out the opposition to the formula originally proposed by the fact finding committee, prepared by Harry Brandt.

Another hearing is expected to be called soon to discuss that one of the two new formulae now before the National Recovery Administration, which will be selected as best meeting the situation, probably that prepared by Charles O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. The third formula was proposed by representatives of Local 306, IATSE.

No progress has yet been made toward dealing with the stage hand wages.

While Local 306 sponsored its own plan and attacked the Brandt formula as destined to close many theatres and resulting in a lowering of wages in some instances, it was indicated that the union has split on the question of wages, Matthew M. Levy appearing as counsel for a "progressive group committee" set up on petition of more than 1,000 of the local's members.

Explaining his plan, Brandt said it would increase booth costs in New York by $3,000 a week, and justified the development of the formula on the ground that all parties, including the unions, agreed there was no "prevailing" wage scale in August, 1933, and that it was therefore necessary to devise such a scale.

The plan proposed by Local 306 would carry costs ranging from $81 to $531 based on an 84 hour week, and was founded on capacity and admission, run having been eliminated as not being a stable factor since a house might change its run from day to day and, in the case of double features, present pictures of different runs at the same time.

Naval Officers Attend Broadway Strand Opening

Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, with members of his staff, were among the honor guests at the Broadway premiere of Warner's "Devil Dogs of the Air," first Cosmopolitan production for Warner release, at the Strand on Wednesday evening. Present as well were all three of the Warner Brothers, Harry M., Albert and Jack L., who came on from the Coast for the opening.

The United States Navy cooperated in the production of the film which is a story of the Marine Corps aviation service, and stars James Cagney and Pat O'Brien. Members of the Junior Naval Reserve paraded to the theatre, marines attended from the navy yard and a color guard was stationed in front of the theatre during the presentation of the production in the evening.

LINDBERGH CASE PAWN IN NEWSREEL PRIVATE FIGHT

Old-Line Filmers of the Actual Event Prepare to Take Time by the Forelock to Prove the Record Better Than the Fabrication; Whereupon the Legal Authorities Threaten—and Time Sidesteps Issue by Ignoring the Story

This week the newsreels became news.

To the public the newsreels were news because the release of pictures made in the courtroom at Flemington, New Jersey, showing Bruno Richard Hauptmann on trial for his life in the Lindbergh kidnaping-murder case, brought a storm of fury and page one excoriation from David T. Wilentz, attorney general in charge of the prosecution, proclaiming the sanctity of the halls of justice against the sullying invasion of the camera.

The further fact is that Mr. Wilentz, having made his public gesture, is quoted by intimates as having felt very pleased with the large publicity outcome. He has at least indicated to newsreel representatives that he would not choose to be in wrong with them.

The issue and the excitement went far enough to reach the Wall Street banking houses which consider themselves factors in the motion picture industry, and resulted in lines of "suggestion" in some instances and dictations of policy in others. The bankers wanted to pussyfoot and kill the story.

To the motion picture industry, the story and the news was even more interesting in that it was complicated by internal newsreel rivalry and editorial chicane.

For some months now the newsreel world has been increasingly interested, not to say perturbed, by the impending invasion of the screen version of The March of Time, offspring of Time, the re-write newsmagazine, saucy cock-sparrow of journalism, busy the while pecking experimentally in the movie garden.

Time, with its smart-boy technique, expressed on printed page and on the radio with amazing effectiveness, punchy and confident, brought alarms to the staid and habitbound newsreel offices.

Timed to the day, the orthodox, oldline newsreels saved up negatives and made ready to bring forth the greatest human interest sound-news story of all time simultaneously with the first issue of the screen "March of Time," the reel of dramatic reenactments of the news. It was to be the answer of the record against fabrication.

Time finessed—and ignored the entire subject, being in no wise committed, as a monthly release, to deal with an unfinished story.

The "answer" thereby became tactically ungermane since the issue had been obliterated by a duck and side-step, all calculated before the blow was aimed.

In consequence the story gets tossed back into the domain of public relations and the status and rights of the newsreel—which is not the private fight that it started to be about.

And now New Jersey and Broadway can take the microphone:

Fox and Paramount immediately acquiesced, with hardly a protest, to the demands of Mr. Wilentz that the reels be withdrawn. Hearst Metrotone withdrew only in New York and New Jersey, Pathe and Universal held their ground, continuing to place their pictures in theatres, "where they belong."

All companies had in hand identical material, the single sound camera in the courtroom being operated by their crews on a rotating basis. It was the first actual testimony to be shown from the five-week-old trial.

The experience was humiliating for the newsreels when on Monday morning their staffs arrived at the courthouse and were compelled, on pain of arrest, to pack their equipment, under the glare of armed deputy sheriffs, and depart.

The trial for the life of Bruno Hauptmann was being delayed for their eviction. Twelve jury men and women, who already had taken their seats to continue in judgment of the prisoner, watched with wonderment at the strange proceeding. So did Colonel Charles Augustus Lindbergh, spending his 33rd birthday and 24th day in the trial room listening to the story of the murder of his son. Judge Trenchard remained in his chambers until it was over. Then the trial proceeded.

TRICKERY CHARGES HELD 'NONSENSE'

columnists, "sob sisters," broken-down playwrights and whatnot—continued, as they have for five weeks, to pour forth for public consumption steady streams of highly colored opinions for their own trial of Hauptmann in the press. There are no court bars, bans, barbs or barks for them, but on the outside at Flemington were the newsreels looking in.

Arriving at Flemington courthouse Thursday morning to continue prosecution of the German carpenter, Mr. Wilentz stamped indignantly when told that the newsreels were releasing scenes of the actual Hauptmann testimony, photographed earlier in the week. Immediately he telegraphed the five newsreel editors in New York:

In the name of the State of New Jersey and in the name of decency it is requested that you order the immediate withdrawal of Hauptmann trial pictures taken during actual trial sessions.

These sound pictures were procured by trickery and in defiance of the order of the court.

You owe a positive duty to cooperate, and such duty should not be avoided for money profit or for any other reason.

David T. Wilentz
Attorney General
State of New Jersey

Whether the attorney general was objecting to the possible effect of testimony on public opinion—which is held to be affected already by radio and newspaper accounts—or to his grilling interrogation of the prisoner, or to the unconcerned manner in which the prisoner dismissed many of the questions, was not made clear. It was generally understood that court order had not been upset by the filming.

Truman Talley, producer of Fox Movietone News, and A. J. Richard, head of Paramount News, wiring Mr. Wilentz their compliance with his demand for withdrawal, likewise denied that the pictures were obtained by trickery, and insisted that the court knew they were being taken.

Cochrane Makes Fiery Defense

Robert H. Cochrane, vice president of Universal Pictures, publicly defended the industry's position, and stoutly, too, telegraphing to Mr. Wilentz on Monday the following fiery document, which was no mild chastisement:

Attorney General David T. Wilentz
County Court House
Flemington, N. J.

Illness has prevented an earlier answer to your telegram in which you registered a protest against the use of scenes from the Hauptmann trial in our newsreel.

The Universal company has violated no agreement with the court in using trial scenes. The truth of the matter is that the whole trial has been ballyhooed in some of the newspapers and over some of the radio stations day after day while the newsreels have been so decent and dignified that they have defaulted in their duty to the theatres they serve.

Some of the newspapers have spread the trial over innumerable pages. They have not stopped with handling the news. They have editorialized in articles by special writers and in cartoons. They have found Hauptmann Guilty! So have millions of readers who have been soaking up the verbatim report of the trial with all of the questions and answers.

On the radio the trial has been handled directly from Flemington at 15-minute periods. On some of the stations, actors and actresses have been used to impersonate Hauptmann, his wife and yourself. I do not know whether this has been done with your consent, but whether it has or not a great show has been made of the whole trial.

I am told that tickets of admission in the form of subpoenas have been issued to Park Avenue debutantes and to Broadway stars.

Meanwhile the newsreels have continued during the course of the trial to handle the whole thing with repression.

I therefore take the full responsibility for instructing our newsreel editor to cover the trial in scene and sound on the day when Hauptmann took the stand. I told him to act as a reporter, not as an editor, and he carried out my instructions to the letter. He handled the whole matter with impartiality and dignity and with all due respect to the court.

Meanwhile we have been pilloried in some of the newspapers and to a certain extent in your telegram for doing something "dishonorable." You and I are well aware of the fact that the motion pictures of the trial were not made by trickery or concealment. We know very well that no apparatus has been concealed in the courtroom. Not only because it is too cumbersome to conceal, but because no newsreel representative has done anything on the sly. All talk of photography by trickery is nonsense.

In view of the above and because I believe your request is inconsistent, I have not recalled our pictures from circulation.

R. H. Cochrane,
Vice-President
Universal Pictures

Regardless, permission for installing complete sound camera apparatus had been granted by Judge Trenchard and Sheriff John C. Curtis, before the trial started, after a special sound-proofed recording camera and specially constructed "blimp" had been demonstrated to their satisfaction that operating noises which might interfere with normal court procedure had been eliminated.

Two days before the trial opened on January 2, Sheriff Curtis caled together all newsreel editors and, with Judge Trenchard, told them that they would have to rotate their camera reporters on the equipment, and that the prints developing therefrom could be interchanged, because no one reel could hope to monopolize inside courthouse coverage.

Whether Judge Trenchard gave orders to refrain from filming actual testimony and only permission to photograph courtroom incidents when he was not sitting on the bench is now the point at issue.

Mr. Cochrane, Mr. Talley and Mr. Richard, denying "trickery," declared that officials knew the camera was working. Their statement was verified somewhat by the New York Times, which said: "The manner in which the pictures were obtained was so open that persons in the court not directly concerned had thought that the newsreel companies had obtained permission to set up their cameras and keep them operating during the trial session. All through the important testimony the big machine ground steadily, but inaudibly, taking both sound and pictures."

Judge Trenchard and Mr. Wilentz answered by saying that all cameramen, both newspaper and newsreel, were working under "a friendly gentlemen's agreement" not to photograph witnesses while testifying.

All newsreels assumed joint responsibility for the sound camera on the balcony overlooking the courtroom. When Hauptmann was testifying Universal's crew was on duty under the rotating system. At the camera were Dave Oliver and Roy Edwards, and on sound was Edward Graham.

Inaudible Within Few Inches

Equipped with telephoto lenses of approximately F 1.8 speed, 50 times faster than an amateur still kodak, the camera was focused on the witness stand and the sound picked up with a directional beam microphone, of unusual sensitivity. The sound of the running motor was not audible within a few inches. A state trooper stationed next to the camera to make sure there was no noise was unable to hear it.

The microphone had been placed on a rear window, about 32 feet from the witness stand, behind an electric fan. Wires were plainly visible at all times. Adjustments had been made, for concentration, so that it would pick up only those sounds in direct range of the witness chair and the judge's bench.

The apparatus was operated electrically by remote control. After the camera had been loaded with film, before a session started, the camera switch was turned on and left in that position. Then from a remote point the power line was broken by the cameraman, and whenever a contact was desired to catch some choice testimony he needed only to clip the wires onto the storage battery beside him.

For some mysterious reason, just before Hauptmann took the stand, photographic bulbs had been removed from the ceiling fixtures. The room was further darkened by the pulling of the window shades to a lower point than usual. Lighting handicaps were overcome, however, by the use of a specially prepared Eastman negative stock, said to be twice as fast as any film previously made for the motion picture camera.

VIVID DRAMA IN HAUPTMANN REELS

There was vivid drama in the newsreel films which developed. Attorney General Wilentz is seen pointing a finger menacingly at the defendant as he shouts "Lies! Lies! Lies!," and the prisoner roars back, angrily, "Stop That! Stop That!" The scenes gave the lie to newspaper accounts which depicted Hauptmann as frightened, wavering, broken.

The pictures show the crowded courtroom, and Colonel Lindbergh taking the stand. Anne Lindbergh identifies her baby's sleeping garment, and Dr. John Condon identifies Hauptmann. Voices of the Lindberghs were not recorded. "Jafsie's" was. These scenes had been taken four weeks ago, but the Hauptmann interrogation was not filmed until January 28 and 29, four days prior to its release last weekend. The Lindbergh and Condon incidents apparently had been withheld to appear with the Hauptmann climax as "March of Time'" competition.

Judge Not Shown

In not one of the scenes does Justice Trenchard appear. Defense Counsel Edward A. Reilly is shown only briefly examining his client. Eight out of the ten minutes are concentrated on Mr. Wilentz's vigorous cross-examination.

"It was powerful drama," observed witnesses to a trade showing at Universal's home office projection room last Thursday.

The announcements of the release of Hauptmann testimony which so fired Mr. Wilentz contained all of the dramatics of copy writers who are inspired by a sudden newsreel accomplishment of great importance.

Mr. Wilentz answered these narratives by calling the industry's executives "cheap tricksters."

"We insist so far as possible that the companies are not greater than the court, but are subject to it, just the same as anyone else," said Mr. Wilentz in the courthouse while surrounded by newspaper and newsreel reporters. "These cheap tricksters sit in their offices in New York and Hollywood and think that nothing is superior to the movies and the dollar. They gave their word of honor through their representatives here—and it was violated. The next move is up to them."

Truman Talley moved first by withdrawing immediately, on Thursday, but not until his Movietone staff participated in a heated, all-night argument against suppression. Action of Hearst Metrotone, limited as it was, and of Paramount, was taken early Saturday. Pathe and Universal decided at the outset to go through with the release.

The "fireworks" precipitated by Mr. Wilentz caused the newsreel chiefs to decide that one would not surrender under the attack without the others. Apparently the agreement was lost in the ensuing confusion.

THE SHERIFF WHO SAID YES

Sheriff John C. Curtis, chief stage hand at Hunterdon County's "Flemington Follies" in New Jersey, may learn any day that he is the goat who will be tied to the can of Hauptmann's newsreel testimony now being circulated among theatres to the publicly announced discomfiture of State's Attorney David T. Wilentz.

There's a secret document in the picture, executed some few weeks ago on a dark January night, and signed and sealed with solemnity, it is authentically reported, by the managing officials of Fox Movietone, Hearst Metrotone and Paramount, Pathe and Universal newsreels. It contained an understanding that, court orders or not, they would film, quietly, every picture possible during actual sessions of the trial. There would be a big "Hauptmann Special!" when the jury returned a verdict.

Some 12,000 feet had been accumulated, and not a frame of it shown, when, two weeks ago, they became eager for the "scoop" and dispatched to Trenton a committee composed of Laurence Stallings, Fox; M. D. Clofine, Metro; A. G. Richard, and W. Z. Montague, Paramount; Claud R. Collings, Pathe, and Charles E. Ford, Universal, to get the permission of release from Judge Trenchard or Attorney General Wilentz. Both refused. A single emissary then "casually" tackled Sheriff Curtis and, believing the material merely a repetition of question-and-answer testimony, as in newspapers, the sheriff saw no harm in it. This was all that they thought they needed.

"March of Time" entered the picture at about this point, its editors expressing the private opinion that the newsreels' unexpected splurge on the Hauptmann subject on the very day that the "March of Time" made its formal debut as a news magazine was more than a mere coincidence. Time's spokesman declared that some of the newsreel officials admitted that their Hauptmann "splash" had been planned in advance by all the reels together to offset the appearance of the "March of Time" last Friday.

The newsreels, it was explained, realized that Time could not appear with authentic courtroom scenes because it was not in on the "syndicate" arrangement at Flemington, and the newsreels expected that their Hauptmann "scoop" would belittle "March of Time" in any position it might take as a newsreel reporter.

Furthermore, the newsreels, calculating that Time would cover in its first release the "trial of the century" at Flemington by using scenes and incidents portrayed by Time actors, anticipated that their real life courtroom pictures would show up by contrast the staged presentation in "March of Time."

To assure a complete victory over "March of Time's" first release, some newsreel editors are reported to have persuaded Mr. Talley, of Fox, to enter into an agreement not to sell courtroom footage to Time. An arrangement between Movietone and "March of Time" gives the magazine the right to buy footage from the Fox newsreel laboratory.

Regardless, Time is wondering about the identity or identities of the person or persons who prompted Prosecution Attorney Wilentz and Defense Counsel Reilly to bury their courtroom "hatchet" for a moment to sent a joint telegram to "March of Time" warning its editors not to use Hauptmann material, and advising them that they will be held "strictly accountable" for its exhibition in "any state or country."

Say Treatment Never Intended

"We strenuously object," concluded Mr. Wilentz and Mr. Reilly, both of whom, Time said, must have been aware that "March of Time" had not participated.

In any event, the Time spokesman said that they had never had any intention of treating the Hauptmann case in their first release, which they are proceeding to market in routine manner.

Mr. Wilentz this week refused to say what the court would do if the pictures were not withdrawn. He added his observation that there was no doubt but that the companies involved were guilty of contempt of court.

Not until Monday morning, when the cameramen and their equipment were ejected from the courthouse, was any official word heard from Judge Trenchard, who, it is supposed, alone has the authority to rule on proper courtroom procedure. Up to this point the matter apparently had been in the hands of Mr. Wilentz, at least insofar as detailing the situation to the newspapers was concerned.

Judge Trenchard was bombarded with telegrams and letters from newspapers and press services and photographic agencies asking him to rescind his order barring all cameras from the trial. The judge refused to act, saying he "very much regretted" that the pictures had been made "in defiance" of the court's orders. "It was done secretly, and by methods that are not commonly understood," he added.

Newsreel officers pointed out that the significance of the controversy in its relation to the "freedom of the press" was further reflected in a complete absence of editorial criticism by newspapers, especially noticeable in papers which usually chastise the screen on the slightest provocation.

Eastern newspapers published a daily account of the news element involved, the

HE 'COULDN'T TAKE IT'

national wire services sent similar flashes into the field, and the independent Kansas City Times, circulation 300,000, declared that Mr. Wilentz "couldn't take it."

The Kansas City Times ridiculed Mr. Wilentz, declaring: "He is said to have asked the 'camera boy' to be particularly attentive, saying he was 'more than likely to break Hauptmann down and give the newsreels the most sensational confession on record.' When the show seemed to go the other way," added the newspaper, "Wilentz 'couldn't take it.'"

"Considerable laughter was directed at Wilentz in newsreel circles," continued the Times, "because he had shown such a willingness to grandstand at the outset of the cross-examination. He prides himself on being a great courtroom actor."

Newspapers Reproduce Film

The "grapevine" among the newsreel cameramen, picked up by the Kansas City newspaper, indicated, it was said, that the newsreels believed Mr. Wilentz "was angry because they shot moments of the cross-examination in which Hauptmann 'seemed to make a monkey' of him."

Saturday afternoon and Monday morning editions of newspapers reproduced strips of photographs enlarged from the Hauptmann newsreels. The newsreel source was not credited in all instances, a procedure for anonymity similar to the action taken by Universal during the week in removing its identity from its reel.

Judge Trenchard's eviction of the newsreels from the courtroom was called "a setback to criminal jurisprudence" by Arthur B. Reeve, noted author of crime stories, reporter at Flemington for the New York Evening Post, and himself a citizen of New Jersey. The newsreel record is too valuable in solving the case to lose it, he said, adding that "the sound movies of this trial, disclosing many shortcomings in the handling of the whole case, will through its obvious lesson bring a reform in modern criminal procedure.

"A moving picture sound record of the trial is important for many reasons besides the matter of public interest," Mr. Reeve said, citing its possible use in case of a mistrial, dismissal of the indictment, or a new trial on appeal.

Theatres in the field, unaware that the Hauptmann reels were en route, had little opportunity to prepare for an exploitation ballyhoo. Flash lines were inserted in regular newspaper advertisements and improvised lobby announcements were erected.

In Buffalo, public interest was high, not a single exit having been observed in the first runs. Chicago's citizenry was even more excited. The reels caused the greatest reaction there in years. Patrons gasped, leaned forward to catch every word and the audiences buzzed for half an hour after.

The subject elicited compliments from patrons at RKO houses in Cleveland, although Detroit's public accepted it as routine coverage. Audiences in Portland, Ore., laughed when Bruno Hauptmann admitted he lied twice. St. Louis has had a counter attraction in the Kelly kidnaping trial, so the public there merely accepted the Hauptmann material as so much newsreel.

Radio Station Enlisted

The local radio station at Wilmington was enlisted to ballyhoo the reel in that territory, where interest in the case is high. Broadway audiences, too, were much interested and reacted with applause or "hisses" as defendant or prosecutor scored a point. Some hysterical women at the Paramount at Times Square jumped to their feet and cried "Stop it!" as Mr. Wilentz continued to hammer the defense.

Fox and Paramount exchanges were thrown into a furore, along with their theatre affiliates, when telegrams were received from New York headquarters instructing them to delete the Hauptmann cross-examination. Managers in many instances had to explain to patrons, who not only had seen the flash advertising announcements but pointed to the showing of the reels at competitive theatres. Universal wired its exchanges to "go the limit" in selling the subject.

Independent theatres which already had received prints of the withdrawn Fox and Paramount reels would not cancel the showings, nor would the companies compel them to do so.

Pathe and Universal are expected to reach 6,000 of their own customers between them, and probably another thousand where service will not be supplied by Fox or Paramount. These added to some 2,000 theatres which screened the testimony before home offices ordered cancellation, together with Hearst accounts outside of the canceled New York and New Jersey cities, will make for a combined estimated circulation well over 10,000 theatres out of 14,000 operating.

Albert Hefferan of Grand Rapids Mich., who with two or three other high school pupils developed an interest in motion picture exhibition into setting up their own little theatre in an attic and since have carried on with the Owl theatre, has been applying showmanship of definite value to the operation of their playhouse.

Recently in "What the Picture Did for Me" Hefferan reported on the success he had had with the showing of a group of pictures which he termed "biology films," shorts of an educational nature.

Now he has used the same idea in a revival of three of Shirley Temple's first pictures, all short features released by Educational. He describes the project this way:

"Well, we tried another novel trick and it was a great success, better than the biology films which we played last week. I thought of getting together all of the Shirley Temple comedies of two reels each and playing them at one performance and seeing what would happen.

"Well, it was a clean-up. The pictures were 'Pardon My Pups' 'What's to Do?' and 'Managed Money,' and then we had a cartoon and other short subjects. The children went for this like hot cakes and it was the best program we had for a long time. We handed out pictures of Shirley to every one attending."

MALOY IS DISCONTINUED AS CHICAGO UNION BOSS

Union Activity Battle Scarred

Bombings and killings have featured conspicuously in the operators' union since 1917, but it was only in recent years they were done on a big scale. The most notable bombing was in 1931 when 16 theatres were bombed while Independents, under Aaron Saperstein, fought Maloy to victory over the "two-men-in-a-booth" policy.

Property damage totaled millions from powder bombs primarily and from stench bombs at the following theatres: Madlin, Monroe, Argmore, Easterly, Ray, Colony, Byrd, Regent, Commodore, Music Box, Austin, Hamlin, Harrison, McVickers, Granada and Jackson Park.

A recent notorious shooting was in 1931 when Jake Kaufman, belligerent unionist, was killed in a West Side garage. Maloy was mentioned but not found guilty. In March, 1933, Ralph O'Hara shot Fred Oser at union headquarters, but was acquitted, pleading self-defense.

Emmett Quinn was once wounded near union quarters while escorting Maloy to his office. Maloy himself has been shot at and has had bricks hurled at him at various times but had escaped injury. Other shootings had occurred over a long period, among them one in 1927, when one of Maloy's supporters was shot and two others slugged. Maloy's murder remains a mystery. So many possible angles confront the police that it will be weeks before it is solved, if ever.

Defeated by Exhibitors in 1931 When He Demanded Two Projectionists in Each Booth; Faced Tax Trial

Gangland machine guns staccatoed "30" to the turbulent career of Thomas E. Maloy, business agent and dictator of the Motion Picture Operators Union of Chicago, on Monday.

The finish was the routine of Chicago racketeer business methods. Maloy was at the wheel of his big sedan on the way to union headquarters in the afternoon, on the Outer Drive paralleling Lake Michigan's shoreline. Near Twenty-fourth street, opposite the Century of Progress buildings, a smaller car raced alongside, two gunmen on the runningboard. A pumping of bullets and Maloy lay dead, his head against the window, his hat upside down on the steering wheel.

Dr. Emmett Quinn, dentist and steward of the union, constant companion of the czar, was also in the sedan but escaped with a grazed cheek. The murder car disappeared in the flow of traffic toward the Loop.

After a two-hour session, the Maloy inquest was adjourned to February 19.

For 18 of his 45 years Maloy was dictator of the union, a dictatorship complemented by murders, strikes, bombings, assorted acts of terrorism. At the moment he was free on bond on a federal indictment charging income tax evasion, failure to pay $81,059 on $350,939 amassed by him from 1929 to 1932.

That charge grew out of another of the many deeds of violence linked with Maloy's career. It was last October that a squad of bandits raided his expansive summer home near Michigan City and extracted $63,000 from a wall safe. The amount was news to federal investigators and a sensation, too, in labor and theatre circles. A federal grand jury indicted him on four counts. Conviction would have meant a five year sentence and $10,000 fine on each count. At the hearing, Ralph J. O'Hara, lieutenant to Maloy, was arrested for perjury, for overstretching his loyalty under oath when questioned concerning collections from theatremen. It was charged in the indictment that each year Maloy had received a certain sum as "other incomes," never explained. The income from "other sources" was tabulated as follows: $27,136 in 1929; $89,176 in 1930; $9,987 in 1931, and $124,300 in 1932. Theatremen, it was indicated, were among these "other sources." The $20,000 bond which released him from custody pending final court action was underwritten by $153,000 in real estate reputedly put up by union members.

As for the $63,000 taken from Mrs. Effie Maloy at the Michigan City home—her husband was in Canada—Thomas Reynolds, president of the union, said Monday that it was the union's contingent fund for use if anyone should tie up the union's bank accounts. The five raiders of the home had stopped T. T. Rairdon, deputy marshal of Long Beach, Ind., struck him upon the head, used him as a decoy to gain admittance to the Maloy home.

THOMAS E. MALOY

One of the clues being followed by the police in attempting to unfold the reason for the Maloy assassination—and the slayings and lesser crimes that shadowed his life provided countless threads to follow—trailed back to the killing last Friday of Joe ("Ginko") Catrina. The theory was that Catrina was one of the five in the $63,000 robbery.

Then there was a theory that Maloy actually had been kidnaped by union foes, racketeers or gamblers with itching fingers stretched toward the union funds, that the machine gun fire was their rebuttal to his refusal to go through with an agreement for ransom.

The luck of Tom Maloy began to turn on him five years ago. Before that he frequently had been the target of threats and attempted assaults, but never injured. That luck was fortified by a bodyguard, and union headquarters an agreement for ransome. Another was that Capone "remnants" handled the Maloy exodus.

Maloy had figured conspicuously in union affairs since 1917; indeed, at the office of Nash & Ahearn, attorneys, it was said that as far back as 1912 he first emerged from a job as an operator to enter union organization work. In 1912 to 1913 there were conflicting efforts to organize machine operators, one group headed by Maloy, another by Jack Miller, now head of the Chicago Exhibitors Association. In 1917 came an amalgamation which made Maloy executive of the operators, Mr. Miller withdrawing.

Since 1917 Maloy has been constantly in the headlines. In that year he became embroiled in an altercation with a policeman. The charges were dropped. Shortly afterward his life was threatened in an anonymous phone call. In 1920 he was struck on the head by a thrown brick while he was horseback riding—Maloy was gaining something of a name as a "gentleman rider" at the time of his death and had spent considerable money in the purchase of thoroughbreds.

Accused in Slaying

In July, 1931, Maloy and Ralph O'Hara were accused by witnesses after the slaying of Jacob D. Kaufman, an unemployed operator who had attempted to elect new union officers or start a rival union. Kaufman had been shot down by a white-flanneled young man in a West Side garage. The charges failed.

On March 14, 1933, O'Hara shot and killed Fred Oser, another disgruntled operator, in union headquarters. Oser was the leader of operators who were fighting Maloy's regime in court at the time and were demanding an accounting of union funds. O'Hara was acquitted on a plea of self-defense.

Then there was the lesser case of Clyde Osterberg, another "rebel." Osterberg said he had been slugged by Dr. Quinn. Last March Osterberg pulled a pistol as Maloy and Dr. Quinn were nearing union headquarters and Quinn was shot in the thumb. Quinn later surrendered but was acquitted.

Frequent were the internecine struggles in the union, members accusing Maloy of collecting graft from them and other motion picture projectionists.

And there was the time when kidnapers tried to take Maloy at his home, seized his bodyguard, George Graham, by mistake, and disgustedly released him.

Defeated by Saperstein

But besides the internal dissensions of the unionists, Maloy had figured often directly in difficulties of theatres in Chicago. One outstanding dispute emerged in 1931 from Maloy's demand that there be two projectionists in each booth. Championing the exhibitors' cause was Aaron Saperstein, president of the newly-formed Allied States exhibitors' unit. He and fellow exhibitors closed some 120 theatres in protest against the Maloy demands. This action was followed by a series of theatre bombings while police and the state's attorney's office worked frantically to effect a conciliation.

Mr. Saperstein emerged victorious when several union officials were indicted. A compromise was effected, the indictments were dropped but on condition that they be reinstated if the agreement was broken. All Chicago exhibitordom joined in a testimonial dinner to Mr. Saperstein. Since then, peace for the most part has reigned between theatre and union. Only a few days ago a new working agreement for this year was signed by Maloy and Saperstein.

In April, 1933, Maloy made an effort to adopt the son of his deceased brother, Joseph. The court rejected his application. Joseph Maloy was chief examiner of operators, a position given him through Tom Maloy's influence.

Threatened Reporters

In 1931, at one of the Maloy elections, Sherwin Kane, of Motion Picture Daily, then Chicago correspondent of Quigley Publications, described how Tom Maloy's men, armed with machine guns, were stationed at the entrance to the polling place to indicate that any adverse vote would not be cherished. Following publication, Mr. Kane was told by Ralph O'Hara to "watch your step or Chicago won't be safe for you."

Subsequently Al Blasko, Chicago representative for Associated Publications, was warned so emphatically that his life would be a happier one if he were at a distance from Chicago that he spent the next six months in Indianapolis, returning to Chicago to enter the employ of Essaness Theatres.

Maloy was short, pugilistic, but invariably immaculate of dress. A favorite story of Chicago's Film Row years ago concerned the taunting he received from four men who mistook him for a "dude." In the ensuing battle royal all four went down for the count.

Those who knew him had very decided opinions as to his personality. He was admired or hated, a "great guy" or a "gorilla"; he either had "fought the battle for the operators" or he had "robbed them blind."

Discontented men in the operators' union charged that regular members were jobless while the best paying posts were given to men with temporary permits. Frequently attempts were made to dislodge him, but the election votes always were overwhelmingly in his favor. There were machine guns.

SING SING END OF KAPLAN RULE

When Sam Kaplan, deposed head of New York's projection local 306, stepped, outbound, through the gates of Sing Sing Prison in December, 1934, New York's projection circles were reminded of the days when Kaplan's word was "law" in the conduct of operators' affairs in the Greater New York territory.

He was indicted in January, 1932, for threatened violence and conspiracy, on charges brought by nine expelled union members. Immediately following the indictment he was "re-elected" president for four years.

During the many years of his incumbency his rule was "vigorous." In the summer of 1932, three members of local 306 filed in New York supreme court an order requiring union officials to show cause why Kaplan should not be restrained from conducting the union's business, and why the officials should not be restrained from using union funds for advertising and counsel fees.

An order for removal of Kaplan from local 306 was issued by the IATSE in December, 1932, shortly after Kaplan's trial had begun in supreme court. When he appeared in court, Kaplan was accompanied by two armed bodyguards. In February, 1933, Harry Sherman was elected president of 306. When Kaplan was sentenced to six months in State's Prison on charges of coercion and conspiracy, he carried his case to the appellate division, but his appeal was denied. The court of appeals in Albany later sustained the decisions of the lower courts, and in company with Theodore Greenberg, local 306 "organizer," he left for Ossining-on-the-Hudson.

As president of 306 Kaplan headed one of two factions, and his wholesale expulsion of members of the rival group which ultimately caused his conviction, was allegedly designed to stop all court action for an accounting of union funds, for damages and for an injunction. Sherman was ousted last year when he was unable to explain his possession of certain of the local's funds, this situation having been brought to light after a series of raids on the local's offices in New York by the district attorney.

U. S. COURT HOLDS DOUBLE BILL RESTRICTION IN CONTRACT ILLEGAL

Perelmans at Philadelphia Win Injunction; Companies Expected to Ask Supersedeas; Chicago Case Up Feb. 15th

The United States district court in Philadelphia upheld the right of an exhibitor to show two feature motion pictures on a single program without contractual interference by distributors, in a ruling late last week granting an injunction to the Perelman Brothers, theatre owners. At the same time Chicago independent exhibitors proceeded with anti-trust actions against large companies to gain the same privilege.

Judge George A. Welsh, ruling against Fox Film Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, Paramount Distributing, RKO Distributing, United Artists and Warner Brothers, found an "almost complete domination" of the industry by the large distributors, and observed that, if this condition were permitted to continue unchecked, "the opportunity for expression of the cultural life of our great nation will be controlled by a small group."

"If the independent exhibitors are destroyed," Judge Welsh remarked, "it might be a long time before the monopolistic control and domination could be challenged and broken." Therefore, he commanded the defendants to cease and discontinue "their agreement, conspiracy and combination to prohibit the exhibition of feature films" distributed by them "in conjunction with other feature programs on double feature programs," and, further demanded that the distributors refrain from making such prohibition a part of any contract and from penalizing exhibitors in any manner because of the exhibition of their features on the same program with other features.

The court also found conspiracy, restraint of trade, tendency to create monopoly and violation of the Sherman antitrust and Clayton acts.

Supersedeas Request Expected

Pending the writing of the actual decree, the Philadelphia dual bill situation, long in controversy, will remain in statu quo. The defendants are expected to ask for a supersedeas to restrain enforcement of the injunction pending a circuit court appeal. Unless the supersedeas is granted, the decree automatically will prevent distributors from further enforcing the clauses prohibiting duals. If they fail to upset the decree in the appellate division it is likely that the issue will be brought to the United States supreme court.

The case was a test sponsored by a group of Philadelphia independents headed by the Perelmans. Starting more or less inconspicuously last summer to determine the validity of the anti-dual contract clause in large distributors' 1934-35 feature license agreements, it assumed national significance when leaders in distribution and exhibition and spokesmen for women's organizations took the stand for or against the practice as it relates to industry and social structures.

Morris Wolf, of counsel for the defense, objected at the hearing to the judge's giving consideration to the "public interest in the case," maintaining that the whole situation revolved around a legal question of a trade practice. Judge Welsh replied that "the subject could not be fairly and properly considered if the public viewpoint and public interest were eliminated."

Possibly involving, as a federal court precedent, some 7,000 double featuring theatres out of 13,500 operating, the decision was the most decisive to date for both independent exhibitors and independent distributors who for years have been fighting with large distributors and their circuit affiliates over the policy. The large companies had variously threatened to adopt forceful measures to outlaw the practice, and tried to incorporate in the motion picture code a clause which would control it. Local prohibitions of double featuring adopted by exhibitors have failed in almost all instances, except in Chicago where an agreement still stands.

The Perelmans, on behalf of other independents, said that without double features they were unable to meet the stage show and other competition of the defendants' large theatres. The court said that duals actually came about as the result of this competition, and that the practice "has grown enormously."

Cites "Strategic Position"

Because independent exhibitors cannot carry on their business without the product of the large distributors, the majors are "in a peculiarly strategic position to dominate," said the court, adding that "the Chancellor was deeply impressed with the fact that by reason of the tremendous concentration of resources that are in the power and control of these defendants they are able to dictate their own terms and conditions upon which an exhibitor may do business.

"Defendants contend that the double feature policy complained of lowers the efficiency of the industry in that it tends to cheapen intrinsically and intellectually the product. Their motive, from their viewpoint, does not control when the evidence shows that the effect of their actions results

"Human Hogs" Try to Bar Competitors From Policy for Profit, Says Cochrane

It's an old Cochrane custom to throw meaningful words straight from the shoulder. That's why the following from R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal Pictures Corporation, is pertinent in the light of the block booking decision of Judge George A. Welsh of the United States district court at Philadelphia in the so-called Perelman case.

By R. H. COCHRANE
Vice-President of Universal

A good deal of rot is said and published about the socalled "double feature evil."

Who decided that it is an "evil"?

What brought it into existence?

The best way to answer these questions is to ask another:

If you owned a theatre on which you could not make a profit because some other theatre had bought up most of the pictures, and you found that by showing two features instead of one you could change your loss into a profit, what would you do about it?

The only sensible answer is that you would run two features for the price of one. You would be desperately willing to gamble that the people would go for a bargain.

That's what brought about double-features,—the inability of thousands of theatres to show a profit on a single feature because the opposition theatres had sewed up most of the product.

Greed caused the sewing up of so much product by some theatres that double features became a necessity for other theatres.

Greed now causes the human hogs of this industry to try, by fair means or foul, to stop competitors from adopting a picture policy which will show a profit.

I am positive that wherever a double-feature policy enables a theatre to stay in business and make a profit where it sustained a loss on a single feature policy, then the double-feature is not an "evil." It is a life-saver.

Too many people in this business try to tell too many other people how to live. I am, with all my heart, for any policy on earth which will let the greatest number prosper and be at least half-way happy.

COURT'S DECISION IN DUAL BILL CASE

Judge George A. Welsh, in United States District Court, eastern district of Pennsylvania, late last week handed down the opinion herewith in which he granted an injunction to Perelman Brothers, independent theatre owners of Philadelphia, against large distributors, restraining them from enforcing a contract clause which prohibits exhibitors from showing their features with another feature on a double bill policy.

OPINION SUR FINAL HEARING

Welsh, J.

This case presents features so important to the legal, cultural, and the moral issues that are before our country today that a Chancellor would not be doing his full duty if he failed in an opinion to treat the subject having in mind a full recognition of these facts. The Court wants to take occasion to express to the learned counsel on both sides, and to the very estimable witnesses who appeared before him, his appreciation of their learning and willingness to impart information and suggestions.

The plaintiffs ask for an injunction against the defendants alleging violation of the anti-trust laws of the United States. Plaintiffs allege and defendants admit that the contracts between the parties contain a prohibition against what is known as "Double Feature." This is an expression well known in the motion picture world. Both of the contending parties consider the question as vital. Plaintiffs claim that without the ability to present a "double feature" program they are unable to meet the serious competition that the defendants themselves have set up in the business, brought about by the introduction of the vaudeville and theatrical features used by the defendants in large central areas in what are called de luxe houses. Testimony was introduced tracing the history of the motion picture industry from its earliest inception to the present day. Both plaintiffs and defendants are in general agreement so far as this history is concerned. There is no doubt in the mind of the Chancellor that the present condition so far as the double feature program is concerned was actually brought about in the way that has been described.

Dual Practice Growing, Says Court

The evidence shows that the double feature program has grown enormously throughout the United States and that in many areas the defendants themselves resort to it. The evidence also shows that for some years the defendants, who have been described as the major producers, have been trying in every possible way to restrict this practice. In practically every contract put out by the defendants in certain areas (including the area in this jurisdiction) the exhibitor is obliged to agree under certain reserved penalties that no double feature will be shown. Plaintiffs by evidence produced showed that by the control that the defendants have over the major production of pictures they, the plaintiffs, could not carry on their business as exhibitors without the pictures controlled by the defendants. This situation places the defendants in a peculiarly strategic position to dominate the whole situation. The Chancellor was deeply impressed with the fact that by reason of the tremendous concentration of resources that are in the power and control of these defendants they are able to absolutely dictate their own terms and conditions upon which an exhibitor may do business with them. It is this serious situation that causes the Chancellor to weigh fully every fact bearing on the important questions at issue. The motion picture industry, next to the Church and school, touches our people most intimately. The industry has such possibilities for good or evil in our civilization of today that all of us who have to do with any phase of the industry should weigh carefully our motives and consider carefully the effect of our actions and judgments.

Reference has been made to the present domination of the industry by the defendants. It is not intended to be implied that the domination has been secured by unlawful means. Legitimate, economic laws may have produced that condition. But the fact is inescapable that such a condition, however caused, does exist. Therefore, the action of the defendants, so far as the probable effect of the double feature prohibition in the contract is concerned, must be considered in the light of that truth. If the complainants were able to have a wide range of selection, and a freedom of choice unrestricted by economic conditions, the action of the defendants complained of might not be so injurious upon the complainants and the public.

Public Wants "Free Flow of Commerce"

During the progress of the hearings objection was made by the defendants to the Chancellor considering the public aspect of the question. Yet this subject could not be fairly and properly considered if the public viewpoint and the public interest were eliminated. The public is vitally interested in a free and uninterrupted flow of commerce and a free and uninterrupted right of contract. Congress has taken the means through approved legislation to secure both. Only by judicial recognition of the anti-trust legislation of Congress can the rights of the parties and the public be conserved. These rights are not only commercial, having their roots in the soil of trade, but they are cultural to a marked degree. The Chancellor watched with close attention the unfolding of the facts in this case by the various witnesses. He could not but be impressed with a sense of uneasiness at the conditions as they were revealed. What impressed him most was the already almost complete domination of the industry by the defendants, and a realization that if this domination were to go unchecked, or be further extended, the opportunity for the expression of the cultural life of our great Nation would be controlled completely by a small group who might or might not be representative of the aspirations and inspirations of our people. The Chancellor was irresistibly forced to the conclusion that if the restraints of trade and commerce practiced by the defendants in their contracts now complained of were permitted to continue the independent producer and the independent exhibitor would be greatly injured and interfered with, and the public welfare impaired. This is particularly true just at this time when the economic conditions are such that if the independent producer and the independent exhibitor are permitted to be handicapped in the manner complained of they will not be able to survive, and if destroyed it might be a long time before the monopolistic control and domination could be challenged or broken.

Defendants contend that the double feature policy complained of lowers the efficiency of the industry in that it tends to cheapen intrinsically and intellectually the product. Their motive, from their viewpoint, does not control when the evidence shows that the effect of their actions results in a violation of Federal legislation on the subject.

Defendants further contend that there was no conspiracy on the part of the defendants to do the thing complained of. However, from all of the evidence produced showing the discussion of this matter, the purposes desired to be obtained by the defendants, the means of combating the double feature program, the unanimity of action, the Chancellor has no hesitation in saying that this unanimity of action was not a coincidence but, in his opinion, a well defined, well thought out, well studied intent to accomplish a purpose prohibited by the Federal laws.

Court Makes 21 "Findings of Fact"

From the facts as testified to the Court makes the following Findings of Fact:

1. Plaintiff at the time of filing his Bill of Complaint and prior thereto was a co-partner with Louis Perelman, which co-partnership owned and operated two independent motion picture theatres within the City of Philadelphia.

2. The defendants, Vitagraph, Inc., RKO Distributing Corporation, Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, Metro - Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, and United Artists Corporation, are distributors of motion pictures produced and distributed in interstate commerce.

3. Defendants, in their contracts for the sale or leasing of feature pictures, have inserted clauses to the effect that the feature picture so sold or leased may not be exhibited in conjunction with any other feature picture on a double feature program.

4. The violation of said provision by an exhibitor party thereto constitutes a breach of such contract and gives the defendants the right to withhold the delivery of films contracted for, or to otherwise penalize the exhibitor by postponing the availability of pictures.

5. The exhibition of motion pictures is conducted by two classes of exhibitors, viz, (a) through theatres owned and/or controlled and/or operated by companies producing motion picture films or their subsidiary companies, such exhibition theatres being commonly known as affiliated theatres and (b) through theatres operated by those having no connection with producing companies, such theatres being commonly known as independent theatres or Independent Exhibitors.

Dual Prohibition Reduces Income

6. The affiliated theatres operate large and important theatres in the City of Philadelphia and vicinity and enjoy the privilege of early exhibition of feature pictures distributed by the defendants. When said features are released to the plaintiff and other independent exhibitors, they have lost some of their commercial value. The plaintiff and other independent exhibitors have been able to secure greater box-office returns by the exhibition of "double feature" programs than by the exhibition of single feature programs and the effect of prohibiting the exhibition of "double feature" programs is to reduce their income.

7. Plaintiff and other independent exhibitors have exhibited two feature pictures on a single program as an additional attraction to their patrons to overcome the reduced attractiveness of feature pictures previously shown in theatres enjoying the early exhibition priviliges.

8. Plaintiff and other independent exhibitors contract for pictures distributed by defendants under a system known as "block booking," that is, the leasing of a number or group of pictures, the subjects, titles or time of availability of which are not known when the contract is made.

9. The producers of motion pictures are divided into two classes: one commonly known as "major" producers and the other commonly known as "independent" producers. All the defendants are either "major" producers or are the distributors of the motion pictures produced by the "major" producers. The defendants produce and distribute a great majority of all feature films and short subject films produced and exhibited in the United States.

JUDGE UPHOLDS DOUBLE FEATURING

10. The films distributed by the defendants and exhibited by the plaintiff and others in Philadelphia are received into Pennsylvania from other states and are the subject of interstate commerce.

11. The requirements of motion picture theatres differ with each locality and depend upon the preference of the patrons and the novelty of their attractions.

12. Plaintiff and other independent exhibitors require the feature films produced by the major producers in order to maintain their theatres, and they are required to sign the defendants' contracts in order to procure such features.

Independent Product Not Enough

13. Plaintiff and other independent exhibitors cannot survive in business by exhibiting only feature films produced by the independent producers.

14. The clauses in defendants' contracts prohibiting the exhibition of their feature films as part of a double feature program have caused the plaintiff and other independent exhibitors to purchase fewer feature pictures for exhibition purposes than they would have purchased if they were permitted to use such features on double feature programs.

15. The said clauses have resulted in a reduction of the number of feature films produced, sold or leased by independent major producers.

16. The exhibition of two feature films on a single program requires more pictures to be produced and sold and the clauses prohibiting the use of films as part of double feature programs reduces the number of pictures required to be produced.

17. The clauses in defendants' contracts prohibiting the use of their features as part of a double feature program tend to reduce the business of the independent producer and to create a monopoly in the production and distribution of pictures in the major producers, the defendant distributors and their affiliated exhibitors.

18. The use of said clauses tends to restrict plaintiff and other independent exhibitors in their purchases of films from competitors of defendants and thereby to lessen competition among distributors and their respective producers.

19. Defendants have by agreement determined to prohibit the use of feature films distributed by them in conjunction with any other feature films on a double feature program, and have persisted in such agreement.

20. Defendants have entered into a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade amongst the several states and have carried out the purpose of said combination by inserting in their distribution contracts the respective clauses prohibiting the use of their feature films with other feature films on double feature programs.

21. Defendants have combined and conspired among themselves and with others, to insert in their respective contracts the double feature clauses which tend to create a monopoly in the trade and commerce among the several states of distributing and exhibiting of motion pictures.

From the above facts as found the Court makes the following

Conclusions of Law

1. The defendants have entered into a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states.

2. The combination or conspiracy of the defendants lessens competition and tends to create a monopoly in trade or commerce among several states.

3. Defendants have violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (July 2, 1890, C. 647, Sec. 1) and the Clayton Act (October 15, 1914, C. 323, Sec. 3; 38 Stat. 731) by inserting in their contracts with plaintiff and other exhibitors provisions prohibiting the exhibition of feature films distributed by the defendants, in conjunction with other feature films on a double feature program.

4. Defendants have entered into contracts, and have combined and conspired to enter into contracts with the plaintiff and other exhibitors for the leasing of feature motion picture films, on condition, agreement and understanding that the plaintiff and said other exhibitors shall not use the motion pictures of others except as limited therein, the effect of which is to deter the plaintiff and others from using feature pictures of other producers and tends to create a monopoly in interstate commerce.

5. The provisions in defendants' contracts prohibiting the use of the feature films, distributed by them, on double feature programs violate the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and the Clayton Act and are illegal and void.

6. The Court has jurisdiction of this case under Sections 16 and 12 of the Clayton Act.

7. Plaintiff by reason of the combination and conspiracy between the defendants has been and is threatened with loss or damage and he has the right to maintain the present action.

8. Plaintiff is entitled to an injunction commanding defendants to cease and discontinue their agreement, combination and conspiracy to prohibit the exhibition of the feature films distributed by defendants in conjunction with other feature films on double feature programs, and restraining defendants from making such prohibition a part of any contract with the plaintiff, and from penalizing plaintiff in any manner because of the exhibition of their feature films on double feature programs in conjunction with any other feature film.

A decree may be prepared by counsel in conformity with the findings and conclusions herein.

Says Restrictions Hurt Independent

in a violation of federal legislation on the subject."

The court further observed that when features are released to subsequent-run operations they have lost some of their commercial value, but that when these independents practice double-billing they are able to obtain greater box-office returns than by the exhibition of single feature programs, and the effect of prohibiting duals is to reduce the income of the independent subsequents.

Double feature restrictions reduce the business of independent producers and create a monopoly in major producers, it was said, and, because "the defendants have entered into a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade," they are guilty of violating the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts, the court ruled. The specific contract clauses intended to prevent double billing were declared to be "illegal and void."

The Philadelphia independents started the action when Harry and Louis Perelman, as owners of the Allegheny and Lehigh theatres, on May 28th, 1934, filed a district court suit charging that the double feature clause was in violation of the anti-trust laws. Their counsel, Benjamin M. Golder, former Congressman, declared that companies involved were using double features themselves but tried to restrict smaller exhibitors from doing likewise.

Hearings assumed national importance late in November and early December, and were marked by testimony of executives of the large companies, including J. Robert Rubin and William F. Rodgers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Ned Depinet and William Youngman, RKO; E. W. Hammons, Educational; Al Lichtman and Edward Raferty, United Artists; Andrew W. Smith and Harold Bareford, Warner Brothers; E. C. Grainger, Fox; Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Walter Vincent, of the Wilmer and Vincent Circuit; Edward Golden, Monogram; Mrs. James Looram, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae; Mrs. Mary Owen, General Federation of Women's Clubs; I. E. Chadwick, and representative exhibitors and virtually all exchange officials of Philadelphia.

The complaining exhibitors, organized as the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association, with Mr. Golder president, first applied to Judge Welsh for an injunction. After taking the case under advisement for a fortnight, he refused the preliminary injunction, declaring the case should be brought into open court with witnesses summoned and testimony. The hearings began November 22nd, were concluded December 6 and both sides were given until December 21 to file briefs. Judge Welsh then took 40 days to study the evidence.

Next Case in Chicago

The next federal court attack on dual feature restrictions will now come in Chicago, where last week Jack Rubin, of the Public theatre, and James Roden, owner of the Astor, filed independent antitrust cases against large distributors and circuits and asked for injunctions restraining distributors from discriminating against their double bill performances at ten cents admission.

United States district court judge Charles E. Woodward was on the bench when Mr. Rubin appeared against Essaness Circuit, Balaban and Katz, Warner Brothers and other distributors, and he notified the defendants to file answers on or before February 15th. The same defendants were mentioned in Mr. Roden's suit, in which damages of $300,000 were claimed under the triple damage clause of the Sherman law.

From Washington came word indicating that the newly formed Allied Theatre Owners of the District of Columbia has been awaiting the outcome of the Philadelphia case before deciding on a course of action to upset the non-doubling clause in their contracts.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America continued to campaign for a code clause outlawing double featuring in any territory by a majority exhibitor vote.

Tri-Ergon Verdict Expected in Month

Decision of the United States supreme court as to the validity of the Tri-Ergon patents may be expected within the next month, possibly being rendered before February 28.

Arguments in the cases were presented to the court February 4 and 5 in Washington, the Paramount case, involving the double-printing feature, being heard first and followed by the Altoona Publix and Wilmer & Vincent cases, joined in one proceeding, involving the flywheel.

Revolving around patent principles, the argument was highly technical and the court was shown graphically how the patents entered into the production and projection of sound films.

The cases came before the court on a petition by Paramount for reconsideration of the court's original refusal to review the decree of the circuit court, which had held the Tri-Ergon patents to have been infringed by other equipment. Many millions of dollars are involved in the result of the suits, pending the decision in which a number of infringement damage cases brought by Tri-Ergon have been held up.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., defending Fox and MGM in an action against Nordisk, powerful Danish company, this week emerged as victor in what was hailed in sales circles in New York as an important patent victory.

Details Being Cleared in Fox West Coast Realignment

Despite the filing this week of two anti-trust suits against Fox West Coast, the circuit is expected to be out of bankruptcy shortly, with many of the details being handled in New York. Spyros Skouras and several attorneys retained by Fox were scheduled to leave for New York Wednesday, after last week's court formalities in Los Angeles, while Frank L. Newman, Sr., head of Evergreen States of Seattle, former FWC division in that territory, and his partner, Al Finkelstein, left for New York.

The sale price of Fox West Coast was set at $15,443,888 last week. During the late stages of negotiations Chase National Bank withdrew a claim of $2,700,000, which was secured by $800,000 in collateral. Under the formal court approval of the FWC plan, National Theatres Corporation will take over Wesco Corporation, holding company for the FWC Theatres. Wesco was never in bankruptcy, but was reorganized by Fox Film and Chase National to get a fresh start under a new name and to take over the FWC assets. FWC creditors will get 100 cents on the dollar.

Senate Authorizes Query On A. T. & T. Film Interests

The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee on Tuesday in Washington authorized the Federal Communications Commission to undertake an examination of the film interests of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company.

Before giving its authorization, the committee approved the resolution of Senator Wheeler of Montana calling for the investigation, which is being made in connection with A. T. & T.'s activities and providing an additional appropriation of $750,000 to finance the study.

Exhibitor Scores Code, MPPDA

Charges that "the Hays crowd of motion picture conspirators" are, through the NRA motion picture code, strangling the independent theatre owners of the nation are made by A. B. Momand, head of Momand Theatres, Inc., of Shawnee, Okla., in a booklet issued by him this week entitled "The Hays Office and the NRA." The pamphlet has been sent to all members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, the governors of the 48 states, the heads of all universities and the country's leading newspapers.

"Tear the sheep's skin off the 'Code of Fair Competition' for the motion picture industry," the booklet says. "Today, by government decree, there stands revealed in all its hideousness, the old Hays 'self-government of industry,' the Film Boards and arbitration boards, camouflaged by the high-sounding names, 'Code Authority,' "Clearance and Zoning Board' and 'Grievance Board.'

"This time it must be killed quickly! It must be killed by the 74th Congress if the motion picture conspirators are to be prevented from strangling the independent theatre owners of the nation, and the monopolists of other industries prevented from crushing the small business enterprises."

Mr. Momand at present has suits pending in the district court in Oklahoma City against practically all major distributors and theatre circuits charging conspiracy and monopoly.

Motion Picture Club Starts Weekly Forum

The first 1935 forum of the Motion Picture Club of New York was held Tuesday with prominent speakers from various professions, who joined in an informal discussion of politics, motion pictures, banking and "generalities."

Among Tuesday's speakers were Judge James A. Wallace of the court of general sessions, Nathan Burkan, Amos Pinchot, Louis Nizer and several other lawyers, and Hamilton H. Collins, Los Angeles business man, banker and Democratic leader. The forum will be held each Tuesday noon from now on. Next week's speakers will be almost exclusively from the banking world and will include Joseph P. Kennedy, former Pathe president and now chairman of the Securities Exchange Commission; Clarence Dillon, of Dillon, Read & Company, and Richard Whitney, Stock Exchange president.

Two Sunday Show Bills Lose Support

No anti-motion picture industry legislation made its appearance either in the Senate or the House in Washington during the week and developments in state legislatures were few.

In Connecticut a group of politicians who had promised to support an amendment to permit Sunday afternoon shows withdrew support of the measures, which had met with attacks from the clergy.

In Delaware also the offering of a bill to permit Sunday showings has been withheld by Representative Dr. Willard Pierce because of opposition from theatre men. The exhibitors are opposed to two clauses in the proposed bill; one provides a three-cent tax on all admissions, another prohibits theatres from opening before 9 p.m. Sundays.

In Ohio the state legal department handed down a decision that placards, bill boards and similar advertising material sold or leased by Ohio exchanges to theatres within the state are subject to the three per cent sales tax which became effective last week and that it is the duty of the vendors to collect the tax on sales or rentals at the time the lease is consummated.

The board of selectmen of Milton, Mass., voted against licensing Sunday pictures.

Giveaways are opposed in a bill just presented to the Missouri legislature by Representative Frank F. Catron of Lexington. Prizes involving possession of a certain ticket would, under its provisions, be punishable by fines of from $100 to $1,000. Also pending before the Missouri lawmakers are three per cent, two per cent and one per cent sales tax bills and the Lindhorst bill to impose a 10 per cent tax on film shows and other amusements.

With the close of introduction of bills in the Nebraska legislature, the motion picture industry would be affected by measures for a two-man booth, two per cent sales tax, circuit theatre tax, coin machine 10 per cent gross tax, two bills to reorganize the state fair board and a restriction on carnival playdates.

In Albany Joseph J. Monahan, Democrat of Brooklyn and a former burlesque comedian, has introduced in Assembly a companion to the McCall bill previously introduced in the Senate to impose a tax of 10 cents per 100 feet of film run for exhibition purposes and requiring a registration fee of 50 cents per seat to be paid by exhibitors.

M. J. Meehan Is Director of K-A-O

LUBITSCH NAMED PRODUCTION HEAD; HERZBRUN STUDIO CHIEF; COHEN OUT

Albert A. Kaufman Becomes Associate Producer at Paramount; Keough Vice-President of Operating Companies

The pressures of Paramount reorganization this week reached the studio.

Monday Emanuel Cohen, general manager of production, arrived from Hollywood and reported at the office of Adolph Zukor. Two minutes later he emerged, at liberty.

In sequel Paramount Publix Corporation officially announced the appointment of Henry Herzbrun, Hollywood legal staff, as vice-president of Paramount Productions and general manager of the West Coast studio, with Ernst Lubitsch, imported German director, becoming the head of production and Albert A. Kaufman, who had been assistant to Mr. Cohen, taking a post as an associate producer. Austin Keough was named vice-president of the five Paramount operating companies.

ERNST LUBITSCH STARTS TO WORK

The conclusion of Mr. Cohen's connection with Paramount, coming abruptly in the eighth year of his connection with the corporation, is a dramatic episode in his career and the culmination of various political sequences in the history of the corporation.

Military Procedure

Forces of disapproval of Mr. Cohen have been expressing themselves with increasing vigor for many weeks, along with reports that he had been making plans to depart from the company and take important talent with him if all was not to his liking.

Mr. Cohen's dismissal by Mr. Zukor is to be taken as strictly military procedure, dictated by official position. The situation was one in which Mr. Zukor apparently was called upon to read lines written for him. Until most recently at least Mr. Zukor, becoming aware of rising murmurs of opposition to Mr. Cohen, was considerably devoted to expressions of approval and defense.

The now newly established studio regime of Paramount is to be taken as of emergency status, to be affirmed and made permanent or subjected to change as may be dictated at such time as management under the reorganization plan has been aligned and has consolidated its position. This condition, it now appears, is not likely to be reached at the earliest until March.

Mr. Cohen's next connection and movements in the industry are still in the process of formulation. It is in the pattern of his aggressive career that he will presently be found doing something.

Mr. Cohen came to the motion picture in a minor capacity in the service of Pathe Weekly in 1914 and presently became editor of the reel, continuing until 1926, building Pathe News meanwhile into a tight walled principality of his own within the walls of the Pathe corporation. Pathe News, belligerently edited and sold, and printed with the advantages of an inside price on Pathe-made raw stock, dominated the newsreel market.

When Paramount discovered, in the course of extending its empire, the value of trademark and name showing achieved by the vast distribution and repetitive showings of newsreels, plans were made to enter the field with a Paramount reel.

On the decision of Sidney Kent, then Paramount sales manager, for a Paramount reel made on the Pathe formulae, negotiations were begun with Mr. Cohen, whose salary was forthwith raised by Elmer Pearson of Pathe from $400 a week to $600. Paramount bid $1,000 and closed.

Subsequently, as the Paramount internal situation grew complex and brought production problems heavily atop the theatre circuit complications, Sam Katz discovered in Mr. Cohen an instrument and rapidly built him into a position of high authority resulting presently in sending him to Hollywood to survey the studio. The survey ended with Mr. Cohen in charge of the studio.

In time the day arrived when Mr. Katz and Mr. Cohen were at variance, but three thousand miles away, fortified in the studio, it was Mr. Cohen who continued with Paramount, with a salary reported at $2,500 a week, and with Mr. Zukor as his chief advocate.

Cohen May Have Own Unit

Confirming the appointment of Henry Herzbrun as vice-president of Paramount Productions and general manager of the company's West Coast studios, Mr. Zukor on Tuesday sent the following telegram to the newly created executive:

"My dear Henry: Confirming my telephone conversation with you last night I am very happy to announce your appointment as a vice-president of Paramount Productions and general manager of the West Coast studio. I am delighted that Ernst Lubitsch has accepted the post offered him and look forward with absolute conviction and enthusiasm to your joint success in producing Paramount pictures. Not only will you have the loyalty and help of the fine personnel of the studio, but the confidence and complete support of every one in the entire Paramount organization. Albert Kaufman's decision to become a Paramount associate producer is a very fitting and happy move. His talents and experience will find their fruition in this field. Please convey this message to your staff and studio personnel along with my very best wishes and assure them of my complete confidence in them. Paramount is behind you all to a man.

"Cordially yours,
"ADOLPH ZUKOR."

Whether or not Mr. Cohen is planning to form his own producing unit, as has been reported, possibly in association with Cecil B. DeMille, cannot be ascertained.

First a Writer on Economics

Emanuel Cohen was born in Hartford, Conn., on August 5, 1892, and was educated in the public schools of that city, being graduated in 1912 from the College of the City of New York. After his graduation, and up to the time he entered the service of Pathe News, he devoted his talents to writing on politics and economics.

The career of Henry Herzbrun in the motion picture industry has been comparatively short. He did not take up his legal duties with Paramount until 1926. Born in New York City in 1885, he attended public schools in New York and Chicago and, ultimately, graduated from the New York Law School. He was admitted to the New York Bar in 1907 and to the California Bar in 1926, when he was made resident attorney for Paramount's West Coast studios.

Ernst Lubitsch was born in Germany and received his early training as an actor under Max Reinhardt. He is now in the process of becoming an American citizen, but prior to his career in the United States he had made a name for himself both here and in Germany as a film director, having to his credit such films of the silent era as "Gypsy Blood," "Passion," starring Pola Negri, and others. He joined Paramount's production branch as supervising director in 1930, having produced for various other Hollywood companies for several years. Since 1930 his Paramount productions have included "The Smiling Lieutenant," "If I Had a Million," "Broken Lullaby," "One Hour with You," "Trouble in Paradise," "Design for Living" and "The Merry Widow," the last-named made for MGM.

Erpi Begins Cuts In Dubbing Fees; Others to Follow

Electrical Research Products has concluded new recording license agreements with Paramount and Warner which include sharply reduced rates for domestic recordings of dubbed versions, foreign versions and trailers. Negotiations for similar reductions are to be begun with other Erpi licensees in the near future.

Compared with the previous rates reductions in some instances are as great as 80 per cent. Royalties for dubbed and foreign versions are entirely new, having been charged previously on the standard basis of $500 per reel, and not covered specifically. The new recording rates for dubbed versions are 25 per cent of the standard reel rate, or $125, while recording rates for foreign versions are set at from $200 to $300 per reel, dependent upon the language involved. Trailer recording royalties are dropped from the previous $500 standard rate to $100 per reel.

No changes have been made in the rates for features, shorts or newsreels, although the amended licenses are regarded by producers as containing generally broader terms. The first amended agreement was made a part of the Warner-Erpi settlement of last June, although adjustment negotiations have been pending for several years. The Paramount adjustment was a consideration in the settlement of a $1,875,000 claim which Erpi filed in the Paramount bankruptcy.

Claud Saunders Honor Guest at Testimonial

Claud Saunders, general manager of Ross Federal Service, was tendered a surprise testimonial dinner last Friday evening at the French Casino, New York, by numerous film men who had some time served with Mr. Saunders when he was in charge of exploitation for Paramount.

Present were: Hal Horne, United Artists; John Goring, lessee of the Criterion; Leon J. Bamberger, sales promotion manager, RKO Radio; A-Mike Vogel, chairman MOTION PICTURE HERALD Round Table Club; Oscar Doob, Loew's Theatres; Fred V. Greene, Jr., exhibitor; Leslie Whelan, eastern publicity director for Harold Lloyd; Vernon Gray, Columbia; E. M. Orowitz, radio commentator; Lee Balsly, ad sales manager, Fox; Fred Walters, New York manager, Ross Federal Service; Harry Royster, district manager, Paramount; P. K. Thomajan, First Division; Edward J. Wall, Paramount real estate department; Russell Moon, Fox, Irwin Zeltner, Loew Theatres exploiteer; Ed Corcoran, Paramount exploiteer in Philadelphia. Wires were received from Al Boasberg, Earl Cunningham, John J. Friedl, George Gambrill, Bob Gary, John Kennebeck, Kenneth Renaud, Rick Ricketson, John Max Rosenfield, Jr., George Smith, Harry Swift, Charles Wagner, Howard Waugh and William Wright.

"Rumba" Preview in Miami

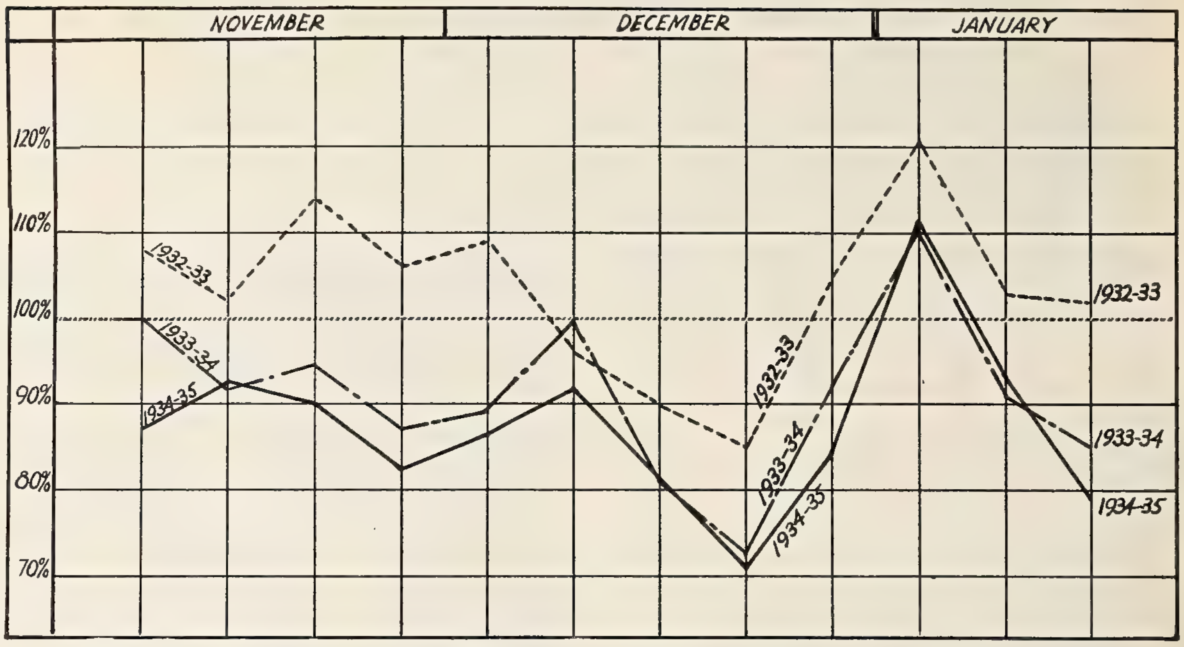
Paramount held the premiere of "Rumba" at the Olympia theatre in Miami, Florida, last week, with large street crowds and a packed house reported.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the business done in twelve key cities during the Christmas holiday period for three years. Each line shows the receipts from these cities for the twelve weeks from November 3 to January 19 for the year marked. The cities used are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, and San Francisco. The gross for the first week of the 1933-34 period is taken as 100 per cent.

New Credit Plan For Technicians

Plans have been developed by the Technical Bureau of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast for the publication of technical production credits as a means of recognition for all unit art directors, first and second cinematographers, film editors and sound production and dubbing mixers. During 1935 a section of the Academy Screen Achievements Bulletin will be devoted to these technical credits, which will be listed under each production, as well as alphabetically by individual names, to indicate professional grouping and production credits.

The board of judges for the scientific or technical award met last week to consider nominations submitted by studios and equipment companies. Technical methods and devices developed during 1934 are eligible. Final decision will be announced at the Awards Banquet February 27. Carl Dreher is chairman of the board of judges.

Members of the several sections of the Technicians branch are considering productions nominated, to select the three which will be placed on the final ballot for vote of the entire Academy membership.

Name Contest Judges

Five trade paper editors, including A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and Red Kann, editor of MOTION PICTURE DAILY, will decide the "Ruggles of Red Gap" contest sponsored by Paramount, and running from February 15 to April 12.

Heads Film Board

Peter Stewart of Warner has been reelected president of the Portland, Ore., Film Board of Trade. Other officers are: Lou Amacher, MGM, first vice-president; Frank Clark, Paramount, second vice-president; Howard Mapes, Star Film, treasurer.

Films Better, Says Legion Executive

Standards of screen entertainment are immeasurably higher today than they were prior to formation of the Legion of Decency and the subsequent campaign to eliminate indecent motion pictures, the Rev. Edward Roberts Moore, executive director of the Catholic Charities of New York and secretary of the New York Legion of Decency, said Monday. Father Moore was one of three speakers in a symposium broadcast over station WEAF. The other two speakers were Dr. Howard M. LeSourd, dean of the Graduate School of Boston University, and Dr. William B. Millar, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Foundation of the United States of America.

"Since July 15 a mere handful of pictures has been placed on the so-called 'C' list, the limbo of objectionable pictures, formerly a well-populated classification, and many are listed as entirely approved," said Father Moore.

Dr. LeSourd supported Father Moore's opinion and added his belief that no matter what factors are responsible for the improvement in moral tone of films, "the improvement is here and should be taken advantage of."

Dr. Millar disagreed with Father Moore on the effects of films on juvenile audiences, particularly as leading to crime or too great a preoccupation with sex.

"The heroes of righteousness are, and always have been, more appealing to youth than the 'bad man,'" said Mr. Millar. "The average boy, movie-trained or otherwise, much prefers to be a cop than a gangster."

Smith in Hollywood

Lou Smith, of the home office, is in Hollywood conferring with Tom Baily, Paramount studio publicity head. The two will cover 50 cities on an exploitation tour in the near future.

EXHIBITORS USE BLOCK SALES FIGHT AS WEDGE FOR MORE CANCELLATION

MPPDA Answers Richey's Charge It Refused to Permit Canceling of All Films Listed as Class C by Decency Legion

Independent exhibitor groups are using block booking opposition of public organizations as a wedge with which to obtain greater cancellation privileges under the code, the while distributors are building up a defense against the Culkin and Celler federal control bills which would bar block sales.

In Detroit, H. M. Richey, head of the local Allied States exhibition units, blames the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America for "the refusal of distributors to cancel any and all pictures listed as Class C by the Legion of Decency." Mr. Richey accuses the MPPDA members of violating a promise permitting of such procedure.

MPPDA officials in New York this week pointed out that there was no offer on the part of distributors to the exhibitors that they could cancel any and all pictures listed as Class C by the Legion of Decency. The offer made public by the producers and distributors is the unlimited privilege of cancellation of any and all feature pictures produced and nationally released by them on or before July 15, 1934, against which a general protest on moral grounds was raised in the community in which the theatre was located.

Mr. Richey's complaint was made known in Detroit the middle of January, his charge specifically involving refusal of the Paramount exchange to cancel "Limehouse Blues" on moral grounds. The release date on this picture was Nov. 9, 1934, later than the period covered by the general cancellation privilege.

Under the code, however, "Limehouse Blues" could have been canceled under the terms of the 10 per cent cancellation clause as the result of taking a complete block from the distributor.

MPPDA officials declared that an exhibitor who desires to cancel a picture released before July 15 on the grounds stated has the opportunity to ask the distributor and, in the case of disagreement, have the matter determined by the local grievance board.

Points to Block Buying

Mr. Richey's excuse for the exhibition by his members of Class C pictures released since July 15 is the claim that they were compelled to take these pictures in complete blocks. The 10 per cent clause is applicable in such a situation.

In the Michigan Catholic of January 17, Mr. Richey made a flat statement that theatre owners cannot cancel any Class C pictures.

"By buying pictures in groups every theatre owner is able to secure his pictures at a discount of at least 20 per cent over the price he would necessarily pay if he bought them individually," said one Hays office official this week. "Hence, he is in a position to pay for and shelve at least one out of five of the pictures that he buys without any financial loss to himself over what he would pay for the same attraction if he bought only those which he thought would be box office winners."

Under the terms of all exhibition contracts, any theatre can at any time refuse to play any picture by paying the film rental, it was pointed out.

72 Theatres "Warned"

The Detroit Legion of Decency recently issued a "warning" to 72 theatres in the territory which had shown either one of two disapproved pictures and branding the theatres in question as "unworthy of patronage by those who took the Legion of Decency pledge." Practically all the theatres specified were members of Allied of Michigan.

Last summer in Minneapolis Al Steffes, president of Allied Theatres of the Northwest, played the nudist picture, "Elysia" for nine weeks at one of his theatres and canceled "Alice in Wonderland" in order to extend the engagement of Mae West in "She Done Him Wrong."

Recently Mr. Steffes has been playing the stage production of "Sailor Beware" at one of his houses, at the same time advertising that the play could not possibly be made into a motion picture.

The bill introduced by Representative Culkin at Washington calls for absolute prohibition of block booking and, in addition, requires producers and distributors to provide accurate synopses of all pictures offered to exhibitors before they are released. The Celler bill proposes to put the motion picture industry under a federal motion picture commission to prevent restraint upon open competition and to eliminate block booking.

Exhibitor Answers Mrs. Gilman

Last week in Richmond, Va., Mrs. Robbins Gilman, chairman of the Parents and Teachers Association, advocated national support of the Culkin bill but she met with determined opposition from Morton G. Thalheimer, president of the MPTO of Virginia, who asked if, by the same reasoning, federal censorship of newspapers, magazines, books and radio would not also be in order.

"The public sets the style in what it wants in entertainment," Mr. Thalheimer said. "If that style is not acceptable nor adaptable to adolescent children, then it is the responsibility of the home rather than of society to protect the child from what may be harmful in that entertainment."

To destroy wholesale distribution of motion pictures would be as disastrous to the exhibitor as to the distributor, Arthur L. Mayer, former advertising and publicity executive of Paramount and currently operating the first-run Rialto in New York, said this week. The resultant increase in film selling costs and rentals, Mr. Mayer declared, would close hundreds of theatres in outlying districts.

Ten Per Cent Privilege Applies to Films Released Since Production Code Administration Started, Exhibitors Reminded

From the reports of 30 exchange centers, no cancellations were received on two Mae West pictures, "She Done Him Wrong" and "I'm No Angel," and the two films had at least 500 first repeat bookings, in many situations two, three and even four repeats. On "Alice in Wonderland," in the same territories, there were 110 cancellations.

It is primarily because of block booking that many highly artistic and socially valuable pictures are shown today, said Mr. Mayer.

"There have been some excellent independent productions this season," he pointed out. "They were so well written, cast and directed that they were distributed by major companies. Sold under a block booking system they were forced into many theatres which under no other circumstances would have played them. I refer, for instance, to Hecht and MacArthur's 'Crime Without Passion,' King Vidor's 'Our Daily Bread,' and Laurence Stallings' 'The First World War.'

"If reformers are genuinely anxious to ascertain what happens to pictures of the type they approve, let them consult Paramount, United Artists and Fox as to their receipts on these pictures compared with the receipts of average Hollywood productions. Let them ascertain the percentage of cancellations on these pictures under the 10 per cent cancellation clause."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Riding his automobile eastward from high-spotting with California's writing and acting folk, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., stopped at Salome, Arizona, a tiny group of shacks, for a bowl of soup and some ham-and-eggs. A huge picture of President Roosevelt boomed forth from behind the counter, flanked on the right by a chromo of Mae West and on the left a Coca-Cola ad of Jean Harlow. Someone had drawn mustachios on the lips of both the ladies, but F. D. beamed benevolently down, unharmed. "How come?" he asked a tough-looking guy who brought him the soup.

"Wanna try to disfigure him?" said he, belligerently. "Why, I'd gouge your eyes out with my own knuckles if you as much suggested!"

More touching was Mr. Vanderbilt's experience on the road a few miles further on, where an old woman and her still-in-the-teens son flagged him. They stood behind a semi-decomposed Chevvy, the owner of which, a lass weighing less than 90 pounds and nearing the end from tuberculosis, had given them a ride. She'd been a dancer in Porto Rico and later the Hawaiian Islands. Seems she made enough money to buy a secondhand car, ship to 'Frisco, and drive home, with her ten-year-old son, to await the Reaper. But a broken rear-spring sat them down on the highway. That was 22 hours before Vanderbilt arrived on the scene. Someone had stopped and picked up the lass to rush her to a hospital. She died in their arms.

The older lady and her seventeen-year-old son cried all the way in and wanted to pay Vanderbilt for the ride. Kansas City was their home. They had migrated to California in October, just before election, to be on hand for "Uppie" Sinclair's Epic; but there was no pot of gold at the rainbow's base, only curses and slander.

From Eli Sugarman comes the yarn about a Chicago vaudeville agent, known for his low booking salaries, who called a team to fill in at an amateur show. The husband of the team answered the telephone.

"Can you play the Engletown for me Tuesday night?" asked the agent.

"How much?" queried the actor.

"Two bucks apiece and only one show," replied the booker, benevolently.

"Just a minute and I'll ask the wife." Five minutes later the actor got back to the phone.

"Hello," said he, "my wife wants to know what's the picture."

On the first of January in 1937, less than two years hence, the Ontario government's legal guardianship of the Dionne quintuplets expires, and then the Dionnes themselves will be faced with the economically troublesome problem of supporting their flock of offspring on the income from a $100,000 trust fund accumulated since their birth and anticipated between now and 1937, from motion picture newsreel agreements and news and feature syndicates.

COLLEEN MOORE'S $500,000 doll house built over a period of years by this little lass with the smilin' Irish eyes, will sail in March down the blue Pacific through the Canal and up the Atlantic to New York on a public exhibition tour of the world, at a-nickel-a-look, to realize Colleen's ambition of a million dollar fund for crippled kiddies.

Special crates of five-ply wood, especially constructed with thick rubber interiors, have been designed for the fabulous creation of the actress.

The premiere will be held in New York shortly after the house arrives. Following the showing there of several weeks, the house will tour the United States for two years and will then be carted around the principal world capitals.

Scores of noted artisans have cooperated in the construction of the doll house, which has floor space of 81 square feet, weighs two tons, and contains many art treasures in miniature.

Miss Moore recently insured the hobby for $420,000, and at the same time revealed a secret which only a comparative few of her intimates have known. For nine years she has been creating this doll's house—"the most wonderful one that ever has been built in the history of the world, a veritable fairy castle to thrill the heart of every child," so we are told. Its completion has marked the fulfillment of Miss Moore's own childhood dream, made possible by her earnings as a screen star.

The design is in the form of a castle, and it is decorated with murals by noted artists illustrating the Biblical, Mother Goose and fairytale legends dear to the heart of childhood. More than 3,000 exquisite miniature objects embellish the 20 or more individual chambers—priceless little ornaments of gold, silver and pearl. All of the conveniences of the modern home are contained therein, including electricity, running water, a radio, a cathedral organ which plays, a tiny silver nightingale which sings.

Delay of Antitrust Trial Is Expected

Elevation of United States District Judge C. B. Faris to the U. S. circuit court of appeals probably will result in a delay in the trial of Harry M. Warner, Gradwell A. Sears, Herman Starr, Abel Cary Thomas, Ned E. Depinet and George J. Schaefer on charges of conspiracy to violate the Sherman anti-trust act, it was indicated in St. Louis this week. Likewise there will be a postponment in the court hearing on the same charge against the various Warner Bros., Paramount and RKO companies named in the same indictment as defendants.

Meanwhile, bonds of $2,500 each for the six individual defendants were set by the United States marshal's office in New York Saturday.

Scheduled to move to the higher court, it is reported that Judge Faris does not desire to be concerned in a long drawn out and complicated legal battle as the case promises to be.

Corporate defendants in the case are Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Vitaphone Corp., First National Pictures, Inc., Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp., General Theatrical Enterprises, Paramount Pictures Distributing Co., Paramount Pictures Distributing Corp. and RKO Distributing Corp.

Seeking $6,080,000 in damages, Colcata Corp., Pasadena, Cal., and H. L. Gumbiner, Los Angeles theatre operator, this week filed a joint conspiracy suit under the Sherman anti-trust law against Fox West Coast, Downtown Theatres, Inc., Fox-Cosmopolitan Theatres Co., Ltd. and several major distributors.

GB Has 2,500 Accounts, Says Lee

GB Productions has closed approximately 2,500 accounts for its product to date, said Arthur A. Lee, vice-president, this week. There are 70 salesmen throughout the country operating from Fox exchanges, but concentrating solely on GB product and having no connection with Fox.

Of the 16 features on its 1934-35 schedule eight already have been released, Mr. Lee said, and the company's sales force has started selling the second eight. Those released to date include "Little Friend," "Evensong," "Evergreen," "Princess Charming," "Jack Ahoy," "Chu Chin Chow," "The Iron Duke," and "Power."

"Man of Aran," now in its 16th week in New York, is one of the company's second eight, as is "Lover Divine," formerly titled "The Unfinished Symphony." Other pictures to be released here this season are "The Man Who Knew Too Much," starring Nova Pillbeam and Leslie Banks; "The Camels Are Coming," with Jack Hulburt; one untitled Conrad Veidt picture and one George Arliss, as yet untitled; "My Heart is Calling" and the eighth as yet unselected.

GB this week closed a product deal with the RKO metropolitan circuit, involving 45 theatres in Greater New York, the first picture to be "Evergreen." A deal also was closed this week in Washington, D. C., with Radin & Levine for first run of all GB product at the Belasco theatre, starting with the first group of eight.

Discussing various published reports of the past few weeks about possible reorganization of the company in America, Mr. Lee on Monday said: "There is no reorganization contemplated. The men in charge of each department are entirely satisfactory and while there may be changes from time to time as is necessary with any new organization we believe the men in the home office and in the field are entirely capable of handling the American situation." Mr. Lee also denied that John Barrymore completed work on a GB production while in London, as was reported, or that the company had placed the star under contract. Likewise reports of a Hollywood contract for Jessie Matthews, GB star of "Evergreen," are absolutely without foundation, it was said. Miss Matthews is under an exclusive long term contract to GB.

LOS ANGELES ZONING SCHEDULE APPROVED

Distributors Modify Opposition to Admission Price Basis for Clearance; Schedule Model

The Code Authority last week in New York approved the clearance and zoning schedule for Los Angeles territory—the first plan to be given official sanction of the industry under the NRA—and immediately took steps to set up schedules in other key cities which have submitted plans for approval.

In approving the Los Angeles schedule, distributors modified their opposition to the admission price basis, and the schedule as now set up is actually predicated on admissions with the understanding that distributors can sell seven days' protection in second-run situations where admissions are identical.

Under the terms set up in the Los Angeles schedule, theatres charging 40 cents for evening performances will play 21 days after downtown first-runs; houses with 35-cent admissions will play 28 days after first-run, and theatres charging 30 cents are allowed to play 35 days after first-run. For houses charging 25 cents, showings are set back 49 days. The Code Authority is expected to hand down an official order on the schedule within ten days, at which time the plan will go into effect.

The Los Angeles plan will serve as a model for other schedules. It took the Code Authority more than five weeks to come to a decision on the approved plan. With the exception of three individual zoning appeals where theatres overlap, the schedule has been approved in full.

Kansas City Schedule Up

On Thursday the Kansas City schedule comes up for discussion and, probably, final disposition.

Distributor opposition to the Los Angeles schedule was overcome by the Code Authority when it provided for protection of exchanges in the event of an increased demand for prints under the schedule. The clause stipulates that where an exchange usually has a quota of six prints, and under the new schedule has eight similar second-run availabilities, the distributor can sell two of the eight runs either before or after the remaining six theatres.

Kansas City Plan Acceptance Seen

It was reported Tuesday that the Kansas City plan is in such form that it in all probability will be accepted by the Code Authority without much discussion. About four months ago, George J. Schaefer and Edward A. Golden were appointed by the Code Authority to visit Kansas City to work out a schedule with the varied interests there. In that plan there also appears a protection clause for distributors in the event of unreasonable demand for prints.

Under the proposed Kansas City schedule, the first-run protection would be cut 25 days in order to permit 25-cent situations to play 14 days after third subsequent runs charging 20 cents. Theatres charging 15 cents would play 21 days after 20-cent houses, and 10-cent theatres would have to wait 133 days after first-runs. Double feature houses are penalized 30 days after single feature theatres with additional penalties for theatres distributing premiums.

Following the Kansas City hearing and determination the Code Authority will try to dispose quickly of the schedules for New Haven, Boston and Detroit. Because Buffalo exhibitors have withdrawn their proposed schedule in favor of individual protests, that territory will have no clearance and zoning schedule.

The Cleveland protection agreement, which expired on December 31, was an exhibitor document and with its expiration local exhibitors no longer watch each other for violations. It therefore has devolved upon the exchanges, in order to protect their first-run accounts, to see that pictures are booked according to the availability dates of each theatre in accordance with the classifications as set up in the agreement.

Seven Added to Local Boards

The Code Authority this week announced the appointments of seven new members of local code boards to fill vacancies, as follows:

New York Grievance: Unaffiliated distributor, Jack Bellman, succeeding Harry Thomas, resigned.

Manhattan, Bronx, Staten Island and Westchester Advisory Committee: Unaffiliated distributor, Arthur Greenblatt, to replace Jack Bellman.

Minneapolis Clearance and Zoning: Unaffiliated subsequent run exhibitor, Harry Greene, to replace A. W. Baehr, resigned.

Des Moines Clearance and Zoning: Unaffiliated distributor, Mel Evidon, to replace Joseph Levy, resigned.

Milwaukee Clearance and Zoning: Subsequent run unaffiliated exhibitor, Charles H. Braun, to replace W. L. Ainsworth, resigned.

Boston Grievance: Impartial member, Professor H. F. Whitney, succeeding George R. Farnum, resigned, and affiliated exhibitor, Victor Morris, replacing J. H. Brennan.

A surplus of $30,000 accumulated in 1934 in Code Authority operation is to be credited to industry members on assessments for the first half of 1935, it was revealed Tuesday at the hearing in Washington before Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth.

Liberty to Make at Least 12 During 1935-36 Season

Liberty Pictures will produce a minimum of 12 features during the 1935-36 season, and at an increased negative cost, according to the present plans of M. H. Hoffman, president, who last week completed conferences in New York with Budd Rogers, general sales manager, and other executives. Mr. Hoffman left last weekend for the Coast to start production on "The Old Homestead," eleventh of the 12 planned by the company for this season.

Spirit to Be Basis for Film Foundation Approval

"Spirit, attitude and interpretation" will be the basis of the formulas for motion pictures approved by the recently organized Motion Picture Foundation of the United States of America, Inc., rather than codes and regulations, according to a statement issued last week by Dr. William B. Miller, secretary of the Foundation. The organization was formed to sponsor the production and distribution of "better motion pictures."

Dr. Miller expressed the belief that the processes to be adopted substantially will take the gamble out of production. Stories recommended by the story selection committee, according to the plan, will be passed on to the production committee. If approved the stories will go into production. The distribution corporation of the Foundation will not itself produce pictures or own or operate theatres, but will act as an independent agency for producers whose product meets the requirements of the Foundation.

13 PLANKS IN PRODUCERS' PLATFORM TO IMPROVE ACTORS' CONDITIONS

Organized Players Attack Proposal as Lacking Enforcement Machinery; Plea to Government Still Holds

Producers' "Sweeping Concessions", Now Being Voted on by Branches of Academy, Include "Deal Contract" End

Action taken suddenly last week by Hollywood producers to establish for actors a new high standard of working conditions that will serve as "a lasting foundation" and "build harmonious relationships," has struck a snag at the outset. While it was first cited as a "mass victory" for the workers, organized player representation now is assailing the proposal as lacking enforcement machinery.

Rumblings of a strike on March 1st had been heard in the actor ranks because of their apparent inability to win improved conditions from producers, but the employers evidently capitulated to the demands and announced on Wednesday that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences had drawn recommendations for better conditions.

The actors already had petitioned the federal government for relief, charging the producers with having "tricked, hamstrung and lied to them."

"Sweeping concessions" were cited by the producers in their new proposal, among them the abolition of the socalled "deal contract;" arbitration of disputes; provisions for holiday vacations, or double pay if they must be worked; a minimum of Sunday work and reduced Saturday night employment; an eight-hour day, with overtime, on a basic six-day week; revised conditions covering consecutive day-worker employment; strict adherence to the 12-hour rest period; pay for excess makeup time; more exact starting dates; prompt execution of contracts; a new standard minimum weekly contract, and many other "improvements" in the lot of those motion picture players who work by the day or under an agreement which covers but one picture.

Contracts with players receiving in excess of $40,000 a picture will be made on whatever terms are agreeable.

Five-Year Agreement

It is contemplated that the agreement will be effective for five years from March 1, 1935, when the present five-year non-strike agreement expires.

Donald Gledhill, secretary of the Academy, said the proposal is the result of conferences between Academy committees of actors and producers. The final draft already has been forwarded to the members of the respective branches for a vote. The producers, as individual employers and not as Academy members, had deadlocked last month with an NRA committee of five actors, after 11 meetings held to arrive at a set of fair trade practices under the motion picture code.

On the Academy's producer committee which drafted the new agreement were Henry Herzbrun, chairman, Samuel Briskin, J. J. Gain, William Koenig and Irving Thalberg. B. B. Kahane is an ex-officio member. Working with this group was an actor's committee of the Academy, composed of Lionel Atwill, chairman, DeWitt Jennings, George Irving, Raymond Hatton and Mitchell Lewis. If the recommendations meet with the approval of Academy branches, they will be consented to immediately by the producing companies, Mr. Gledhill said.

WRITERS FILE WORKING DEMANDS

Hollywood screen writers have submitted a brief to Major J. O. Donovan, head of the Coast Code Authority office, outlining their demands for employment conditions which closely follows the demands made on producers by actors. The brief will be forwarded to Washington.

The writers ask employment on specific contract only, no loan of services without the written consent of the writer, pay for travel time, full screen credit, elimination of understanding that writers pay costs of lost plagiarism suits, restriction of suspension period, one week's notification on cancellation of week-to-week contract, a weekly minimum of $50 for readers. The brief was signed by Ralph Block, John Emerson, James Gleason, Dudley Nichols and Waldemar Young.

The Screen Actors' Guild, independent group, which is not only unfriendly to the Academy but is also committed to unionization via an American Federation of Labor charter, immediately belittled the Academy's efforts in advancing the new standard of working conditions.

"This is not an Academy achievement," said a Guild statement. "The concessions which are offered resulted only from pressure by the Guild. They will continue to be offered only so long as that pressure remains." Both the Guild and the actors' branch of the Academy have been engaged for a year in a competitive battle to represent Hollywood's players.

A "Bad Check" Contract

"The producers gave free-lance actors a contract through the Academy five years ago," explained the Guild directors. "It turned out to be a bad check in less than a year. The statement given to the press explaining the socalled new Academy contract is inaccurate. There is nothing in it to prevent producers from requiring actors to waive its terms; there is nothing to prevent a new supplemental contract; there are no means of enforcement, and the terms for free-lance actors who work by the day are even worse than at present.

"What the producers have done is to take the Guild demands and say they will grant some of them through the Academy. Producers think actors will be fooled into deserting the Guild. Five dreary years have passed with no attempt by the Academy to better actor conditions."

Unofficially it was learned that the Guild will continue to advance the petition at Washington for intervention by the Government in obtaining relief and better conditions. This is in line with the Guild's idea of gaining recognition as the bargaining agent for Hollywood talent.

The Guild has been campaigning for a basic eight-hour day with a 15-hour rest period, one hour of pay added for every overtime hour; abolition of the "Call Bureau," Hollywood channel for engaging players; and curtailment of layoffs to one week for 40-week contract players, instead of single days throughout the year.

The Academy proposal takes the form of a revised "Minimum Weekly Contract for Artists" and revised "Conditions Governing the Employment of Day Players Employed at a Daily Rate in Excess of $15.00 Per Day." The "outstanding achievements" from the actor viewpoint in improving free-lance working conditions were set forth by the Academy as follows:

1. Elimination of "Deal Contract"

The "deal contract" will be eliminated. One-picture employment will be offered only on the new "Conditions for Day Players," or with a guarantee of at least one week's employment on the new "Weekly Minimum Contract." The only exception will be that actors receiving $40,000 or more per picture may make any type of contract they wish.

2. Enforcement of 12-Hour Rest Period Guarantee

The clause protecting the actor on a weekly contract against being required to return within less than 12 hours after dismissal for the day will be continued in the new contract. As a further enforcement measure, if the producer does request an artist to return in less than 12 hours and the artist does voluntarily return, the artist will receive a full additional day's pay. The producer will pay the penalty salary whether or not the call back is caused by an emergency.

The producing companies will also keep open for inspection complete records of dismissal times and return calls.

3. Consecutive Employment for Day Players

Day players will be paid for consecutive days, Sundays and holidays excepted unless they work on such days, from the beginning of the engagement whether or not they actually work every day. If the producer terminates the engagement and then calls the actor back within less than two weeks to make further scenes, the actor will be paid for any intervening time during which he was available and did not work elsewhere.

If the producer terminates the engagement and then calls the actor back after more than two weeks to make further scenes, the actor will be expected to return at the same salary but only if he is not otherwise employed or committed to other employment.

The only exception will be in connection with retakes, process and trick shots, trailers, changes, added scenes and foreign versions, for which the actor will be paid only for the days on which he actually works.

NEW TERMS FOR ACTORS

4. Conversion From Daily to Weekly Basis

Whenever an actor takes an engagement on a daily basis he will also specify the rate at which he is willing to work on a weekly basis. If the studio finds the day player is needed for a week or more it will have the option of converting the engagement to the weekly basis at the agreed upon weekly salary. This conversion may be retroactive to seven days, but the player will keep any overtime pay he may have earned before being notified of the change and he will always receive at least the weekly salary rate he originally agreed upon for every week or part of a week that he works.

5. Holidays To Be Vacation With Pay

Actors on weekly contract will not have to work on the six principal holidays—New Year's, Fourth of July, Memorial Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving, and Christmas, but will receive these as holidays with full pay. The actors will receive the 12-hour rest period for these holidays besides the full 24-hours of the holiday itself.

The only exception is that in case of emergency the actor may be required to work, but the actor will then receive double pay for the holiday.

In addition, the producing companies will make it a policy not to work on the Sundays preceding or following the holidays, and if the actor is required to work he will receive an additional day's salary.

6. Six-Day Week

The new "Minimum Weekly Contract" will continue the existing provision that the weekly salary is for a six-day week, with the actor entitled to an additional 1-6 of a week's pay if required to work on seven days during any week. But the new contract will specifically provide that when the actor works the six days and receives one day off, whether or not this day is a Sunday, such day off will be a full 24-hours plus the regular 12-hour rest period.

7. Reduction of Saturday Night Work

In computing the 12-hour rest period as guaranteed in the weekly minimum contract, the 24 hours constituting Sunday will be eliminated entirely unless the actor works on Sunday, or unless he has been off for one or more periods of at least 36 consecutive hours during the week. For example, if an actor has worked each day during the week, the studio cannot have him work until 11:30 p.m. Saturday evening and expect him back before 11:30 a.m. Monday without paying him a full day's pay in addition to his weekly salary.

8. Privilege of Arbitration

Weekly contract players and day players, regardless of membership in the Academy, will continue to be guaranteed the privilege of having any controversies or claims settled by the "Actors Adjustment Committee" of the Academy. This is a committee composed entirely of actors, subject only to final arbitration by the "Conciliation Committee," which consists of one actor, one production executive, a writer, a technician and a director, all of whom must be employees of other studios and entirely disinterested in the particular case. However, arbitration by the Academy, which has previously been compulsory upon both parties, will in the future be optional to the actor. The producing company will be obligated to submit to having the controversy arbitrated and decided by the Academy if the actor so specifies at the time the contract is executed, but unless the actor voluntarily wishes to secure the benefit of the Academy facilities for adjustment and settlement he will not be required to bring his case to the Academy.

9. Continuous Hours for Day Players

Day players will continue to receive the guarantee of eight hours pay for each day even if required to work less than eight hours.

The clause in the former "Day Player Agreement" allowing the studio to arrange a four-hour lay-off during the day has been abolished. The pay of day players will be on a continuous basis, except for meal periods, from the first call until the actor is dismissed for the day.

10. New Provision for Making Day Calls Binding

Under the new "Terms and Conditions for Day Players," verbal calls cannot be cancelled after noon of the day preceding the date agreed on for the actor to begin work. Up to noon of the day before such call, the employment can be cancelled by either the producer or the actor, but after that time it is binding and the actor will receive at least one day's pay whether or not be is needed. The only exception is that the actor may accept a "weather permitting" call.

Whenever the studio enters into a written agreement in advance for a day player the studio must specify the exact starting date and is then bound by that starting date, regardless of changes in schedule or of the weather.

11. Prompt Execution of Contract

Whenever a weekly contract as submitted by a producing company, is signed and returned by the artist by noon of the next succeeding business day, it will automatically be binding on the company without waiting for the producer's signature.

12. Pay for Excessive Makeup Time

When an actor working by the day must report early to have elaborate makeup or wardrobe put on by the studio makeup or wardrobe employees, the time the makeup or wardrobe departments require him in excess of one hour will constitute working time.

13. More Exact Starting Date

The "on or about" phrase as to the starting date of weekly minimum contracts will be interpreted as not more than 24 hours before or after the date specified, instead of the 48 hours which it has been.

The wording of the location starting date clause for weekly contract players will also be revised so that under no circumstances can a studio hold an artist on location for more than 24 hours without beginning his salary.

ACTORS CAMPAIGNING FOR VAUDEVILLE

The American Federation of Actors, a union in the East, has set out to "blaze the trail for a return of real variety entertainment to the nation's theatres," in an attempt to provide work for stage actors. To revive the public demand for stageshows and to "prove" to the theatre owners that the public wants vaudeville, the Federation is detailing its members to visit theatres to urge theatre managers to "give variety a chance to prove its worth."

At the same time the union started another movement to replace the word "vaudeville" with "variety," because "vaudeville has been knocked around so much."

National Archives To Include Films, Sound Recordings

A vast national collection of motion pictures and sound recordings which are indicative of phases of the history and development of the United States will be installed in the new National Archives Building at Washington now nearing completion, it was made known this week.

Such a grouping of material, thought to be the first attempt by any nation to centrally collect and store this type of material, was made possible by the act creating the National Archives. Provision is made for the archivist of the United States to receive such films and recordings as other government agencies may care to transfer to the Archives Building, and also to accept material produced by non-governmental units.

Eight fireproof vaults have been constructed for the storage of the collection, under the supervision of the chief of the division of motion pictures and sound recordings, Captain John G. Bradley, who was appointed this week by Robert D. W. Connor, archivist. A model projection room will be part of the equipment of the building. The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America has informed the archivist that he will be offered prints of numerous company produced films of historic interest. In addition news and educational films will be collected. The sound recordings are expected to include all the broadcasts of the speeches of the President and others.

Government Will Seek Possession of "Ecstacy"

United States attorney Martin W. Conboy in New York will bring condemnation proceedings against the Czechoslovakian motion picture, "Ecstacy," acting under orders of the Treasury Department at Washington. Importation of the film was prohibited by department order recently, but the importer had indicated he will not send the picture out of the country.

Government Plans Shorts Series on Housing Projects

Encouraged by the cooperation which the exhibitors of the country have given, first in the distribution of booklets and other literature and, second, in the showing of a trailer produced by National Screen Service Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration at Washington is canvassing the industry to learn whether the theatres will run a series of shorts which it is proposed to produce.

Letters asking exhibitors to say whether they will run these pictures have been sent out by Housing Administrator James A. Moffett, in which he says:

"The activities of the Federal Housing Administration have had magnificent support and cooperation from the motion picture industry, and in recent weeks we have had many requests for motion pictures which could be shown in the theatres of the country and which would bring to the attention of audiences the significance of better housing and finer living.

"It is well recognized that the economic recovery which the better housing movement will unmistakably create will have an important effect on the frequency with which more and more people will patronize the motion picture theatres."

When the national housing act was passed last June one of the first moves was to contact motion picture theatre operators, officials of the administration looking upon the average theatre as a "community center" and one of the quickest and most convincing means of reaching home owners with modest incomes. The exhibitors throughout the country were asked to distribute to their patrons booklets and other literature pertaining to the work of the administration, in which they unanimously responded.

Following this a trailer was produced, 130 feet in length, outlining in sound the method of government insured loans for repair, improvement and modernization of homes.

It is now planned to produce a series of sound shorts, carrying the idea of the trailer still further, and negotiations have been undertaken with producers with a view to determining how this can best be accomplished. The administration is sponsoring more than 5,000 Better Housing Committees throughout the country, on which are serving mayors, heads of chambers of commerce, and business executives, bankers and architects.

These committees will contact exhibitors who express a willingness to show the better housing films and arrange to notify the residents of their community, the effort being to bring increased audiences to the theatres and add to their prestige in the community. The movement is being aided by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and officials of other independent organizations, officials of the administration said.

TENTATIVE APPROVAL TO PARAMOUNT PLAN

Goes Into Effect February 14 Unless Opposition Develops on Coxe Show Cause Order

The plan of reorganization for Paramount Publix Corporation was given tentative approval in New York last week by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe. Judge Coxe issued an order, returnable February 14, to show cause why the proposed plan, submitted under Section 77-B of the federal bankruptcy act, should not be put into effect on that date. As tentatively approved, the plan shows only slight departure from its original form.

The show cause order and his tentative approval of the plan were granted by Judge Coxe after a series of hearings marked by opposition on the part of minority bond and stock holders. If there is no petition against putting the plan into effect before February 14, reorganization of Paramount will become automatic by the approval of a majority of the stockholders and a two-thirds vote of the corporation's creditors.

Judge Coxe recommended certain modifications to be incorporated in a new draft which will be returned to the court February 14. The changes include a reduction from 6 to 5 per cent interest on the company's old bank debt and a revision of the management section of the plan to give the court the right to veto members of the initial board of directors; substitution of a three-year term for board members instead of the proposed four-year terms, with annual elections of directors after the first three years, and with the cumulative voting of stock authorized after the same period.

"I consider the plan in the main to be a fair and equitable one and with the changes enumerated I will sign an order so stating," said Judge Coxe in his opinion.

The change involving a reduction from 6 to 5 per cent interest on the bank debt would amount to a reduction of approximately $5,500 to each of the 15 creditor banks, and this change is not expected to meet with any serious objections from the bank group.

Medalie Takes Exceptions

Exceptions to the court's opinion on changes in the management provisions were taken by George Z. Medalie, representing an important consolidated creditor group with claims aggregating $14,000,000, and by Archibald Palmer, attorney for a small group of stockholders. Mr. Medalie's group had advocated annual elections of directors in order to eliminate those whose stock interest in Paramount might be disposed of during any year. Mr. Palmer's clients urged the appointment by the court of a board of voting trustees to direct the company at the outset in place of a board of directors elected by the creditors.

In his opinion, Judge Coxe said he did not believe the court could be asked to assume responsibility for a company's management or to impose upon it a divided control of its future.

In considering the major claim settlements, the court pronounced the Paramount Broadway reorganization plan, part of the parent plan, to be reasonable and fair. Judge Coxe dismissed objections to the Broadway plan, which had been made with a view to obtaining the separation of the Paramount Theatre and Building from the company after reorganization, with this pronouncement.

Cash Requirements Not Questioned

The same opinion was given by the court in respect to the Allied Owners' Corporation settlement, which Judge Coxe said, represented months of negotiations on the part of the Paramount trustees, and impressed him as being "reasonable and fair."

The court did not question the cash requirements of the company, including $6,500,000 of new money. Judge Coxe did, however, approve the treatment of debenture holders and the allowance of interest on their claims to Jan. 1, 1935, with the remark that the provisions were fair "because this is a reorganization and not a liquidation." Also the conversion of preferred stock into common at the rate of one for seven was held to be entirely fair on the ground that creditors receiving the preferred in settlement of their claims should be able to have a voice in control through an exchange for voting stock.

That the company's initial board of directors might comprise 18 members instead of the 16 now agreed upon by the various creditor groups was disclosed at the hearing when it was stated that Frank C. Walker, vice-president of Comerford Theatres, may have a place on the board if he desires it. All creditor groups were said to be in accord with this. If Mr. Walker accepts, a second new director probably would be named to the board to facilitate election of an even numbered group as terms expire.

In Washington during the week, the United States Supreme Court denied E. M. Loew, Inc., and other New England concerns a review of the lower court appointment of receivers for two Paramount subsidiaries—Olympia Theatres, Inc., and Olympia Operating Co.—after an attachment had been issued against them in an anti-trust suit in the Federal courts.

An order approving the plan for ending the receivership of Minnesota Amusement Corp., Paramount subsidiary operating about 70 theatres in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, was signed in New York last week by Special Master John E. Joyce. The plan makes William Hamm, Jr., one of the subsidiary's receivers, operator under a short term contract expiring next June 27.

One More Spring

(Fox)

Comedy Drama

Here's a show worthy of a date on any program. Woven of deep human interest stuff, it's packed with drama, sparkles with comedy and glows with romance. It's a depression story, but the subject matter is treated in an intelligent manner. There is no horror or tragedy; rather, there's something inspiring about the whole thing. As it portrays the lives of its characters—particularly the three principals—it is marked by an understandable realism that, instead of being artificially theatric, is sincerely true.

The three forces which motivate the picture, being constantly synchronized, always accentuate one another, and none goes overboard. Where the theme calls for pathos, there is a counterbalancing comedy contrast and vice versa. The elements are pitched to a note of understandable humanness and the picture moves with quiet effectiveness.

The elemental ingredients apply to all the action and personalities in the show. There is drama, tinged with smiles, to the fate of antique dealer Otkar, who, going broke, salvages only a bed slept in by Napoleon. There is drama to the conversation carried on by Elizabeth and the girl in the antique shop. More comedy and drama accrues to the dazed genius violinist, Rosenberg, and his mental reactions to his fate. There's comedy in the policeman's discovery of the bed set up in central park, in Mr. Sweeney's permitting Rosenberg and Otkar to move into his tool house, and in the meeting of Otkar and Elizabeth. More comedy surrounds Sweeney's ambition to play "Machushla" on the fiddle, Rosenberg's mad efforts to teach him how, and the sequences that show Otkar, Elizabeth and Rosenberg maintaining housekeeping in the tool house under a gentleman's "No falling in love" agreement. There's one grand laugh in the scene where Otkar steals the lion's meat as the attendant dances a wild jig to Rosenberg's playing. A touch of sadness tinges the Sweeneys' Christmas party for the three depression waifs, made more poignant by the fate which befalls honest banker Sheridan, who sees his financial empire crumbling through no fault of his own. The drama of Sheridan's attempted suicide turns comic as the lake into which he jumps is only knee deep. There is more of the same quality as Otkar brings him to the tool house to thaw out and Elizabeth explodes in fury.

Then, with the coming of Spring, things change. As a result of befriending an equally penurious musician, Rosenberg gets a job in Oswego, where once before he had made a hit. Mr. Sheridan's bank having weathered the storm with governmental aid, his fortunes are reestablished. When it looks as if the remaining two of the tool house triumvirate must part, Sheridan gives Otkar a job. Then the gentleman's agreement is off and it's love in the spring for him and Elizabeth.

Accepted as a thrilling human story narrated to laughs and tears, one that glows with hope, faith, courage, love interest and heart appeal, the picture may best be sold with the kind of campaign that capitalizes the drawing power of these elements, plus the prestige of the leading cast names.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Devil Dogs of the Air

(Warner-Cosmopolitan)

Romantic Spectacle

Made with the full cooperation of the United States Navy, "Devil Dogs of the Air" affords all the spectacle made familiar in other pictures where similar resources for massive production values were available but overshadows other previous like entertainment as a three-ringed circus does a medicine tent show. It intelligently blends physical actuality with theatrical hokum so that the result, instead of looking like an ad for the Navy, is really amusement. For once that patriotic urge, as an entertainment asset, rather than being dragged in by the heels as a sort of flag-waving device, is an integral part of the story. There is drama, spectacle, romance, comedy, action and thrill. All are so skilfully blended as to provide entertainment for any class of theatregoers in any kind of theatre.

The locale is the San Diego naval air base. The picture starts with a stirring sequence. The Marine Corps is assembled for ceremonies. Across the sky roars a plane to go through some of the most hair-raising stunts flying ever seen. The plane is labeled—"Tommy O'Toole, World's Greatest Aviator." The festivities being ruined, the Commandant orders Lt. Brannigan to ground the flying lunatic. But Tommy cracks up in the yard of Happy Landing cafe, across the way from the post. Then it is revealed that Tommy has come to join the flying marines and to be with his boyhood idol, Brannigan. A pain in the neck to everyone else, but a hero to himself, O'Toole makes mincemeat of all rules and regulations. But Brannigan tolerates him until he tries to muscle in on his girl, Betty Roberts. Even the fact that Tommy made him look foolish by bailing out of a burning plane that he eventually lands, doesn't bother Brannigan much. With laughs and thrills and always the threat of open man-to-man conflict, the picture moves along through Tommy's training days.

Finally a war game maneuver is to be staged. This sequence is the big parade of the Navy. The sea is filled with all kinds of warships from battleships to destroyers. The sky is black with flying fighting craft. Smoke screens are laid. The combined forces go through all the evolutions that would be followed in an actual attack and everything that the Navy uses is displayed. The sequence, running practically a full reel, had the preview audience at tense attention. As the sequence is completed the plane in which Tommy and Brannigan are riding collides with another. Tommy wants to bail out, but, crawling out on the wing, Brannigan holds the severed supports together, enabling his protege to land the "crate" safely. Brannigan accepts a wanted transfer to Quantico, leaving the San Diego Marines to Betty and Tommy.

While the picture has at least as much action, thrill, romance and humor as any other flying picture from "Wings" and "Hell's Angels" and on up, it is also blessed with more hokum, the kind of theatrics that get under the skin of the masses.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. A Cosmopolitan production. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Photographed by Arthur Edeson. Art director, Arthur J. Kooken. Film editor, William Clemens. Supervisor, Lou Edelman. Screen play by Malcolm Stuart Boylan and Earl Baldwin. Based on story by John Monk Saunders. Technical advisor, Lieut.-Colonel Ralph J. Mitchell. P.C.A. Certificate No. 524. ## Shadow of Doubt

Mystery Comedy

A skillful mixture of comedy, melodramatic mystery, color and thrill, plus a satisfying romantic accompaniment, this seems to have all the earmarks of a popular all-audience attraction. All the elements move to the tempo of snappy action and clever dialogue. As received by the preview audience it seems to be that kind of amusement that can fill a niche, because of story, cast and production values, on any theatre's program.

While the settings and atmosphere are sophisticated, the theme material, dialogue, action and situations are popular stuff. Unique to dramatic mystery type, comedy fulfills an important function. That quality, as supplied mainly by Constance Collier, a newcomer, is one of the show's strongest selling points.

The title supplying a direct hint to the picture's character, it's the story of a romance that trod a menacing road. Sim Sturdevant, scion of Park Avenue, is in love with tempestuous movie queen Treena, a young lady very much persona non grata to Aunt Melissa. As she spurns a radio contract which Sim eventually offers Inez Johnson, the complicated romantic and dramatic twists get under way. Following a night-club scuffle with Sim, Hayworth is found dead in his apartment. While apparently endeavoring to cover Sim and Treena, who are suspects, columnist Reed Ryan puts both on the spot. As the case becomes more menacing and complicated, Hayworth's butler is murdered. At this point, Aunt Melissa becomes a potent figure in the story. By devious means and clever deduction, she turns the accusing finger towards Ryan. While he is attempting to remove incriminating evidence in the Sturtevant mansion, Sim discovers him. Follows a wild chase and a thrilling jump from a tower in which Ryan is mortally injured. Confessing the killings and the motives therefor, he clears Sim and Treena as well as all other suspects and makes Melissa a smart detective. Naturally there is the happy ending with Melissa taking Treena to her heart, and preparing a wing in the mansion for her and Sim.

By giving this attraction a little more careful study than is devoted to the regular average attraction and capitalizing upon its comedy, romance, mystery, thrill, excitement and surprise, it should be easily possible to elevate it into a more important asset than the regular program feature. Names in the cast are of more than usual value, and Miss Collier is actually the star.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Nut Farm

Comedy Satire

Here's a comedy satire of Hollywood that's a load of laugh-provoking nonsense. Unlike the general run of Hollywood pictures, either legitimate or caricature, it's made up of stuff that anyone appreciating clean, fast moving comedy can understand. Usually when the film colony's fads, foibles and foolish film-flams are the lampooned subject matter of a show, it's all right for those who have some knowledge of all the town's phoney inside stuff, but the rank and file have a difficult time in judging whether the entertainment is on the level or whether someone is being kidded. In this case, however, all the ingredients are amusing, understandable entertainment and saleable merchandise.

With farcical hokum the principal motivating element, the show is a hilarious lowdown on the sucker-racket. Selling out his grocery store and intent upon buying a California nut farm, Bob Bent sees his plans go awry when his wife Helen falls for the old "get-rich-quick-through-picture-production" game. Promoted industriously by Holland and against the advice of Willie, who knows quite a bit of how the sheep are fleeced, the Bents go through with the deal. Willie comes in as director for the "super-colossal." Dough runs short, but Willie, wise to the tricks of "quickie" production, finally gets the picture finished. At the preview it's a flop; then director Willie transforms himself into an ingenious cutter, and out of the miles of film he snips a grand short comedy. When a deal is made with a big releasing company, Holland tries to butt in again for a share of the profits, only to be soundly thrashed by the hero. The finale has a romantic twist for Willie and Agatha, but the Bents are sure they are destined to be great producers, and despite their experience begin planning for their next effort.

Fun is the thing to sell in this picture. It's all harum-scarum. While there are no magnetic outstanding names, smart showmanship which takes advantage of the wealth of interest-creating material should have no difficulty in overcoming that handicap. Where comedy is the quality that interests audiences, it may be dished out in large and funny doses, assuring patrons that there's a laugh, smile or giggle in every foot of the film.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Hei Tiki

(First Division)

Native Legend

Alexander Markey, it is indicated in something of a foreword by himself, went to the Isle of Ghosts, off New Zealand, with a small group, spent four years with the Maori tribe of natives which inhabits the island, and with their friendly cooperation, produced a motion picture recounting a native legend, and using the natives themselves for the entire cast.

The tale, which is reasonably well told, involves hei tiki, the native jade or bone ornament symbolical of earthly romance, which, in effect, comes into conflict with a tradition that the eldest daughter of the chief shall be in a sense incarcerated until the war god shall come to claim her.

In the nature of a travel subject, the picture has certain elements of interest, but on the whole it is but moderately entertaining. It is emphatically called to exhibitors' attention that the method of selling, chiefly marquee, which was used by the Broadway theatre showing the film is not to be recommended. In that case, the "love-charm" idea inherent in the title was played and played ad nauseam, the intent of such selling being obvious. If nothing else, it is highly misrepresentative.

The natives performers are, in the main, capable after their own fashion. A musical accompaniment is appropriate, and Mr. Markey interjects comparatively few off-screen comments of an explanatory nature.

The tale recounts the manner in which the chief's eldest daughter accidentally, in a moment of freedom, meets the son of the chief of a rival tribe, the boy acting as a spy. The girl is afraid to leave with him, and he later returns, with companions, and through trickery, impersonates the war god and takes the girl. The secret is discovered, the warriors give chase, and a battle at the home encampment of the boy is ended only when the girl confronts her father, and he saves the day by interpreting the war god legend in such a manner that a reconciliation of the two tribes is effected.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced in New Zealand by Alexander Markey. Distributed by First Division. All native cast. Running time, 86 minutes. Release date, February 1, 1935. General audience classification.

Lottery Lover

Comedy with Music

A likable comedy drama in which comedy is the predominating element, and music of a rather tuneful variety has an engagingly sustaining place, this picture is light and airy, amusing and entertaining.

When a group of young naval cadets land in Paris on shore leave from a training cruise, they lay siege to the heart of a beautiful comedienne, and by lot select the shyest of their lot to represent them. Therein is engendered the picture's comedy, the romance develops between the winner of the lottery and the young chorus girl who is hired by their mentor and guide to rehearse the representative.

The personable Lew Ayres and attractive "Pat" Paterson share the lead. Peggy Fears, of the New York stage, is the dymamic, smartly dressed French actress. Sterling Holloway and Alan Dinehart provide a major portion of the more direct comedy. The comedy turn appears to be the best selling angle, making the most of what the cast leaders may mean to the individual audience, and taking advantage of the local exploitation opportunities suggested by the title and the central story circumstance.

The boys hit Paris, all bent on fun and excitement, with the sole exception of the reserved and shy Ayres, whose interests turn not in the direction of femininity. Dinehart, impecunious man about town, promises to show them the sights—at a price. They attend the theatre in a body, fall under the spell of the glamorous Miss Fears, and Dinehart, again for a price, sees to it that the boys shall do something about it in the short space of their shore leave. He proposes a lottery, and Ayres, most disinterested of the group, is chosen to take the pooled money of his fellows, and one of the comedienne's garters, and woo her in three days.

For rehearsal Dinehart obtains the services of Miss Paterson, young Canadian girl working in the show's chorus to earn the price of a ticket home. Failing entirely to comprehend the spirit of the idea, Ayres is like a wooden Indian in his rehearsal, and, if possible, even more so in the actual meeting with Miss Fears. There is considerable entertainment in the ensuing complications, when Miss Fears finally threatens to call the police if her clumsy pursuer continues to bother her. Dinehart comes to the defense of the plan by arranging with Miss Fears to be a good sport and cause Ayres to believe she has succumbed to his advances. She agrees, but meanwhile Ayres has discovered he is in love with his rehearsal partner. Eventually Miss Fears does the right thing, when Miss Paterson comes to her asking that she renounce her apparent love for Ayres, by leaving the two alone in her apartment, while the boys outside are happy in the belief that their proxy has satisfactorily represented them in their amorous holiday intent. As the boys leave, Miss Paterson prepares to return home, for a later meeting with Ayres.

There is no reason why any type of audience should not find enjoyment in the film. The song numbers are good and lively, and are themselves a selling point.—Aaronson, New York.

Comedy Drama

The wholly delightful play of Ferenc Molnar, which was a success on the stage, has been transferred by Universal into an equally delightful motion picture, with William Wyler's capable direction and uniformly excellent performances responsible in large measure. The charming story of the extremely unsophisticated orphan girl who seeks to be a "good fairy" to someone quite unknown to her, merely for the sake of doing good, and who finds himself enmeshed in excitement and romance as a result, this picture blends much amusing comedy, a bit of drama and a touch of not too serious pathos. In a word, the picture is highly entertaining, calculated to provoke the chuckle of thorough, though quiet enjoyment, rather than the hearty laughter of ribald comedy.

As the unsophisticated girl, Margaret Sullavan makes the most of her role, while Frank Morgan and Reginald Owen maintain a high ENCHANTING and whimsical little orphan girls have become the new fad in movie heroines. None has been more appealing and captivating than the latest, Margaret Sullavan, who is the Luisa of "The Good Fairy." She plays the role, interpreted by Helen Hayes, when the sparkling Molnar comedy graced the stage of Broadway.

"The Good Fairy" is no sappy account of a suffering orphan who is rescued from drudgery by a kindly bachelor. It is smart, spicy comedy. The high merriment is balanced skillfully by genuine pathos and charm.

Miss Sullavan is an exquisite Luisa and her support is great. With Frank Morgan, Herbert Marshall and Reginald Owen in the principal roles no comedy need lack spirit.

"The Good Fairy" is lighter, but no less distinguished than the star's previous hits, "Only Yesterday" and "Little Man, What Now?" It proves Miss Sullavan to be as fetching a comedienne as she is an impressive dramatic actress.

"The Good Fairy" presiding temporarily over the destiny of th Music Hall undoubtedly will bring good luck to the house this wee For the picture is a delightful adaptation of Ferenc Molnar's play the same name and is heartily recommended as an efficacious antidote for those mid-Winter blues which are afflicting nearly every one at this time.

Frank Morgan, Reginald Owen and Margaret Sullavan are shown in a scene from "The Good Fairy," now on view at the Radio City Music Hall.

Margaret Sullavan, under the expert guidance of her director-husband, William Wyler, makes the most of the role which Helen Hayes created on the stage when Gilbert Miller presented the Hungarian comedy in New York three years ago. She is charmingly ingratiating as the orphan Luisa, the little usherette whose prettiness and innocence combine to make her a potent magnet for amorous, elderly gentlemen. Miss Sullavan's versatility is demonstrated by the effective way in which she puts over the comedy. She is as sure of herself in this medium as she was in the serious, dramatic roles in "Only Yesterday" and "Little Man, What Now?"

A delightful, heart-warming comedy with an incessant ripple of laughter ruffling the charm of its surface, the new Margaret Sullavan film fixes its star even more firmly in the affections of her audience, and brings the Music Hall its most appealing entertainment since "Little Women."

The adaptation of the Molnar fantasy has been wrought to retain all the bubbling mirth of the original plus that soupcon of pathos that points the comedy so effectively. And the drama, played as it is by a quartette of Hollywood's [illegible] thespians, [illegible] tops for univers[illegible] film [illegible]. And that "universal" may be spelled with a big "U." as well, in compliment to the producers.

Just how things work out yo[illegible] for yourself at the [illegible] must [illegible] mean Music [illegible] "must." For "The Good Fairy" is as thoroughly enjoyable a film as the new season has brought forth. level of excellent comedy. Herbert Marshall is cast opposite Miss Sullavan, and is effective as the scholarly attorney who suddenly finds success and romance come to meet him.

A setting in a foreign city casts no strange shadow upon the picture. It appears the type of attraction which should have ready appeal, in its combination of laughter and romance developed in an unusual manner, to any sort of audience, almost anywhere.

Alan Hale, operator of a large theatre, comes to the orphanage in search of an usherette. Miss Sullavan, who has a story-telling following among the girls, is selected. When a man attempts to flirt with her as she leaves the theatre she uses Owen, a waiter whom she had seated earlier, as a foil to be rid of the annoyer. Thereafter Owen appoints himself her guardian and protector.

He invites her to a swank hotel affair, where she comes to the benign and would-be amorous attention of Morgan, a meat packing millionaire. His attempts to be flirtatious, and Owen's effort as waiter to make them leave a private dining room, are among the picture's most amusing moments. She tells Morgan she is married, and when he decides he will make her husband rich, she finds an opportunity to dart through the telephone directory and pick out the name of an attorney. Marshall, impecunious and scholarly lawyer, finds himself suddenly named general legal representative of Morgan's company.

From that point the complications fall thick and fast, as Miss Sullavan goes to Marshall, makes him change his dress and his manner, falls in love with him, tries to appear to him merely as a client, and at the same time attempts to evade Morgan while holding his interest in Marshall, and avoid difficulties with the well meaning, but, to her, entirely annoying Owen. The breakdown resulting from all her well intended but unavoidable duplicity comes when Morgan, in Marshall's office, finds he is not Miss Sullavan's husband and she is forced to tell the whole story of her attempt merely to be a "good fairy." It is hardly necessary to mention that Marshall more than forgives her, Morgan does the big thing, and Owen is totally bewildered.—AARONSON, New York.

Ten Minute Alibi

(British Lion)

Crime Melodrama

This adaptation of the play by Anthony Armstrong, a long run success in London, offers novel story values. It is a murder melodrama without a mystery. The audience sees the crime committed, knows the criminal and gets its kick from the suspense values of scenes in which he faces a long examination from suspicious detectives. The question is not whether he is innocent but whether he will get away without his guilt being discovered.

The sympathies of the audience are with the killer; he has put away a professional seducer who would have been hanged on his police dossier; and the crime is committed to save an innocent girl.

Over and above the interest of the "reconstruction" scenes, in which the suspect evades every trap laid by the police, there is the angle that here is a "perfect crime" at last. This is good exploitation material, whatever censorship may think about it. Whether murder is ever morally justifiable is another nice question raised by the plot. Also for a showman's use are the details of the actual juggling with a clock whereby the killer establishes an impregnable though artificial alibi.

Colin Derwent, in order to prevent the girl he loves, Betty Findon, from going to Paris with Phillip Sevilla, carefully plans to murder him. Using gloves to hide his finger prints, he shoots him with a silenced pistol, and hides the body in the bedroom. Putting back the clock ten minutes, he later returns to the flat with another person and establishes the time of his arrival. Before Sevilla's death is discovered, he restores the clock to correct time. A broken wrist watch on the body has established the time of death, and he has a cast iron alibi for that time.

A relentless "third degree" shows up all manner of possible discrepancies in the suspect's story, but he has provided for them all. As the detectives, baffled, are leaving, the clock strikes 7, although it is only 6 o'clock, but they miss this obvious proof that it has been tampered with.

Phillips Holmes as the hero-murderer is an American name for the billing; the remainder of the cast is scarcely up to the standard of the material, with the notable exception of Morton Selton as an elderly lawyer. The heroine is unsympathetic and the comedy relief of the detectives a mistake. Story values are the real asset.—ALLAN, London.

Drama

A dramatic story of political maneuvering and the criminal activity attendant upon the more unscrupulous kind of politics, and with the thematic complication of an attorney general and a governor under charges of bribe-taking, and a governor's daughter secretly married to the attorney general, this appears lively and entertaining material.

The cast should be a strong selling factor, headed by the attractive and capable Barbara Stanwyck, with Warren William opposite and in support such able players as Grant Mitchell, Glenda Farrell, Arthur Byron and Henry O'Neill.

Murder, the coercion of a weak-willed man secretary, impeachment proceedings against a governor, the last minute rescue of a girl from the electric chair by another's previously withheld testimony, and romance all have a part in this fast-moving yarn. The exhibitor has all these potential selling elements extracted from the story with which to work in the exploitation. He has the political complications with which to attract masculine patronage. Attacking the selling from the other—romantic—side, he has something with which to draw feminine attention, especially with the Stanwyck-William combination.

Miss Stanwyck, the daughter of Byron, governor, is secretly married to William, the state's attorney general. They plan to tell the governor later, but before they have an opportunity, one of William's agents, Douglas Dumbrille, arrests Mitchell in the act of depositing 10,000 in the private account of the governor. Mitchell is secretary to a once wealthy friend of Byron, whom he pardoned. Immediately the storm of bribe and scandal breaks, and a day later Mitchell's employer is found, apparently a suicide.

The legislature commences impeachment proceedings, and an incriminating note is found in the dead man's safe, written on the typewriter in the governor's study and signed in type with his initials. Only William and Miss Stanwyck know of the note, and William, convinced with Miss Stanwyck of her father's innocence, goes to work to unearth the facts before the legislature shall take action. He realizes that his marriage to Miss Stanwyck cannot be revealed. Then Dumbrille is murdered. Miss Farrell, William's secretary, is on trial, and only Miss Stanwyck, who was in William's apartment, saw the act, knew the girl to be innocent.

Working against time, she and William attempt to get at the truth. At the last moment Miss Stanwyck appears on the stand, saves the girl, and reveals her marriage to William. Things look decidedly dark for the governor as well as the attorney general, until, through Miss Stanwyck's effort, Mitchell is brought before the legislative committee, there confesses he killed his employer and Dumbrille, who had engineered the entire affair at the behest of a political boss, and that Dumbrille had influenced him to the original criminal act.—AARONSON, New York.

Drama

Produced by a Stockholm company, and using the Swedish dialogue throughout, this importation might well have been produced in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, otherwise known as Russia, since the film is in fact a glorification of revolution, the Revolution of Russia, as it had its active repercussions in neighboring Finland.

It is tragic drama, telling the story of the young man of good birth and wealthy home, who first is ready to give up home and family for a lowly-born peasant girl with whom he has fallen in love, and then sacrifices his sweetheart and finally his life, for the thing he considers above all else, the Revolution. This strong tinge of ruddy ink which definitely dyes the underlying and basic theme of this photoplay, makes it considerably limited in appeal for the average American consumption, in addition to its foreign origin and dialogue. It is true that there are numerous dialogue translations into English, not by superimposition, but in the rather old-fashioned manner of straight subtitles. Consequently the story's trend may be easily followed by one not understanding the language.

It must be true, as well that in the community where a reasonable portion of the population is of Scandinavian extraction, the exhibitor has something to sell, because of the Swedish origin and dialogue, if for no other reason.

The young boy Armas renounces his home, and breaks the heart of his mother, by his determination to continue his romance with the peasant girl Marja. Then comes the Revolution, and Armas joins the Red force, seeing in their fight a battle for the right. His older brother, Wilhelm, becomes a captain in the government army mobilized against the Reds.

Into the sector where Armas' home is located comes a Revolutionist troop train, Armas aboard. Warned of the approach the government force mines a railroad trestle, and the racing train plunges into the stream below. Those who escape death are captured, among them Armas. As a traitor to his country, he is condemned to death by a summary military court martial, and his brother is ordered to carry out the execution.

On the boy's word of honor that he will return in time for the execution next morning, his brother supplies horse, cape and pistol, and Armas leaves with a letter to their mother. Taking it to his home, he hears his mother renounce him to a servant, and leaves for his sweetheart's home, the letter undelivered. The girl learns during the night that Armas is to be executed, and has her mother lock them into a room. By terrorizing the mother, Armas forces her to release him, and despite the girl's entreaties, begins his return to a firing squad. En route, and because of the government cape he wears, he is shot by his own fellows-in-arms. Reaching his brother, the execution is suspended. Wilhelm is ordered to take his brother home as the army advances. Armas dies on the way, the surrounding picturization indicating the boy has died for the Revolution.—Aaronson, New York.

They are Looking Up

(Gaumont-British)

Farce Comedy

A good comedy idea is the basis of this British production and both time and money have been spent in its development, resulting in some genuinely amusing situations and generally in entertainment values salable by stunt methods and in fact lending themselves exceptionally well to various types of tieups and window displays. This may be a better line of salesmanship than concentration on the star, Cicely Courtneidge, though she is quite adequate in her dual role, of a circus rider deputizing for a schoolmistress sister.

The highlights are a championship tennis match in which the heroine faces a champion and defeats her by wildly comic methods, and a "one woman" circus performance in which the same girl has to play all the acts, from wire-walking to trapeze flying. Selling points here are that the tennis champion is played by Suzanne Lenglen, French star and onetime world champion, and that the episode is a most amusing burlesque of front-page tennis; the circus scenes ask you to talk of synthetic thrills with a bigger kick than real ones and of a "greater than Barnum" show from an aerial comedienne.

The story reveals Cicely Fytte, bohemian owner of a traveling circus, consenting to take the place, for a day, of her twin sister, a schoolmistress who has eloped with a wrestler. After a hectic day with the geometry and geography classes, she is horrified to learn that the eloping couple have taken ship to South Africa, and that the imposture must continue until they are brought back. Consolation is supplied by the friendship of Van Gaard, the music master, who is also a pretender, being actually a rich young man who has fallen out with his father. His advice enables Cicely to survive the tennis match at Wimbledon, where her shots are so outrageous that her famous opponent retires, and he also cooperates, by taking charge of the band, when Cicely finds that her circus turns have all gone on strike just when a possible buyer of the outfit wants to see a show. Cicely herself puts the performing seals through their paces, deputizes for a drunken wire-walker and even consents to act the flying beauty in a high trapeze act—all without detection by her pupils in the audience.

At last Foundation Day at the school comes, with the probability that the real Miss Fytte is to be announced as the new head, and the certainty that, disillusioned by the wrestler, she is returning to take up her duties. By various subterfuges, Cicely and Van Gaard keep the ceremony going until her sister turns up to receive the honors, then ride off together to get married.

Cicely Courtneidge is a spirited comedienne, and the support is excellent, with William Gargan excellent as Van Gaard, and Mark Lester, Henrietta Watson, Cicely Oates and Dick Henderson best of the others.

The broad comedy of the tennis and circus scenes, and the very fair speed maintained throughout, should make this very acceptable audience material.—Allan, London.

Comedy-Thriller

Assets here are the beautiful coast backgrounds and the originality of the interior settings, which almost all reproduce a lighthouse, giving interesting glimpses of the lamp-room and other features. Detrimental is the fact that the thrill scenes, depicting the defeat of a wrecking gang, are played in too slow a tempo and that some of the acting is very crude. Gordon Harker, purveying Cockney humour, is an asset or a drawback according to your audiences' understanding of the dialect; in his vein he is excellent.

Sam Higgins is sent from London to take charge of a lighthouse on the Welsh coast. On arrival he finds that two previous keepers have come to an abrupt end and that his immediate predecessor is lying in his bunk, mad. There are stories that the light mysteriously disappears on certain nights, and that a "phantom" light, further up the coast, lures ships onto the rocks. Sam is pestered by a young man who pretends to be a newspaper reporter and by a girl who says she is an actress, to take them to the lighthouse. He refuses, but during the night they have to be taken in from a sinking motor boat.

Sam finds his visitors fixing up a wireless transmitter and learns that the man is a naval officer and the girl a detective who is helping him find the gang which is using the lighthouse for wrecking. Soon there are mysterious happenings. The "mad" man lays out the officer. Sam's assistant is found unconscious. Then Sam and the girl, locked in, realize that the light has been put out. At the same time, the false light blazes out along the coast.

Finally, the officer swims to shore and brings a rescue party, while another goes to destroy the wrecking light. In the nick of time the steamer which the officer was trying to wireless is saved by the real light reappearing, and the chief criminal is revealed to be the local doctor, who lures to destruction ships on which he has an insurance.

The mystery angle can be played up, with emphasis on the fact that much of the action is played at night in the setting of a stormbound coast. Ian Hunter's is the best of the names, with Harker deserving star prominence where it is possible to put him over.—Allan, London.

Produced by Gainsborough and distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by Michael Powell. From the play "The Haunted Light" by Evadne Price and Joan Roy Byford. Script by Ralph Smart. Camera, Roy Kellino. Sound, A. Birch. General Classification. British Censor's Certificate, "U." Running time. 75 minutes.

Amusing

There are few on the screen who can surpass the slight and slithering Leon Errol in the performance of an inebriation act, and in this instance he is genuinely amusing. If there is objection on the liquid score, that is another thing, but Mr. Errol is undeniably an entertaining intoxicatee. His inability to leave the bottle untouched brings him to matrimonial disaster.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Tuneful

There is tuneful entertainment in this musical-radio subject, in which two linemen, atop a pole, look down and see several stars of the radio in renditions before the microphone. Included are Cross and Dunn, Mary Small and Irene Taylor, singing some of their best known numbers and singing them in highly effective fashion. There is no effort to do more than make this a radio review in miniature, so to speak, and the result is tuneful and entertaining.—Running time, 10 minutes.

This time Miss Oyl turns sleep walker, definitely cartoonically speaking, and the boys go to the rescue. On and about the steel skeleton of a building under construction the "action" takes place, ending in victory for Popeye, in really entertaining cartoon fashion.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Together they fashion a home of no mean proportions with gadgets which stand them in good stead when the natives attack. All the novelty of the cartoonist's art is here as the attack is repulsed and Mickey sails away. An entertaining subject.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Only a fair subject.—Running time, 7 minutes.

A travel subject of exceptional interest and quality is this number of the FitzPatrick Travel Talk series, in which the color cameras bring out all that is most attractive and most fascinating to American eyes in the quaint section of Holland known as Zeeland, where customs, architecture and particularly dress are as they were many years ago. The color, as in all of this series, is of unusual caliber, the explanatory dialogue interesting. Though short, it is definitely a worthwhile subject.—Running time, 7 minutes.

TIME reader commuting from Mamaroneck to his work in lower Manhattan Friday, decided to see the first issue of THE MARCH OF TIME on the screen. Finishing work early, he journeyed by tube to Jersey City, where THE MARCH OF TIME's advertisement listed Loew's theatre as the nearest one showing the new picture. (Unfortunately a mistake. Not until Feb. 8th can it be seen in Jersey City.) So back to Manhattan and up Broadway on a street car he went until the sign on the marquee of the Capitol (plus advice of another TIME fan on the car) led him to the box office of that theatre.

AMAZING

THIS is a true story. It happened Friday afternoon on a Broadway surface car. Overhearing a passenger questioning the conductor about the Capitol Theatre and noticing a copy of TIME under his arm, our informant* asked if he was looking for THE MARCH OF TIME. This story was the answer, an amusing tale of the efforts of one TIME reader who made up his mind to see THE MARCH OF TIME, even though misdirected all the way to Jersey City (for which THE MARCH OF TIME offers full apology).

Unusual, of course—but the determined action of this one TIME reader is typical of the public interest that has marked the start of this monthly series. That's why managers everywhere report constant phone calls asking "What time will it go on?" It's why audiences in theatre after theatre are applauding every performance. It's the reason why THE MARCH OF TIME on the screen of your theatre means a new kind of audience that will come back month after month. Talk to your nearest First Division exchange at once.

BRITAIN TO USE $900,000 IN NEXT TWO YEARS TO SPEED TELEVISION

Radio Men in U. S. Prepare to Push Laboratory Tests with Aim of National Network by the Spring of 1936

Initial Investment of 50 to 200 Millions Declared Necessary in U. S.; British Hope for Test Transmissions in Two Months

Great Britain this week surprised the radio broadcasting industry with announcement by Sir Kingsley Wood, British postmaster general, in the House of Commons that regular television broadcasting is expected to become an almost immediate reality in that country and that the British Government will spend $900,000 in the next two years to place the medium within reach of the public.

Preceding Sir Kingsley's announcement, publication was made of the report of the government-appointed Television Commission, headed by Lord Selsdon, which, after eight months of deliberations and consultations with numerous experts of England, the United States and Germany, had decided that high definition television had "reached such a standard of development as to justify that the first steps be taken toward the early establishment of a public television service of this type."

In the United States, radio men were preparing to follow the British move by more exhaustive laboratory tests in the hope of being able to put television on a national network scale into operation by the spring of 1936, at least two years earlier than had been anticipated. Experts in this country explained that for a variety of reasons the British step by no means signifies that this country is to be left behind in the television race. Among the reasons cited for the delay in the United States were these:

1. The American television problem is more than 38 times greater than England's, due to the difference in size of the two countries.

2. To introduce television into the homes of this country will be far more costly than in England.

3. Capital is lacking to finance construction and equipment of image transmitters. It was explained that to provide television programs throughout the United States would require an initial investment estimated at $50,000,000 to $200,000,000.

In London, Sir Kingsley explained that the most important recommendation in the commission's report is that the service begin with the Baird and Marconi systems operating alternately from one transmitting station in London under control of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Transmission Tests in Two Months

It is expected, Sir Kingsley indicated, that it will be possible to begin experimental transmissions within two months, although the cost of receivers probably will range between $250 and $300, until developed on a large commercial scale. The same problem has been evidenced in the United States.

According to cable advices from London Monday there is a general belief in radio circles that Lord Selsdon's committee also will recommend a pool of television patents, implying a more or less standard form of transmitter and receiver, and that the official system will employ 180-line scanning against the 30-line at present employed by the B.B.C. in its experiments.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS WANT CANCELLATION

Right of cancellation of pictures and restricted percentage of receipts payable for film rentals would be included in a standard exhibition contract which the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association may ask of the British government. Thirty-six per cent of theatre receipts is the generally accepted figure for the rental percentage, with no right of cancellation, whereas in Australia an exhibitor may cancel 25 per cent of pictures booked, the while he pays 20 per cent of the program's cost.

The size of the television picture now produced in England is about eight by six inches, but this, it was explained, can be increased by a magnifying device with a corresponding loss of definition, in itself a handicap. Experimental work has been progressing toward pictures of much larger dimensions, but they are only in the early stages of development.

Newsreels Await Competition

British newsreel companies are anticipating open competition from the Government in its television activities, for, it is said, present plans embrace a nationwide "televised" news-broadcast service as part of the regular entertainment programs. If this plan is carried out it would mean that a news event occurring in London could be shown on motion picture screens or in private homes within an hour of its happening in almost any part of the British Isles.

In this country, on the other hand, the motion picture industry is cooperating with the broadcasters in development of television. Inauguration of a regular program as soon as it becomes practical is being discussed by officials of the Columbia Broadcasting System and Paramount, while National Broadcasting is planning coordinated programs with its affiliated motion picture concern, RKO Radio.

With motion picture companies in the United States aiding the broadcasters in the practical development of television, the producers probably would underwrite the broadcasters' entertainment and talent supply, while the broadcasters would undertake the technical aspects of the program. However, private capital investment up to $200,000,000 would be required.

"There is no doubt that the results of television will go a long way in pulling us out of the depression," said O. H. Caldwell, former federal radio commissioner, this week. "The only thing that is holding back the development of this new industry in the United States, on a scale that would be comparable to the early days of broadcasting, is the need for capital to finance the construction and equipment of image transmitters.

"To provide television programs throughout the country would require an initial investment estimated at from $50,000,000 to $200,000,000. This sum seems staggering to private capital, but to a government that it handing out billions for purposes that seem less constructive, even $200,000,000 for television is not unthinkable. Television transmitters really have a sounder claim to government financing, in the present unemployment situation, than do other enterprises that have received generous federal aid."

Close on the British Government's action engineers of the B.B.C. this week took swift action in a search for a site on which to erect a television "tower," which must be sufficiently high to give an uninterrupted path for the ultra-short waves between the sender and the receiver over a 35-mile radius it is primarily intended to serve. It was considered probable that the Crystal Palace tower, which is 280 feet above the level of the Thames, will be used for the first television broadcast. Since June, 1934, this site has been used by Baird Television, Ltd., for experiments.

Among those individuals directly interested in the latest television move is David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, who is a member of the directorate of the Marconi company and a large stockholder. Also having financial interest in the new developments is Isidore Ostrer, head of Gaumont British, who is reported to have invested $250,000 within the last three years in the Baird system. Although Mr. Sarnoff has vital interests in the British program, there was little response to the news from England this week in Wall Street. RCA stocks remained at a steady level.

New Type Transmission Line

A further development reported on the television scene in this country is in the form of a new type electrical transmission line, which will provide, it is claimed, a television channel giving size and clarity of vision hitherto unknown. The new wire was described before the annual winter convention of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers in New York, as opening up new possibilities not only in television but also in long-distance transmission of pictures and music.

The wire and associated apparatus, it was reported, permits extension of frequency band widths of the order of 1,000,000 cycles or more to be transmitted over long distances.

This new method will transmit signals over the wire at nearly the speed of light, or 186,000 miles a second, it is claimed.

Germany, in addition to Great Britain, anticipates practical usage of television within the next year, it was indicated this week in New York by Dr. Fritz Schroeter, director of the laboratories of Telefunken Co., leading radio system in Germany.

"With a television station already operating in Berlin, we can transmit clear images in black and white, either movable or still, on a frame 10 by 8 inches," he said. "They are as perfect as regular motion pictures."

THEATRE TOTALS FROM 5 SOURCES ALL DIFFER

Washington Is Planning Studies of Theatrical Employment in Number of Cities as a Clue

An accurate total of the number of motion picture theatres operating in the United States is as much of a mystery as ever. Five individual surveys of the exhibition structure show wide disparities and complicate conclusions.

The United States Census Bureau reported a few weeks ago that an investigation of theatre income in its relation to payrolls touched 10,265 houses, although it was added that the study was incomplete.

On January 26, the Film Boards of Trade, affiliated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, estimated 14,552 theatres operating on Jan. 1, 1935, based on reports taken from the film servicing books of large distributors. A previous estimate by the Film Boards of 13,736 operations on Jan. 1, 1934, would be nearer the time of the Census Bureau's investigation.

Commerce Department Says 10,143

The United States Department of Commerce announced on Feb. 1 a total of 10,143, noting that the Census Bureau's study had influenced the conclusions.

Then, on Monday, Film Daily said the total number of houses is 15,273.

"Popular opinion," so-called, figures the total at 14,000, although the estimates range from 12,000 to 15,000.

Thus an average, arbitrarily calculated from all these totals, would place the number at 12,846. (Geographical analyses of the surveys appeared in Motion Picture Herald as follows: United States Census Bureau, November 24, 1934; Film Boards of Trade, January 26; United States Department of Commerce, February 2.)

The spread between the figures compiled last year by the Census Bureau from its survey of all amusements and the data and estimates procured by the Commerce Department and other government agencies are said at Washington to be interfering with the progress of studies of national business income as the industry is involved.

The Census Bureau's report of 10,265 theatres showed receipts in 1933 of $415,153,000, with 63,473 full-time workers and payrolls aggregating $85,416,000.

Question of Value Raised

That these figures were not accurate was stated by the bureau at the time, when compilation of the report for Pennsylvania disclosed discrepancies in the figures for cities of comparable size and type. It was revealed later that the disappointing result of the Pennsylvania canvass was due to conflict between two political factions over the appointment of enumerators which brought about conditions militating against a complete survey. Regardless, there were obvious discrepancies elsewhere.

While the bureau's figures, admittedly incomplete, were taken generally in government circles as being the best data available, the question of their value was raised recently in Washington when it was learned that vastly different data were given in a report on national income for 1929 to 1932 submitted to Congress last year by the Department of Commerce in response to a Senate resolution.

That report carried employment figures for 1932 which by no means could be correlated with the census figures for 1933. It placed the number of persons employed in motion picture theatres at 225,400, with another 16,663 employed in legitimate theatres, the total of 241,063 being nearly four times the total found by the Census Bureau.

Estimates of salaries and wages in the national income study placed the total for motion picture theatres in 1932 at $289,188,000 and, for legitimate theatres at $34,026,000, a total of $323,214,000, again about four times the census figure.

Efforts to reconcile the two sets of figures proved unsuccessful and the situation was further complicated by the figures compiled by the Film Boards of Trade.

An exhaustive search by Washington for reliable statistics disclosed that the theatrical industry is probably the only important enterprise in the country without complete figures on its structure. Apparently, officials found, nobody knows how many theatres there are in the United States, although men conversant with the industry said the Census Bureau figure should be increased about 25 per cent. On the other hand, it was agreed that the gross income study figures were probably 100 per cent too high.

Variance on Receipts

While federal officials are chiefly interested in figures on employment, in which both the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor are conducting studies, reference to the income figures on receipts disclosed that one branch of the Department of Commerce estimated that motion picture theatres in 1932 had a box office of $700,000,000 and the legitimate theatres $88,937,000, a total of $788,937,000, while another branch of the same department estimated that in 1933 the motion picture houses had an income of $406,542,000 and legitimate theatres $8,611,000, a total of $415,153,000 some $373,784,000 less than the Commerce Department figure.

A partial check of the theatrical situation in the District of Columbia indicated that if the census bureau's activities in its home town were typical of the survey throughout the nation, the income study was the nearer accurate of the two. In the District of Columbia the bureau listed 25 theatres. A list compiled by an official of a local exhibitor organization gave the names and locations of 49 theatres.

Federal Survey Indicated

Efforts to analyze the findings of the income study showed them to be of little value. Its estimate of 225,400 employees in motion picture houses was admittedly wild, indicating, even on a basis of 15,000 houses, which was said to be high, an average employment of 15 persons a theatre, whereas it is generally estimated that the average would run between six and nine persons. But even cutting the income study figures in half leaves them practically double those of the Census Bureau, it was argued, whereas a halving of the income would put box office receipts below the census bureau figure.

Because of the complicated situation, it is planned to make studies of theatrical employment in a number of cities throughout the country in the hope of obtaining data from which it will be possible to calculate national totals. The Department of Labor is already engaged in a study of earnings in the industry and the Department of Commerce requires information for its continuing income studies.

47 BOOKS AND PLAYS BOUGHT IN JANUARY

Five Months' Purchases by Producers Total 287; New Acquisitions Include 26 Original Mss.

Producers' activities in the story market in January resulted in purchase of 47 properties, bringing the total acquisitions for five months to 287 and adding 26 original manuscripts, 14 published books and seven plays to the studios' already well stocked supply of material from which they draw for working scripts for feature production.

Monthly purchases fluctuated from 75 in September to 51 in October, 70 in November, 44 in December and January's total of 47. The purchases embraced 139 originals, 113 books and 35 plays, the trend to originals and books and away from plays, which are costlier, not deviating once.

Paramount was the most active story buyer in January, taking 12, to Metro's 10, and Warners' five, Fox got four, likewise Universal, with three going to Columbia, and two each to Reliance (United Artists) and Twentieth Century, another United Artists unit. One purchase apiece was made by Cameo Productions, S. S. Krellberg, Monogram, Radio and Hal Roach, distributing through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. January purchases included several outstanding literary and stage vehicles, among them "Valley Forge," the Theatre Guild's stage production of Maxwell Anderson, which was a Columbia purchase, and Universal's acquisition of Anthony Thorne's "Book-of-the-Month" novel, "Delay in the Sun." Samuel Raphaelson's current play, "Accent of Youth," was bought by Paramount from Crosby Gaige.

MGM completed negotiations for Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina," for Greta Garbo, while Paramount got the play, "Chocolate," for Cecil B. DeMille. Another wellknown piece, George M. Cohan's "Song and Dance Man," went to Fox.

J. P. Medbury sold his original, "Crazy People," to Paramount, which also bought his "Plot Thickens," and Guy Bolton's and P. G. Wodehouse's musical, "Anything Goes." Too, the company acquired Hans Mueller's play, "Creator," and the book, "If You Hunt with Old Don," by Thomas West, scenario by Irwin S. Cobb.

To Columbia went Dostoievsky's "Crime and Punishment"; Percy Mandley's play, "Eight Bells," and others.

Twentieth Century got the rights to the life of "Death Valley Scotty," while Universal announced "The Werewolf of London," Robert Harris' book. Already published in Motion Picture Herald were full details of January purchases for the first two weeks; following are the purchases made in the last half of the month:

STUDIO GROWTH POINTS TO BIG BRITISH OUTPUT

50 Expected to Make U. S. Market; Indian Preference for English Films Indicated

By BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

That 1935 will see a production of British films easily exceeding all previous footage records can now be forecast with certainty. Increase of the Quota to 20 per cent did not in itself imply this increase, for the legal obligations of distributors easily could have been met if the production figures of 1934 had been maintained. The most significant feature of the growth is that it is due to genuine business enterprise, and that carries with it an assurance that the British film of 1935 will be better too.

The demand for studio space is a striking current feature. Two comparatively old British plants, which counted for little a year or so back, have been modernized and figure this week in stories of production plans carrying a definite guarantee of quality.

One of these, Worton Hall, was at one time a country house with a shed or two in the garden; it is now one of the best plants in the country, with three stages, the largest 130 feet by 86 feet, all fully equipped for Wide Range Western Electric recording.

Worton Hall's possibilities are reflected in the fact that it is being hired by Alexander Korda for use until the new London studios at Elstree are completed, and that it was easily possible to provide a special 150x300 foot stage —said to be the biggest in England—for the H. G. Wells "Whither Mankind."

Also brought into line with modern requirements, the Blattner studio at Elstree, rechristened the Rock Studio, is to be the home of Leslie Fuller Productions, which has finished "Strictly Illegal" and started "The Stoker," second of four feature comedies to be released by Gaumont British. Joe Rock is producing with the American market in mind, and has in Leslie Fuller one of the best box office bets in England.

Adding these new facilities to those provided by the new A.T.P. floors at Ealing, which many American visitors have praised as equal to anything in Hollywood, and bearing in mind what was done at Twickenham and elsewhere during 1934, it is easy to understand that the official figures of production during the last quota year, just available, give a very inadequate idea of the potentialities of British studios. And yet they are remarkable enough as they stand.

British Films in 1934

British features registered in the year numbered 190, and their footage was 1,185,668. There were 87 shorts totaling 98,173 feet. The imported features were 480, footage 3,113,871, and shorts 690 at 890,996 feet.

The total British footage, 1,238,841, represents 22.27 per cent of the total registrations of 5,228,708 feet and it will be seen that if features alone are considered, the figures are still more favorable. Also significant is the fact that the legal obligation on distributors was only 17½ per cent. The extra footage provided means that, to comply with their exhibition quota (15 per cent until September next), theatres are offered five films for every three that must be exhibited.

Studios this year will be aiming their activities toward theatre needs after October 1, when the exhibition quota will be 20 per cent. It seems reasonable to assume that, although distributors could care for their own quota obligations (20 per cent from April 1st) without any further increase of production, there will in fact be at least a gain comparable to that in 1934 (81,644 feet more than in 1933). This will bring 1935 British registrations to the 200 mark as a minimum and quite possibly bring out 250 features against the relatively stable import figure of 480.

International Standard

Footage figures impressive in themselves, are actually less important than the already obvious fact that a greatly increased proportion of 1935 British films will be of international standard. Assuming a total registration, British and foreign, of 670 films, as in the past year, there is a quota demand for 134 British pictures. Even if the whole of these statutory films were "quickies," there would be a margin of from 60 to 120 British features seriously made for home use and, in a large number of cases, for foreign distribution.

All the films made for quota cover for American companies will not, in fact, be "quickies." United Artists has the London and British & Dominions outputs; Warner and Fox look like taking their own British productions very seriously, and the tendency to regard the British items in the programme as a source of revenue instead of a liability is likely to spread.

Add that Gaumont-British, British International, Associated British Film Distributors and other concerns will handle American films for which their own productions will provide quota cover, and it begins to appear that, out of the 134 "obligatory" films, there may be as many as sixty of programme quality or better. That gives a possible total of 170 British films definitely competing for bookings with 480 from abroad; 190 films were registered as "British" during the past year. It seems possible that 50 or 60 will make the American market.

B. & D. Wants U. S. Dates

One of the features of the British & Dominions annual meeting (when a profit of £80,000 and a dividend of 8 per cent were declared), was Mr. Hubert T. Marsh's statement that "Brewster's Millions" and "Escape Me Never" were being made for America after advance consultation with United Artists and with their cooperation. Spending the greater part of the proceeds of a recent share issue of £100,000 on these two films, B. & D. is following a policy which every serious British production unit will adopt at some time or another. "America first" may not seem a very patriotic policy, but as a business slogan it wants a lot of beating.

Like most other major British units, B. & D. is nibbling at color. London Films and B.I.P. are doing the same, of course. Alexander Korda's reported intention to make "Lawrence of Arabia" in Colorgravure now seems to have a "perhaps" in it, and the one British feature actually to include color is still B.I.P.'s "Radio Parade," in which the Dufaycolour sequence, though experimental, suggested that the system might be perfectible.

Someone must have put Eddie Cantor up to a marvelous piece of propaganda during his recent broadcast from London. In the middle of a really good turn, full of wisecracks and favorite numbers, he dropped into a very serious appeal to motorists, quoting the appalling statistics of road dealths here as a reason for greater care in driving. It was well and sincerely done, and since most of England was listening in, must have had an enormous effect.

One of these days Cantor is to play for Cochrane in London, he hopes.

Paramount in Glasgow

Paramount added another to its British circuit when Jack Buchanan and Sir Harry Lauder helped the Lady Provost to inaugurate its Glasgow house, a 2,784-seater designed by the firm of Verity and Beverley on ultra-modern lines, the frontage being notable for vertical stone pilasters mounting lighting strips.

The Indian Market

Another official document will be poor reading in Hollywood. A Department of Overseas Trade Report on Trade with India devotes a whole lot of space to underlining the fact that the bulk of film import to that country is American, and makes this very significant remark:

"There is no preferential duty on U. K. exposed films at present, but it is hoped that the government of India may be prevailed upon to encourage the display of sound wholesome British productions by granting a fiscal advantage."

This suggestion that American productions shall be taxed (even if they are "sound and wholesome") follows on a reference to the "elaborate organizations" built up in India by American concerns, and an expression of regret that British firms have not been so enterprising.

The report gives some striking figures. The imports of exposed films (1932-33) are:

|---|---|
| American .... | 4,584,647 feet |
| British ....... | 1,311,100 " |
| German ...... | 165,814 " |

There were also imports of 2,487,802 feet from Ceylon believed to be chiefly second-hand films.

Sir Thomas M. Ainscough, C.B.E. senior trade commissioner in India, author of the report, says:

"India is undoubtedly one of the most promising outlets in the Empire for British films, and I appeal to producers to take some steps to cultivate the market. . . . U. S. A. producers are very active."

Lastly, the Quota Act introduced in New South Wales and expected to be imitated throughout Australia, is causing serious worries to the British trade. The Act, in its vital clause, classifies British and American films alike as foreign.

CITES IMPROVEMENT IN PICTURE QUALITY

To the Editor of the Herald:

Enclosed you will find an unsolicited article in a newspaper of Arlington, Texas, which I feel is commendable, due to the fact that in this situation we have always had more or less trouble with clergy.

I do hope that this will help serve to show the distributors that harmonious relations can be had between exhibitors and their patrons when they can show pictures of this type and receive unsolicited letters of this kind.—Irving S. Melcher, Texan Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

Under the caption "Excellent Shows for Arlington" the following appeared in the Arlington (Texas) Citizen:

The citizens of this and other communities who joined our Catholic friends last summer in "The League of Dencency Campaign" against obscene moving picture shows have seen a remarkable improvement in the quality of the pictures that have been coming from Hollywood. Those of us who joined the forces of condemnation last summer should now join the forces of commendation. I therefore desire to speak a word of appreciation for the type of pictures that it has been my privilege to see within recent weeks here in Arlington. I refer to such pictures as "The Little Minister," "Babes in Toyland," "Ann of the Green Gables," "Imitation of Life," "Bright Eyes," and other pictures of similar quality. I would include in the list, "One Night of Love," which it was my pleasure to see within the past few days. I went to the theatre expecting to see some more of the sex-saturated animalism that has so characterized the screen, but the picture was wholesome, humorous, and not in the least prudish. It is supremely worth while, in my judgment, for people to see such pictures and it is just as supremely worth while for them not to see many of the pictures that have been and are still being shown on the screen. However, let us be just as ready to commend as to condemn.

Mrs. Anna Steese Richardson, speaking before the Presidents' Council of Dallas Federation of Women's Clubs during the past week is reported by the Dallas News as commending a practice of our Catholic friends relative to moving pictures: "In a Catholic parish in New York City no child is permitted to enter a theatre where an unfit picture is being shown, for a priest or nun stands at the door and sends home children whose parents permit them to go."

Today we have in every community people sufficiently trained in the psychology of human behavior and who have at the same time a consuming desire to lift humanity to higher levels of living to serve as critics of moving pictures and every other institution in the community. Let their voices be heard both in condemning the evil and commending the good.—H. M. Redford, Minister, Christian Church.

ONLY POOR SHOWMAN PUSHES WRONG ANGLE

To the Editor of the Herald:

I read with interest the letter sent to you by Walter H. Golding on "Imitation of Life." I think Mr. Golding did a swell job on his newspaper advertising and heartily agree that Miss Beavers stole the picture. But—with two names as big as Claudette Colbert and Warren William to push, why should our Southern neighbors stress the other angle and spoil good grosses with a swell picture. Business is business and it's a poor showman who pushes the wrong angle to satisfy his own ideals.—H. H. French, New York City.

Young Reviewers Select Best Films

The Young Reviewers Club of the National Board of Review, ranging in age from 8 to 17, has selected "The House of Rothschild" as the best picture of the year. The film was the choice of the two divisions of the group, one composed of children from 8 to 13, the other from 13 to 17.

The 10 selections of the younger group, in the order of choice, were: "The House of Rothschild," "Little Miss Marker," "The Count of Monte Cristo," "The Gay Divorcee," "One Night of Love," "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," "Now and Forever," "Treasure Island," "Baby Take A Bow" and "Peck's Bad Boy."

The older group selected: "The House of Rothschild," "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," "One Night of Love," "The Count of Monte Cristo," "Little Miss Marker," "Viva Villa," "The Thin Man," "It Happened One Night," "Of Human Bondage" and "Treasure Island."

Leaves "Cine Mundial"

Joseph A. Cordero, for the past 14 years circulation manager of Cine Mundial, Spanish language motion picture fan publication, published by the Chalmers Publishing Company, has resigned to join the Vanero Publishing Company, as advertising and circulation director of El Cine Rie and other magazine to be published in Spanish speaking countries.

First Division Names Three

William Richardson, First Division southern district manager, has appointed R. R. Garner, Atlanta; J. C. White, Charlotte, and R. A. Kelly, New Orleans, short subject sales heads in the territories named. The company has opened its own exchange in New Orleans, with Fred F. Goodrow in charge.

Fadiman with Goldwyn

William J. Fadiman, head of the screen material department of Leland Hayward, has resigned his post to join the Samuel Goldwyn organization as eastern story editor. He had been with RKO Pathe, Columbia, and was head of the Authors' Motion Picture and Radio Bureau.

Contract for Ruth Mix

Alfred T. Mannon, president of Resolute, is in Mexico selecting locations for the company's third western, "Fighting Pioneers," featuring Rex Bell and Ruth Mix. Miss Mix, daughter of Tom Mix, has been given a long term contract, the plan being to make her an action star.

Penguin Theatre, In the Antarctic, Ends Its Season

The Paramount Penguin theatre has closed its season. It has been, in one, a first run house, than by turns, second, third, fourth run—almost ad infinitum. The announcement of the season's close for the Penguin came in a radiogram to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, from the supervising chief, though not active operator of the Penguin, Commander Richard E. Byrd, whose district headquarters is in Little America, Antarctica, the World, as distinctive an address as ever a theatre had.

When, 15 months ago, the Byrd expedition set out on its voyage of re-exploration, in October, 1933, the hold contained 97 complete program changes, complete projection equipment, loaned by various of the major motion picture companies. Commander Byrd, in his message, recounts the story of the Penguin. Its location was the mess hall, shows three nights each week and on holidays. Its change policy shortly after the opening of the house, on February 5, 1934, was indeterminate, some of the pictures having been run as many as six times, after the film supply had been initially seen by August 22.

John L. Herrman and Carl O. Peterson, Paramount cameramen and expedition members were actively in charge. The film storage vault had natural refrigeration, built of snow blocks. Air conditioning of the house seemed unnecessary, since when the door was occasionally opened, a blast of air 60 degrees below zero made its presence felt. Commander Byrd expressed the deep appreciation of himself and his men for the courtesy of the motion picture industry which made the Penguin theatre possible.

Loew Reports Stock Holding

David L. Loew, vice-president and director of Loew's, Inc., owns 2,476 shares of no par common stock of the company, it was revealed in a report on the stock holdings of corporation officials to the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington last week.

Radio Takes Tec-Art Studio

Radio Pictures has leased the old Tec-Art studios on the Coast for Merian C. Cooper's production, "She." The company plans further use of the studio because of lack of space and an increase of the production schedule at the present plant.

Union Officers Honored

Henry Needles, Warner Hartford district manager, and managers of Hartford theatres were guests at a testimonial dinner by Local 84 of the IATSE to John Sullivan and Harry Sweet, former union secretaries.

Warner Affair February 16

Warner will hold its sixth annual ball at the Waldorf Astoria on February 16.

Service

In the issue of January 5th, Motion Picture Herald quoted a letter from an exhibitor, R. D. Leatherman, Queen Theatre, Abilene, Texas, as follows:

"No manager can operate a theatre and know what he is doing without a Motion Picture Herald on his desk."

Reading this, Exhibitor W. T. Brunker, Elite Theatre, Wainwright, Alberta, Canada, tore the page from the Herald and sent it back with this notation:

"You said a mouthful! When it comes to signing a contract Motion Picture Herald is my best bet."

Because its influence is potent Motion Picture Herald is read by exhibitors, producers and distributors—more than 15,000—every week.

There is no substitute for circulation.

SPECTACLE FILM COMING BACK
48 FEATURES SHOOTING IN WEEK
CRITICS NAME LEADING FILMS
13 PICTURES START; 12 FINISHED

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

Hollywood Correspondent

THE spectacle film, which almost faded from studio programs the last three years, with the slashing of budgets, has taken on a new importance among the large companies the last three months. With most of the major companies now out of the red, producers again are employing extra talent in large numbers and constructing huge settings.

Eight spectacle pictures are being made ready or are already in production, almost every studio having a finger in the pie.

One of the most important is Max Reinhardt's "Midsummer Night's Dream," now filming at Warner-First National. Hundreds already have appeared and large numbers will be called later.

Merian C. Cooper is preparing RKO's mammoth spectacle, "The Last Days of Pompeii." Cooper spent months at research on the actual scene.

Fox is nearing completion of "Dante's Inferno," combination of spectacle and fantasy.

Cecil B. DeMille, with "Cleopatra" already on the year's spectacle list, has just started "The Crusades."

Jock Whitney's "Becky Sharp" also should join the host of spectacles. This will be the first all-technicolor feature since the advent of the new tri-color process and is being produced on a large scale.

"Anthony Adverse" should be as spectacular on the screen as it is in novel form. Screen writers are now busy at Warner's.

M-G-M is preparing for the filming of the Charles Dickens novel, "Tale of Two Cities."

Paramount's contribution is "Caprice Espagnol," which in some sequences has as many as 1,000 persons in the camera's eye.

An ordinance to limit the range of sound from drive-in theatres is up for adoption in the city council. Councilman MacAllister said residents near Los Angeles' only open-air theatre, on Pico boulevard, claim the sound extends as far as a mile from the screen. The new ordinance would confine this sound to within 50 feet from point of reproduction.

Executives of Motion Picture Relief Fund have posted large placards in all studios showing specific cases of the work performed the past year. Names of beneficiaries are not divulged.

The Roosevelt Birthday party on one of the Warner sound stages proved to be the most brilliant and successful of them all. Practically all the picture celebrities attended.

Federal District Judge George Cosgrove denied legal counsel representing Fox, Paramount, Universal and Fox an injunction against the Los Angeles County from collecting what the plaintiffs called excess taxes on studio properties on the grounds that the case should have gone through the state courts before reaching the federal courts.

Production activity for the week ended February 2 reached the highest peak for any one week of the past two years. Before the cameras were 48 features and 11 shorts. Seventeen features and ten shorts are in final preparation; 45 features and 14 shorts were in the cutting rooms.

With the impression quite general that pictures are better, several local critics at lunch this week paraded a list of pictures recently previewed and felt the following should create the most favorable impressions with showmen:

PARAMOUNT: Lives of a Bengal Lancer, Gilded Lily, Wings in the Dark, Now and Forever, Pursuit of Happiness, Rumba.

COLUMBIA: The Whole Town's Talking.

MGM: David Copperfield, What Every Woman Knows, Sequoia, Forsaking All Others, After Office Hours, Babes in Toyland, Barretts of Wimpole Street.

UNIVERSAL: The Mystery of Edwin Drood, The Good Fairy.

WARNER: Bordertown, Devil Dogs of the Air, Babbitt.

FOX: One More Spring, County Chairman, White Parade, Life Begins at Forty, Bright Eyes.

RADIO: Anne of Green Gables, Gay Divorcee, Of Human Bondage, Little Minister.

UNITED ARTISTS: Clive of India.

GAUMONT-BRITISH: Man of Aran, Power.

AMKINO: Chapayev.

Thirteen Pictures Go Into Work

Thirteen new pictures went into the work in the final days of January and twelve features were transferred to the cutting rooms. With three new pictures each, Paramount and Radio led. Two started at Warner. Columbia, Universal, Hal Roach, Chesterfield and Fox were credited with one each of finished product. Paramount had four and Radio and Warner each two. Columbia, Fox, MGM and Universal had singletons.

Practically all the pictures, in story, production and personnel values, appear to be better than ordinary. First to be started by Paramount was the tentatively titled "Two on a Tower." It will present Mary Ellis, Tullio Carminati, Ida Lupino, Lynne Overman, John Blakely and Hugh Enfield. "Small Miracle," adaptation of the much discussed stage play, presents Helen Mack, Richard Barthelmess, Joe Morrison, Gertrude Michael, Henry Travers, Noel Madison, Christian Rub, Roscoe Karns and Ray Milland. "The Crusades," Cecil B. DeMille, will feature a star studded cast including Henry Wilcoxon, Loretta Young, Ian Keith, Alan Hale, Pedro de Cordoba, Katherine DeMille, C. Henry Gordon, George Barbier, C. Aubrey Smith, Lumsden Hare, Hobart Bosworth, Joseph Schildkraut and Montagu Love.

At Radio, "Strangers All" started, with May Robson, Preston Foster, Florine McKinney and William Bakewell. "Spring in Paris" will present Anne Shirley, O. P. Heggie, Helen Westley, Trent Durkin, Elizabeth Patterson, John Qualen, Etienne Girardot and Hilda Vaughn. In "Village Tale" will be featured Randolph Scott, Kay Johnson, Janet Beecher, Robert Barrat, Edward Ellis, Ray Mayer and Guinn Williams.

Warner started "The Case of the Curious Bride," the cast including Warren William, Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods, Claire Dodd, Phil Regan and Robert Gleckler. Also on the stages is "Dinky," with Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor, Ian Hunter and Jimmy Butler.

Columbia's new activity is "Eight Bells." The cast includes Ann Sothern, Ralph Bellamy, John Buckler, Franklin Pangborn, John Darrow, Addison Richards and Charles King.

Work started at Universal on "Werewolf of London." Henry Hull is starred and Valerie Hobson, Warner Oland, and Clark Williams are featured. At Hal Roach Studio began the feature length "Vagabond Lady," with Robert Young, Evelyn Venable, Berton Churchill, Reginald Denny, Forrester Harvey, Arthur Hoyt and Frank Craven.

With Charles Starrett, Robert Warwick, Marion Shilling, Ed Van Sloan, Helen Jerome Eddy and Doris Lloyd the featured names, Chesterfield started filming "A Shot in the Dark."

Story angles satisfactorily adjusted, Fox put "Man Eating Tiger" before the cameras. In this Lew Ayers, Tala Birell, Walter King and Claire Trevor will be featured.

Paramount's four completed pictures are "Mississippi," "All the King's Horses," "Love in Bloom" (formerly "Win or Lose") and "Car 99." In "Mississippi" will be seen Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett, Queenie Smith, Gail Patrick, Claude Gillingwater, John Miljan, Fred Kohler, Sr., John Larkin, Libby Taylor, Harry Meyers, The Cabin Kids and Molasses and January. "All the King's Horses" co-stars Carl Brisson and Mary Ellis, with E. E. Horton, Katherine DeMille, Eugene Pallette, and Marina Schubert featured. "Love in Bloom" has George Burns, Gracie Allen, Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee, J. C. Nugent, Mary Foy, Richard Carle and Lee Kohlmar. "Car 99" will present Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan, Frank Craven, William Frawley, Douglas Blackley, Alfred Delacambre and Dean Jagger.

Radio completed "Roberta." The musical features Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Randolph Scott, Helen Westley, Victor Varconi, Claire Dodd and Ferdinand Munier. Also transferred to the cutting rooms is "Dog of Flanders." In this, Frankie Thomas, Helen Parrish, O. P. Heggie, Richard Quinne, DeWitt Jennings, Christian Rub, Sarah Padden, Ann Shoemaker, Nella Walker and Reginald Barlow will be seen.

At Warner, "King of the Ritz" was finished. William Gargan, Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins, Erik Rhodes, Bodil Rosing, Dorothy Tree, Gordon Wescott, Berton Churchill and Paul Porcasi compose the cast. The also completed "The Florentine Dagger" has Margaret Lindsay, Donald Woods, Henry O'Neill, C. Aubrey Smith, Robert Barrat, Eily Malyon, Charles Judels, Paul Porcasi, Herman Bing and Rafeala Ottiano.

Columbia completed "Devil's Cargo," with Wallace Ford, Marian Marsh, Arthur Hohl, Charles Grapewin and Charles Middleton.

"Dante's Inferno," the finished Fox picture, stars Spencer Tracy and Claire Trevor, with H. B. Walthall, Siegfried Rumann, Nick Foran, Allan Dinehart, John T. Murray, Vivian Oakland and Frank Conroy in support.

At MGM, "Reckless" was completed, with Jean Harlow and William Powell co-starred, and Franchot Tone, May Robson, Henry Wadsworth, Henry Stephenson, Ted Healy, Nat Pendleton and Barbara Worth in the cast.

Universal checked in with "It Happened in New York." The cast includes Gertrude Michael, Heather Angel and Lyle Talbot.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 259.—(A) What, in your opinion, are the essentials of a first class projection room? (B) What is the best floor for a projection room, describing its constituent parts? (C) Why is a raw cement floor inadvisable and just what should be done about it?

Answer to Question No. 254

Bluebook School Question No. 254 was: (A) Does a too-wide viewing angle caused by seats too close to the screen cause serious eye strain? (B) What are the various effects of a too-short viewing distance? (C) Give us your views of picture dimensions in general, as considered from front and rear seat viewing distances.

The following made acceptable answers: S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; C. Oldham; A. F. Sprafke; T. J. Wentworth; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; Bill Doe; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; P. L. Nathan; S. Johnson and E. Hodson; R. and K. Wells; L. M. Goss and T. Danielson; B. L. Jackson and N. K. Hendries; M. and J. DeVoy; B. R. Danielson; L. Grant and R. Geddings; T. Rosenblatt; T. Turk; P. H. Kay; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; R. Davis and G. B. Lantree; B. L. Thomas; C. Holly and T. H. Bernard; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; C. Mellinger and H. Pitchkey; B. R. and M. Walker; G. Harrison and F. Harlow; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Savlor; H. Breaston and D. Haber; B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; P. and L. Felt; D. T. Bennett, N. L. Haynes, and A. Richardson; D. T. Bennett, G. E. Osborn, R. Crawford and C. B. Murray; G. Thompson; E. Mantol and H. Hughes; D. L. Sinklow; N. N. Boyd and L. Thomas; G. B. Randall and T. N. Rogers; S. C. Hollenbeck; B. N. Somers; F. D. Ormie; F. H. S. and P. Dalbey; J. Frazier; J. R. Sanborne, H. Munier, T. L. Samuels and D. L. Hubbard; G. Wayne and D. Stellegos; H. H. Wylie; S. L. Parker; T. L. Fox.

(A) I think we will listen to D. Danielson. He says: "The wide viewing angle caused by seats too close to a screen of any given dimensions does cause eye strain, or perhaps it might be better to say such a condition manifests itself in eye strain. Under such a situation the covering of all the action on the screen necessitates excessive use of both the neck and eye muscles, and the muscular movement of the eyes, already under optical strain or stress, quickly fatigues those muscles.

"This strain will make itself known and the blame will not be placed where it justly belongs, but rather upon 'the pictures,' which really are not at all at fault, or would not be were the front seats placed a proper distance from the screen."

G. E. Doe replies to section A as follows: "It certainly does. Such a condition compels excessive use of the eye muscles, which fact even the most obtuse must concede, and such use constitutes strain. But the viewing angle is not all of it, since a wide viewing angle must, in the very nature of things, mean such a close viewing distance that the screen image will have more or less the effect of being out of focus, and we all know what that means—eye strain and plenty of it."

(B) L. M. and C. B. Traxler answer thus: "A too-short viewing distance may have several effects, none of which are good. (1) Being too close ruins sharpness of the screen image and this causes heavy strain upon the eyes of those so seated. (2) Because those so seated will see a far less beautiful picture, a too short viewing distance works injury to their enjoyment of the show, which may in the end kick back on the box office by, as our 'Dad' has so often said, causing less frequent attendance. (3) Increase of visibility of all defects in the picture. (4) Makes any movement of the whole picture more visible. (5) Operates to weary the eye muscles by compelling excessive use of them."

(C) I believe our old friend G. E. Doe has the best of the argument on this one. He says: "This, brother Richardson, is a really very big question and one that requires considerable nerve to tackle. However, I'll ask you to be lenient and do the best I can. To my way of thinking the size of the picture should depend entirely upon the auditorium it is to serve, but there are many crooks and turns even then.

"If the auditorium be deep and the front seats well removed from the screen, I would favor, generally speaking, a well illuminated 18 foot picture. On the other hand, if the auditorium be deep and the front seats close to the screen—well, F. H., it then is a tough proposition for both ends just cannot be well served. The rear end demands an 18 footer brilliantly illuminated, whereas the front end shrieks for a small picture not too brightly illuminated and—there we are.

"If the auditorium be shallow as to depth, but very wide, then any way it is considered, a small to medium size is best. If, for example, the depth be say 60 feet screen to rear rows, and the width 50 feet, I would say a 12 footer would serve well, with 15 feet of width as a maximum. My reason is that the small picture will be best for the large percentage of the audience seated relatively near the screen, whereas 12 to at most 15 feet would be amply large to provide good viewing conditions at 60 feet, particularly if the picture be well illuminated.

"It seems to me the trend is and should be, possibly due at least to some extent to your teachings, toward smaller pictures in this country and Canada, though I understand over in Australia and some other other-side-of-the-worlders they still stick to the enormous sizes. I believe a relatively small, well illuminated, beautiful picture is to be preferred to a huge, poorly illuminated, fuzzy-looking (I almost said idiotic looking) monstrosity."

In all of which I most heartily agree. I would like to know who this "Doe" chap really is, but he won't, thus far at least, disclose his identity, except to say he is a member of motion picture projectionist's local Union 110, IATSE and MPWO, Chicago.

Nizer Publishes Book About Code

Principles involved in motion picture code disputes among exhibitors and between exhibitors and exchanges will be summarized by Louis Nizer, motion picture attorney, in a book titled "New Courts of Industry: Self Regulation Under the Motion Picture Code," which will be published February 15th by Longacre Press.

Austin C. Keough, vice-president and general counsel of Paramount Publix, has written an introduction as chairman of the legal committee of the Code Authority.

Mr. Nizer will analyze decisions of the Code Authority and code boards in the field, although it is not written solely for the motion picture industry, being the first "scientific review of the actual workings of a code under the NRA," according to the publishers.

In five chapters, the book will touch on (1) "An industrial judicial system is born"; (2) Overbuying; (3) Other complaints before Grievance Boards; (4) Clearance and zoning; (5) "Looking back in review," and an appendix embracing the text of the code itself.

Mr. Nizer, distributors' attorney and counsel for the Film Board in New York, has arranged for sale of the book through code board offices in the field and the Code Authority.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AMONG THE MISSING: Richard Cromwell, Billie Seward—A good program picture. Pleased our Family Night audience. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 17-18.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

BEYOND THE LAW: Tim McCoy—Western railroad story with lots of speed and excitement, but it couldn't beat basketball competition.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BLIND DATE: Ann Sothern—This didn't break any records, and will never make the Hall of Fame.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Boy, oh boy, what a picture. In my opinion a better picture than "Lady for a Day" or "It Happened One Night." Here is real entertainment for every town, both large and small. This boy Capra knows his stuff when it comes to making real hits. In spite of bad weather and strong opposition the picture held up very well, but if played under normal conditions it would have been a box office wallop. Congratulations, Columbia, you gave me a mighty fine picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Victor McLaglen, John Gilbert, Walter Connolly, Fred Keating, Helen Vinson, Wynne Gibson—A swell bunch of favorite players in a "Grand Hotel" at sea idea that failed to click with our patrons, nor did it make the grade at the box office. Seemed to be over the heads of most of the customers. Running time, 92 minutes. Played January 9-10.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Victor McLaglen, John Gilbert, Wynne Gibson, Walter Connolly, Helen Vinson, Fred Keating—Good program but not a special and no draw.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones—Very good western to about average business. Played December 28-29.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt—This picture did not have the usual Jack Holt actions which our patrons expect, consequently the poorest Friday and Saturday business in over a year. A big disappointment and we are afraid it will hurt Holt in the future for our action patrons. Also the terrible title was a handicap. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 7-8.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—The most entertaining picture we have played since we opened up three years ago but cold weather hurt our business and perhaps playing it so late also hurt. We, however, had better than average business and our patrons were delighted. This picture is a big boost to Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert. Running time, 105 minutes. Played December 10-11.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: May Robson—This has its moments, but May Robson as a drunken old harridan makes the part too realistic to be pleasing.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: May Robson, Carole Lombard, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—It is quite evident that if anyone is to fill the place left vacant by the death of Marie Dressler that Miss Robson is the most likely candidate. While she had excellent support in Carole Lombard and others, it was distinctly her picture all the way. I personally think this picture was fully equal to "Lady for a Day." It was good all the way and beyond that, if you get what I mean. I'm not sure myself. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 25.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connelly, Roger Pryor—Not a bad little picture on the "Apple Annie" idea. Played January 20-21.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William—Too old and the print was terrible. Had several breaks and this ruins any picture for the exhibitor. Think we will stop picking up old ones as continual breaks hurt business and give your theatre a black eye. The pictures may be all right but we were too busy helping the operator to get much out of it. Played December 24-25.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson—This one ranks with the best of the year in my theatre. We loved it. Played January 4.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

LINE UP, THE: William Gargan, Marian Nixon—Just a program picture to average business. Have used better and a lot worse. It's a racketeer picture with some good action in the closing scenes. Played December 21-22.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

MAN'S GAME, A: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—A nice clean little picture with a background of a city fire department. It seems to have satisfied all who saw it. Running time, 58 minutes. Played January 11-12.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy—Fairly entertaining murder mystery drama.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THAT'S GRATITUDE: Frank Craven, Sheila Mannors—Not much to it and absolutely no names to bring in the customers. A very poor box office draw. Played January 11-12.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

First National

BRITISH AGENT: Leslie Howard, Kay Francis—Fairly good picture, rather slim Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Played this about even date with Broadway and was I proud? This was an inspiring as well as hugely entertaining picture. Dick Powell can sing all my songs for me and we all know where is Ruby at. The patrons, myself, and the box-office were all pleased. Played December 9-10.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—A very pleasing entertainment and it pleased just about 100 per cent. Some good songs by Powell and comments of Josephine Hutchinson were divided. Doubt if she will go over with a great bang but she is unusual and a very nice actress. A good little story and a very nice picture. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 14-15.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Splendid. More people stopped to tell us how they enjoyed this picture than on any we have shown for some time. Played January 27-28-29.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—A good picture with Dick singing three good numbers. Cast does good acting. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 20-21.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien—A complete flop at the box office and didn't take in half enough to pay expenses. Warner pulled out a picture and substituted this one at the last minute and I believe it just about broke my all time low. Just nothing to it and I didn't blame them for staying home. Played January 21-22.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown—Lots of fun in this one, but our patrons know little about the 6 day bike races and Joe E. Brown has never been so popular here except with the kids. We did not do much business but the picture is OK if your customers like Brown. Played December 12-13.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown, Maxine Doyle—Our patrons did not think it as good as "Circus Clown," but it pleased. Box office good in spite of zero weather. Played January 23-24.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—Amusing little program picture of college life. Played January 19.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—I didn't expect much but got a nice surprise at the box office and the picture was OK. College picture that appealed to the school trade. My patrons liked it and that usually makes me like them. Use the real life sweetheart angle of Brown and Louise. Frank Albertson just about stole the picture and Arline Judge was very good. Stepin Fetchit produced some laughs. Played January 7-8.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—A college picture without a single touchdown in a canload of 8 reels. Used on a surprise preview showing, it clicked in a big way with our patrons and proved above average entertainment. Running time, 74 minutes. Played January 5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—Very good Temple picture. Many liked Jane Darwell, too, and Charles Sellon played a swell part. Altogether, everybody had a good cry and went home happy. Played January 22-23.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

DAVID HARUM: Will Rogers—Perfect entertainment and box office value to correspond for a small town audience.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Outside competition hurt us on this but we were a little disappointed in the picture. Thought it fairly good but have seen O'Brien in better pictures. Running time, 65 minutes. Played December 14.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Slow moving and overloaded with dialogue—but our patrons thought it fair entertainment. Used on a midnight preview showing, it got by. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 29.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—Very ordinary picture. Did not please. Dragged out too long. Played January 18-19.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—Bad weather hurt us on this but the picture was not as good as we expected. However, we believe it would draw above average with good weather. Baxter is not as good as he used to be and his drawing power is lessening. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 18-19.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—Not a special, but it has more entertainment packed into its 80 minutes than many highly advertised productions. Our patrons were loud in their praises and business above average, so it was pleasing all around. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 1-2-3.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—An entertaining action picture that received good audience response. It was especially appealing to men, who seemed to enjoy it because of its lack of mushy love scenes.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson, Tom Brown, Anita Louise—15 to 16 below zero weather killed our business, but at that, enough came to clear us on expenses. Pleased all classes and all ages. Played January 20-21.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—By far and away the finest of Rogers' pictures, and that's something to rave about. Great story, perfectly cast, and the laughs come thick and fast. Pleased our patrons more than any picture we have shown for 6 months past. Business fine considering the fact that this is off season in this territory. Running time, 79 minutes. Played January 6-7-8.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Positively Rogers' best. A combination of stars, story and direction that puts it at the top. Long after most of the story is forgotten, the dynamic description of the Confederate soldier by Henry B. Walthall on the witness stand will linger on. Buy it.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—The first two reels set a nice pace that the balance of the picture failed to hold up to. Too bad Swanson did not have a better role to stage her comeback with, but both she and Boles were plain silly. Some nice music and beautiful choral numbers, but even they could not save it from flopping. No pull at the box office and fell flat with our patrons. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 4-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—I put this on Sunday and almost got killed. If you value your property and patrons and have no life insurance—look out. Leave it alone.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Jackie Searl—A modern version of the old favorite classic that did not lose its appeal by bringing it up to date. Splendid performances by the whole cast. Pleased generally, but failed to make a box office showing, probably due to unfavorable weather. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 13-14-15. —M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Jackie Searl—It's OK—but too much Sunday School-boy stuff. Not a special. Ordinary business.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—Pleasing entertainment for young and old. Played January 11-12.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Well, a full house, both nights. We like any picture that brings a full house. Played January 15-16.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

WORLD MOVES ON, THE: Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone—They tried to make an American "Cavalcade," but "Cavalcades" don't come just by wishing them. It is a big picture, lots of money has been spent on it, but it does not grip the interest. Too much war, for one thing. The idea of controllers of the world cotton don't ring true. Franchot Tone in 1825 and then again reborn and in his prime in 1910 don't just ring right. There is much in it to interest, but it lacks that certain something that makes for box office success. Drawing power a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Mascot

CRIMSON ROMANCE: Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza—Exciting and different from the usual war melodramas. A very good picture was the verdict. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 1-2.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

MGM

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Excellent for the whole family. Played January 15-16.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—A wonderful show that will perfectly satisfy adults who have any inclination toward literary and artistic matters, which means about five per cent of our patrons. A fair house the first night and empty seats the second. Running time, 105 minutes. Played January 18-19.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valleye Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—Not the best picture this star has ever made, but it's good adult entertainment. Played January 24-25.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—Very good. It pleased everyone that saw it and it drew extra business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—One of the most pleasing from the lion's cage in some time. Comedy-romance with Charles Butterworth almost stealing the show. Played January 17-18.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—A picture as refreshing as the breath of spring. My patrons liked it very much. It is my idea of stars perfectly cast and given perfect material. Butterworth deserves credit for his part. All in all, a very entertaining picture. Played January 27-28-29.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Bing Crosby, Marion Davies—Swell musical. Nice business. I sure like Bing Crosby and so do my patrons. Played December 7.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—Swell. As nice a picture as anyone could ask for. While it did no tremendous business, it pleased 100 per cent. Una Merkel certainly walked away with more than her share of the honors. That girl is good.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn—As the title indicates, this is a very sentimental bit of hokum but our patrons enjoyed it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HIDE-OUT: Robert Montgomery, Maureen O'Sullivan—One sweet show that was just down our alley. It hit 40 below zero weather so no business. It is entertainment plus. Give us more like it, Metro.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR: Charles Ruggles, Una Merkel—Ruggles may be funny but I can't class him thus. Dizzy sort of a thing. Played December 21.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, Karen Morley, May Robson, Gladys George—Just another picture which failed miserably at the box office.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY: Franchot Tone, May Robson, Karen Morley—For some companies this would be a good program picture, but for MGM it is mediocre. The audience response was fair.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Thetares, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Charles Butterworth, Jimmy Durante—My patrons made the tour, but it was a detour around my theatre. Durante kills any picture for me. I have shown pictures, however, that were not as good as this one.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE: Johnnie Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan—My people (at least the ladies) bawled me out for putting this type of picture on New Year's day but forgave me afterwards. It Pleased about 90 per cent and that's not so bad. Whenever we can please 90 per cent of any crowd, any day, we smile at the world in general and our patrons in particular (especially the ladies). Played January 1-2.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—William Powell and Myrna Loy make a fine team (not speaking of horses now), but the short time that Edward Ellis appeared his acting was superb. He was killed off too quickly, but the producers never let him rest, and the rest of the story was built around his murder and who killed him. So, in the person, or as "corpus delicti," he really dominated the picture. Myrna is at long last getting the attention and admiration she deserves. And her work deserves a lot. Played January 6-7.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Now here is the perfect production. Pleased 100 per cent. Powell and Loy are smooth as silk. What a grand pair they are. Played December 14.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

TREASURE ISLAND: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Kids came in droves and ate it up. Grown-ups all praised it. Right smart picture. Played December 28.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

VIVA VILLA: Wallace Beery—Sure it's a great attraction. Everyone pleased.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—Guess the picture is O. K., but it just is not the type for my town. It did no business. Helen Hayes played her part to perfection. Brian Aherne was not liked.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

WICKED WOMAN: Mady Christians, Charles Bickford—Good strong drama offering. The new star, Mady Christians, is very good. Played January 13-14. —J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Monogram

CITY LIMITS: Ray Walker, Sally Blane, Frank Craven—Good program picture. Will get by nicely. Played November 16.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney, Sterling Holloway—Story is of track meet. Sterling Holloway is good. Running time, 63 minutes. Played January 12-13.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

SING SING NIGHTS: Conway Tearle, Boots Mallory—Another sorry one from Monogram. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 8-9.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

TEXAS TERROR: John Wayne—Better than average western. It has a logical story and suited the fans. Running time, 54 minutes. Played January 26. —H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Thetare, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

Paramount

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—Sir Gilbert Parker's novel made into interest-holding drama. It's true that here is one murder, a suicide, an affair, but none of leads involved and story so interesting no one seemed to think of those incidents out of line. Played January 18-19.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—My patrons are tiring fast of Mae West, and her pictures are all about the same. People went to see her first two pictures through curiosity but she seems to have lost her appeal. Also the censors have cramped her style. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 9-10.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Henry Wiicoxon, Warren William—Spectacular pictures seem to have lost their appeal. I liked it but opinion of my patrons was varied. Some said wonderful, others said poor. You've played that kind and know what I mean. A class picture, and a good one, is our personal opinion, but doubt its box office appeal. Played January 2-3.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RYHTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian —Very good. Joe Penner has big possibilities.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

CRIME WITHOUT PASSION: Claude Rains—Here we have a picture over which there has been considerable controversy. Some give it zero, others rate it highly. Personally, I am of the opinion that no "zero" picture could provoke so much argument. Rains, so it appears, was of the opinion the "world was his oyster" and wound up by being the world's worst lobster. I enjoyed seeing it, some did not, and it is fair to presume that was the impression it made elsewhere. Played January 18.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle —Average Crosby. Some thought it good, and others not so good as his previous efforts. Kitty Carlisle did not go over so well, due, probably, to the difficult part she played. What do other exhibs think? Played January 25-26.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack—We had this on a Bargain Night and consider it a good small town picture. Tracy overacts in spots but otherwise he is OK. Our Bargain Night crowd seemed to enjoy it and it is OK for small towns. Baby LeRoy not much. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 17-18.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID, THE: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy—Used on a midnight preview showing, this went over nicely with our patrons. A Damon Runyon story with the typical Runyon twists, well acted, even though Tracy in his serious moments emotes like a stew with a bad case of the jitters. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 12.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Guy Lombardo, Burns and Allen—Too much Gracie Allen for my patrons and they didn't like it. Not much of a picture and quite silly. Think Burns and Allen would be better in minor roles. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 26-27.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, Zasu Pitts—A simple human story made into perfect entertainment. Great work by all the cast, especially the sincere and beautiful performance of Pauline Lord in the title role. It's a 100 per cent box office bet for a small town.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Evelyn Venable—This one slipped up on me but I did better than average business and it is an excellent weekend attraction, especially appealing to rural patrons. I should have advertised this in the country and would have done far above average. A good homespun story closely following the book. Played January 4-5.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—Producers should make more of the good old salt-of-the-earth pictures like this. They show results, both in satisfaction to patrons and at the box office.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple—As fine a little picture for a Christmas offering as we ever showed. We could say a great many good things about this star and this picture but they have already been said by abler pens than mine so I'll just add "me too." Played December 25-26.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

OLD FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—Entertaining comedy drama, fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

OLD FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—A good old-fashioned comedy that kept our audiences laughing from beginning to end. I consider it Fields' best.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ONE HOUR LATE: Joe Morrison, Helen Twelvetrees—No, it was not the Limited that was late, but an elevator in a big office building and its tieup, involving all the principals of the story, changed the current of several lives. Patrons seemed to enjoy the picture. This fellow, Morrison, has a voice that will take him into more screen successes. Played January 13-14.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Edward Arnold, Arthur Byron, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin, Osgood Perkins—Our patrons must have vanished, too. Poorest Sunday, Monday, Tuesday for a long time, in spite of heavy advertising campaign. As to the picture, it is very good. Played January 20-22.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—This was fair. Liked better by women than men. Think Sylvia Sidney is capable and very nice. She deserves better pictures. Played December 28-29.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin, Pert Kelton—A surprise. A neat, clean, entertaining comedy. Well liked. Played January 25-26.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Funny and pleasing, but not as good a draw as this team used to be.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CRIME DOCTOR, THE: Otto Kruger—In which Otto nearly proves his contention that a real smart guy can commit a murder and get away with it, and the steps he took to prove this and incidentally to win a thousand dollars kept our audience spellbound throughout. Of course, it wouldn't do to be able to prove anything like that, there must be a slip-up somewhere for the good of society, so the producers provided the slip-up. And Otto "slipped." It was very cleverly constructed tale, and we enjoyed it immensely. Played January 9.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS, THE: Anna Harding, John Boles—In which Ann was given a real chance to act. Many of her late pictures did not do just that. While probably more of a woman's picture than for general patronage, it seemed to give general satisfaction here. A novel twist was given this picture by presenting it wrong end to, then a flashback to tell the story. It mystified some of our patrons, reminded one of a horse with two tails, if there is such an animal. It is one of those pictures that should be seen from the start. Good drama, I calls it. Played January 20-21.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—Here is a great picture and should be and will be a great box office attraction. There is only one drawback for the average American town, that is the Scotch dialect. The picture holds your attention from start to finish, and women folks will rave about it. I struck the worst blizzard in years and of course lost money, but with fair weather this picture would have been a money maker, and best of all it pleases everyone.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

OF HUMAN BONDAGE: Leslie Howard, Bette Davis—Bette Davis delivers a performance that will not soon be forgotten. It places her at the top of the list of character actresses. The other players all do well, but her part is outstanding. Pictures of this type, for a while anyway, will be few and far between—the "Decency Code" and Legion of Decency will see to that. As a sophisticated drama it will satisfy those who enjoy this type. Business on this a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

STINGAREE: Irene Dunne, Richard Dix—A really enjoyable offering, but the title did not have any drawing power. Irene Dunne proved conclusively that she can both act and sing well. It was like old times to see Conway Tearle again, and Mary Boland contributed some merriment with her prima donna aspirations. But the story had one bad fault, i.e., its ending. It is a wellknown fact that stories must provide some sort of punishment or reformation of the criminal to teach good moral, but in this case, the picture ends with Dix fleeing with Miss Dunne, while still unregenerate, and she seems to like it. In other words, the criminal is still criminal and outlaw, yet Miss Dunne, who has won fame in all the principal cities of the world, is quite willing to fly with him, giving up all she had worked so hard for. It sorta condones or glorifies crime in a way. Maybe I'm wrong again.—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Summerville and Pitts—RKO promised to put this team over in a big way, but they had their fingers crossed. This picture is very tame.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Thetre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville, William Gaxton, Bruce Cabot—Did not stand up on a double feature on Saturday night. This team does not draw for us any more. Picture not so good. Played January 25-26.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper, Fay Wray—Plenty rough and plenty good. Some of the ladies turned up their noses but the men were all for it. I was. Played January 11.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Worthy of being one of the ten best. The producers, directors, adapters are to be congratulated on making Edmond Dantes a man that seeks justice instead of just revenge. Worth all the praise that has been heaped upon it. Will satisfy the highbrow as well as the lowbrow. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LAST GENTLEMAN, THE: George Arliss—The quality of my patrons for this show was above par but the quantity far below. Arliss has no appeal to the masses but the few patrons who come enjoy him immensely. An unusual picture and Arliss was good as usual. He simply is not small town but it is a pleasure to show his pictures. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 5-6.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

SORRELL AND SON: H. B. Warner—Perfect. One could not ask for a finer production. Played November 29.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY GO ROUND: Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Jack Benny—Thought this a good show and we had better business second night than first, which is very unusual for this town. However, very cold weather first night may have been part of the reason but the show was OK and our patrons enjoyed it and told us about it. Played December 19-20.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—"Resurrection" under a new title. It's good entertainment, fine direction, well acted and will stand extra exploitation, also an extra day's run. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 13-14-15.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

Universal

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO: Fay Wray, Paul Lukas—This is a very good program picture with enough comedy, romance and suspense to put it over. It is well produced. Fine audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CROSBY CASE, THE: Wynne Gibson, Onslow Stevens—Another one of those mysteries in which everyone is suspected of murder except the guilty party. Passably entertaining.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Ned Sparks, Louise Beavers, Rochelle Hudson—An excellent picture. It's time more of the serious mother-love type of pictures were produced. Jazz stories have killed more patronage than anything you can mention. Running time, 109 minutes. Played January 24-25.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

LET'S TALK IT OVER: Chester Morris, Mae Clarke—Few came to see it and it's just as well. I'd call it a flop in every respect. Played January 1.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

LOVE CAPTIVE, THE: Nils Asther, Gloria Stuart—One of the worst so-called feature pictures to come from a major studio during the past year. The picture appears to have been produced on a very low budget as it is very cheap. The actors also appear to poor advantage. The audience response was very unfavorable.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM: Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes, Mary Carlisle—Very good picture. Edward Arnold great. Subzero weather killed it, but I'm going to bring it back for repeat date. It's that good. Played January 18.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

POOR RICH, THE: Edna Mae Oliver, Edward Everett Horton—This comedy is below average and is best suited for double feature programs where it should be played with a strong feature.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones—Good average Western business to correspond.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—Nice program picture. Not as big as I expected from criticisms. Played December 24.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan,

Binnie Barnes—Unusual lot of favorable comment on this.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Binnie Barnes, Elizabeth Young—Very good picture of family life. Take the whole family and can be played on your best nights. Better than expected.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town patronage.

WAKE UP AND DREAM: Russ Columbo, June Knight, Roger Pryor—This was the last feature we have shown starring the late Russ and we fully believe he would have grown in popularity if this picture is any criterion to judge by. The passing of any individual under the circumstances in which he met his death is sad indeed but doubly tragic when he is standing on the very threshold of fame. The words "death loves a shining mark" apply here. Played Jnuary 11th—Peter Bylsma, Victory Theatre, Napoleonville, La. Small town patronage.

WAKE UP AND DREAM: June Knight, Roger Pryor, Russ Columbo—Universal has a nice picture here. Too bad Columbo passed on. The picture pleased 100 per cent. Played January 18-19.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—Nice little western.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—First half slow but last half a riot of fun. Played on Bargain Night and my patrons seemed to enjoy it immensely. A good small town picture but doubt if it would draw on better nights of week. Played December 31-January 1.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—A good show. Good acting by Paul Muni and Miss Davis. Running time, 88 minutes. Played January 13-14.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—This is a good mystery number, one that is hard to outguess. Did fairly well at the box office.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—A good mystery picture. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 22-23.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

DESIRABLE: Jean Muir, George Brent—This is a very good production, but it failed at the box office. Miss Muir is good and played her part well. She is also easy to gaze upon.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

I AM A THIEF: Ricardo Cortez, Mary Astor—A mystery picture that was fairly good. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 15-16.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Warren William—Another good production. While Miss Stanwyck does not draw any extra business for me, her pictures do please all that come out to see them. —A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

WHITE COCKATOO: Jean Muir, Ricardo Cortez—A good mystery story—well produced. Will be well received by the mystery-minded patrons. Played January 26.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

RADIO-DOUGH: Sidney and Murray—An average comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

Educational

BEANSTALK JACK: Terry-Toon—Good one. Children liked it as it was made after the Jack and the Beanstalk story. Running time, 6 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

CAMPUS HOOFER, THE: Frolics of Youth Series—A nice little comedy with some good dance numbers. Got the laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

FIRST SNOW, THE: Terry-Toon—A good cartoon. Running time, 6 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

HELLO PROSPERITY: Andy Clyde Comedy—Laughs with music and greatly enjoyed by our patrons. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Coronet Comedies—Well this one was good and our patrons got plenty of laughs. Also some good tap dancing by Tom Patricola and Buster West. You'll like this and so will your patrons. Running time, 2 reels.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Buster West, Tom Patricola—A very good comedy. Those two can sure dance. Some of my patrons saw it two or three times. Running time, 19 minutes.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

HOT SANDS: Terry-Toon—Ouch! This one hurt. Pity the poor children.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

HOUSE WHERE I WAS BORN, THE: Song Hit Stories—Entertaining musical, well recorded. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

KING'S DAUGHTER, THE: Terry-Toons Series—A good cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NIFTY NURSES: Sally Sweet—A fairly good comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

SUPER-STUPID: Coronet Comedies—Have seen a lot better but it was right funny in spots.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

TRAV'LLING THE ROAD: Song Hit Stories—We simply cannot get good one-reel subjects from Fox. Their features are OK but we cannot seem to get good shorts from them.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

TWO LAME DUCKS: Coronet Comedy—It's a relief to get an excellent two-reel comedy after months of poor two-reelers. This one is a laugh producer and it's an outdoor duck-hunting story which gets us away from the silly society stuff. Running time, 2 reels. Played January 26.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

YOUR STARS FOR 1935: Wynn—This astrologer is positively uncanny in his predictions. Last year we used the 1934 issue and many of the predictions therein came to pass during the year. Clever presentation which went over big with our patrons. Running time, 11 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIRLEY TEMPLE SHORT SUBJECT SERIES: Well, we tried another novel trick and it was a great success, better than the biology films which we played last week. I thought of getting together all of the Shirley Temple comedies of two reels each and play them at one performance and see what would happen. Well, it was a clean up. The pictures were "Pardon My Pups," "What's To Do?" and "Managed Money" and then we had a cartoon and other short subjects. The children went for this like hot cakes and it was the best program we had for a long time. We handed out pictures of Shirley to everyone attending the pictures. Running time, 20 minutes each. —Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

Fox

ADVENTURES OF THE NEWSREEL CAMERAMAN: Very fine telling of the sea and its perils and hardships. Good print. Played also with Shirley Temple shorts and one would be surprised at what extent the adults come to see Miss Temple. Running time, 9 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MGM

BENNY FROM PANAMA: Musical Comedies—Slapstick comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

BRITISH GUIANA: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—This was an exceptionally good travelogue. Interesting and beautiful.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

CRACKED ICEMAN: Charley Chase—Just another two-reel filler.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

DISCONTENTED CANARY, THE: Happy Harmonies Series—Beautiful cartoon in color.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

OLD PIONEER: Happy Harmonies Series—Good color cartoon.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre. Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STRIKES AND SPARES: Pete Smith—Interesting short of bowling experts.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SWITZERLAND, THE BEAUTIFUL: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—Beautiful travel talk in color.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TALE OF THE VIENNA WOODS: Happy Harmonies Series—Beautiful cartoon with fine music, but so many of my patrons did not know the story, I fear, the effect was lost. Why not a resumé or narration to better appreciate subjects like this? (Dont mind the split infinitive.)—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A HATFUL: Charley Chase—Okay Chase comedy; much better than his other recent ones. My audience laughed, and I thought it above average. Running time, 2 reels.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Paramount

AXE ME ANOTHER: Popeye the Sailor Cartoons—Very funny cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich.—Small town patronage.

MOVIE MEMORIES: No. 1—Tribute to now departed stars. Interesting.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

POOR CINDERELLA: Betty Boop Cartoons—Very beautiful and pleasing colored cartoon.—Foy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RADIO ROUNDUP, A: Headliner—These are good one-reel subjects and our patrons find them interesting.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

WE AIM TO PLEASE: Popeye The Sailor—Good as usual. Running time, 9 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

YACHT CLUB BOYS GARDEN PARTY: Headliners Series—Amusing musical.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

YACHT CLUB BOYS GARDEN PARTY: Headliner Series—I thought it punk but the patrons thought it fine. Maybe I'm wrong. Running time, 9 minutes.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

DUMBBELL LETTERS NO. 3: Some of these are funny but it seems in pood taste to publish some poor fellow's private correspondence who is trying to express himself on a matter of desperate importance to him.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IN THE DEVIL DOG HOUSE: Clark and McCullough—Fairly funny.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

IN THE PARK: Tom and Jerry Cartoon—RKO must have dug this old one up. Not very good.—A. B. Jefferis, New Piedmont Theatre, Piedmont, Mo. Small town patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—This is a marvelous example of what all-musical short subjects can and should be like but seldom are. The perfected color has been put to interesting tests, with the actors passing through different colored lights and wearing contrasting colored costumes and it impresses me as being the most natural yet. It is the sort of film one enjoys seeing several times, as you can be assured of finding something new each showing. The tune "La Cucaracha" has been popularized over the radio and it is effectively used in the picture. This featurette meant something at the box office and it received fine audience response. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas.

United Artists

STEEPLE CHASE: Mickey Mouse—These Mickeys are class. This was particularly funny.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

THREE LITTLE PIGS: Silly Symphonies—Very fine short. Nice coloring. Got a big hand.—Frank Sabon, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

WINTER: Silly Symphony—This is a very good comedy that should please all who see it. Technicolor would have added much to the entertainment of this. It is rather old, but still makes excellent entertainment for this season of the year. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

Universal

GUS VAN AND HIS NEIGHBORS: Mentone No. 2-A—Screen vaudeville that moves along at a fast pace. Good entertainment, with a knockout burlesque dance for a wow finish. Running time, 18 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

KNICKERBOCKER KNIGHTS: Mentone — The Mentone two-reelers are all very satisfactory, but this one is a topper. The acts are excellent and it also has plenty of comedy interspersed. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

NIGHT IN A NIGHT CLUB, A: Mentone No. 1-A—Fair entertainment. Running time, two reels.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

ALL SEALED UP: Ben Blue—Plenty of laughs in this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

BUDDY'S ADVENTURES: Looney Tunes—A good cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

GIRL AT THE IRONING BOARD, THE: Merrie Melodies—Amusing cartoon, featuring the Ironing Board song.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

GOOD BADMINTON: Pepper Pot Series—Extra good subject. Interesting game with plenty of action. Feature it. Running time, one reel.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

OFF THE BEAT: Morton Downey—This is only fair entertainment of the musical comedy type. There are plenty of beautiful girls, good music and pretty costumes, but the story is weak and did not please. Let's have a better one next time. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

OFF THE BEAT: Morton Downey—This is a very good short. Have had better and also worse. Running time, two reels.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

OUT OF ORDER: Ben Blue—This is a very good comedy of the slapstick variety and full of laughs. Blue is very good and always pleases our patrons. This is just the type of comedy that pleases everyone. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RADIO REEL NO. 1: Pepper Pot—A good short subject and this series as well as their Vaudeville Reels are going to prove good for us.—A. E. Christian, Wayne Theatre, Monticello, Ky. Small town patronage.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Raymondville, Texas

Dear Herald:

Some readers may not know where Raymondville is, but if they will take a Texas map and find Harlingen in the Rio Grande valley and then go north on the cement road about 20 miles they will come to Raymondville. Raymondville is located in the heart of the Bermuda onion country. They don't grow grape fruit up there, just onions and cotton.

Bob Smith of the Mission theatre at Mission came by our dugout at Alamo a few days ago and took us up to Raymondville in his new limousine and it couldn't go over 95 miles an hour, at least Bob couldn't make it go any faster. You may not know it, but Bob looks enough like F. W. Zimmerman of the Palace theatre at San Marcos, Texas, to be one of his twins; in fact, they all say they are twins. They looked almost exactly alike to us except that Zim has a new baby at his house and Bob likes fried oysters.

Bob told us that they shipped twelve thousand carloads of onions out of Raymondville last season. We don't remember whether he said thousands or hundreds, but anyhow it was a lot of onions, and we know now what the peculiar fragrance was up in Nebraska every time the wind came out of southern Texas.

Bob also said that they shipped twenty thousand bales of cotton out of Raymondville last season, and if you want to know how much cotton this is, you can get your pencil and figure 500 pounds to the bale and you can tell how many Mexicans it took to pick it.

Like Wisconsin Rapids

Raymondville reminds us, in some ways, of Wisconsin Rapids up in Wisconsin. Raymondville is divided into two parts by the Missouri Pacific railroad, the east and west. The Raymon theatre is on the east side and Wisconsin Rapids is divided into two parts by the Wisconsin river, the east and west, but the theatre is on the west side and is presided over by two mighty swell folks, but somehow we just can't remember their names.

We met two old friends at Raymondville who are operating the Raymon theatre for Bob, Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Sohn. Mrs. Sohn knew us as soon as we walked up to the theatre, and she called us by name and said she remembered us because we called on them twice when they were operating the theatre at Mountain View, Oklahoma. Gee whiz. Oh gosh, what a memory.

Then we met another oldtimer at Raymondville by the name of B. V. Crowell, who used to own the Raymon theatre before Bob bought it. B. V. is a typical longhorn and an expert fisherman, and he said if we would come over there some day he would take us down to Red Fish bay and show us how to catch fish. He also said he was sure he could have a lot of fun with us, and we are going to go, too, just as soon as we can slip away from the doctor, who says we must not exercise too much. (Doggone these doctors, we wish they would attend to their own business.)

Red Fish bay is a body of water lying between Padre Island and the main land. Padre Island separates the Gulf of Mexico from the main land and is about three miles from the main land and the bay is cut off from the Gulf by this island. This bay is about 125 miles long and in this bay is where the ducks and geese from the north come to spend the winter, and it is in this bay where the drakes pick out a new mamma for the coming season. It's funny about these drakes, isn't it? They ought to spend their winters in Hollywood.

Oldtimer in Business

Bob owns another theatre at Donna which is operated by Bert Boswell. Although Bert is not very old, he looks like an oldtimer in the business, and we judge that the Plaza theatre is operated about as it should be operated. We don't know whether there is a Mrs. Boswell or not, we didn't ask him, it would have been none of our business anyhow, but we will bet there is.

Over at Mission the other day we met Ed Blumenthal of the Amity Film Corporation and he was selling Bob "Beyond Bengal," an animal picture. Ed impressed us as a regular fellow but he said that when his company made the picture they failed to put him in with the rest of 'em.

Sounds Like Motor Oil

B. V. Crowell, over at Raymondville, told us that should we go out hunting in the jungles around there we should look out for havalenas. But maybe you don't know what havelena is. B. V. says they are very dangerous to fool with if you cripple one. A havalena is a cross between a hyena and an Arkansas razorback hog, and B. V. says that when Noah landed his ark down at Pt. Isabella he left the gate open and a couple of hogs and a hyena got out and have been running loose in the Texas jungles ever since, until they have developed into a breed known as havalenas, and they are very wild but awfully tame if you cripple one and can't get up a tree.

We want to make this friendly suggestion to you. If you should go into a meat market over across the Rio Grande to buy some ham be sure that it bears the brand of Armour or Swift or you are liable to get some havalena, and should you want a beefsteak, if you don't get one from a corn-fed steer up north you are liable to get one from a cactus-fed burro down south.

Cowpuncher Lawyers

Someone once said that "marriages are made in Heaven" and this statement has been accepted by the public as a fact. Well, maybe they are, but we have known some that were made in the full of the moon, "when the moon came over the mountain," and that's why so many cowpunchers have developed into divorce lawyers in Reno.

If you come down here and don't bring your canary with you and some fellow wants to sell you one, look out or he is liable to sell you a Mexican burro, for they call 'em "Desert Canaries" down here.

We have just received a copy of the Citizen News, a daily paper printed in Hollywood, bearing a photograph of the Quillan family, under which we read as follows: "Bigger and better cards for the new year is the greeting sent to Joseph F. Quillan and family, 4555 Findlay Ave., by their fans at McAdoo, Penn. The card arrived in the New Year mail in four sections, tied together by a thick cord. It required 89 three-cent stamps to send it and it bore 382 signatures. The card measured 32 by 48 inches and was fashioned by friends at the Palace theatre at McAdoo, where the Quillan family appeared once in vaudeville."

In addition to Mr. and Mrs. Quillan it showed John, Margaret, Eddie, Helen, Isabelle and Rosebud.

Buster, Marie and Rose Quillan were not shown in the picture, presumably because Ma Quillan had washed their ears and sent them to school before the photographer came.

Eddie, you know, plays on the screen and is generally put in secondary parts, but if they don't go to putting him in leads pretty soon we are going to make a fuss about it. Eddie is a mighty swell youngster and can play rings around a whole lot of people who are base-drummed and can't speak English very good; so we are going to tell him what we wrote our friend Lyle Talbot once, and that is to look out and not let Hollywoood go to his head. Remember, Eddie, there is something to life besides electric lights. The love of home and mother beats a 24-sheet a mile.

We'd like to know who it was who had that "Shelterbelt" pipe dream. It must have been the man who cut two holes in the basement wall so the cats could go in and out—one large hole for the papa and mamma and a small one for the kittens.

What this country needs is a few more brainstorms.

KNOWING WHERE TO TAP

As is to be expected in a business such as ours, your venerable Chairman from time to time receives the confidences of members not entirely happy in their jobs. These confidences are a privilege not to be held lightly and to the best of our halting abilities we endeavor to smooth out a few of the bumps. With this in mind perhaps there may be other members who might find relief in unbosoming themselves, who would like to talk it over 'round the old coal stove. If so, then let it be duly moved and seconded that this week's page be given over to a discussion by the old Colonel on the general subject of—"Getting Ahead in Showbusiness", or "What to Do Until the Doctor Comes".

So, gentlemen of the Round Table, please pass the eatin' tobacco, make yourselves comfortable, and let us proceed.

Charley Schwab, the steel man, being queried on how he rose to his high rung of the ladder, replied that it just was his good luck. Mebbe so. Some do get there without any particular struggle. Others make it by deliberately charting their careers—by allowing nothing to swerve them from the straight line they have selected as the shortest distance between two points—the bottom and the top. To be listed also are the relatives, the birds-who-got-in-on-a-raincheck, the yes-men, the birds-who-knew-the-boss-when, and the rest of the camp followers generally found attached to any army on the march.

But please keep in mind, though there may be many devious paths to the top, only one quality will keep one up there. And that's the stuff one has on the ball. In proof of which, dissenters are requested to check over the list of those holding down important assignments who are respected for their ability and general savvy. It will be found that those lasting longest generally click oftenest.

You can't keep a good man down. The boy with something to say has got to be heard.

And that goes double for those members who are discontented in their present situations, who have earned the right to spread their wings and get out into the sunlight as have other Round Tablers who have made good. Yes, some get there before others, but the time element is the only thing that can hold back the showman who belongs further up front. Even Soviet Russia has been forced to the conclusion that individual ability must be recognized.

Granted that there are theatremen holding down fat jobs with no more equipment than a talent for abuse and a prayer. But they won't last. They never have. A strong man must have good feet. The weak sisters usually break down with fallen arches. It's usually true that over a long stretch, the right guys manage to stick. And you may lay six-two-and-even, that the wrong guys always wind up behind the old eight-ball.

The above observations may be disputed vehemently by a lot of good men who bear scars from being kicked around by the square toes of the phonies. But over a long stretch of years that encompass our checkered career, we have found what we say is generally the McCoy, and we're willing to take the affirmative side of any further debate on the subject.

And in concluding our rambling dissertation, may we recall the oft-told tale of the main dynamo in a textile mill that stopped running right in the midst of a flock of rush orders. The mill owners were frantic and called in all the local experts. But nothing happened.

Finally, some one suggested a famed engineer in Boston and he was wired to come on. The expert arrived, glanced at the giant machine, took out a small hammer, crawled inside, tapped a few times with his hammer, crawled out, threw on the switch—and lo, the dynamo started again.

Some days later, the expert's bill arrived. It was for $1,000. The mill people thought it rather high, and asked him to itemize his charges. The bill, itemized, came back as follows:

|---|---|
| "For tapping dynamo | $1.00 |
| "For knowing where to tap | $999.00" |

DISCOVERY

A few years ago we read a short story in which the hero, struck by a falling apple while seated under a tree, discovered for himself the law of gravitation by the process of reasoning developed under the same circumstances by Sir Isaac Newton in 1665.

Red Kann recently ran a piece about Mrs. Baier, Kansas City suburban exhibitor, who, faced with a possible loss of business due to lowered admissions in the downtown ace houses, sent folders advertising her shows to an extensive mailing list. Discovering that business picked up considerably as a result, the lady has decided "to do some more advertising."

Dickens Club Aids "Copperfield" Date

Contact with members of the Charles Dickens Club for endorsements on "David Copperfield" at the New York Capitol was productive of good returns in addition to the many plugs engineered on the date by Billy Ferguson of MGM. These took the form of previews for members of New York Board of Education, among others. Resultant opinions were mimeographed and sent to all principals with copy of teacher's manual on the picture and study guide.

Novelty that appealed was distribution of imprinted wide rubber bands at schools and in Wall Street. Other handouts included book marks, door hangers and blotters. Copperfield booklets, stickers and book store displays were given wide circulation.

Store tieups were comprehensive, a luggage hookin landing windows and display ads from a number of shops. Of more than passing interest was a Fifth Avenue window containing large cutouts of leading characters, upon which were made up clothing costumes as were worn by the stars in the picture.

At the Capitol, two weeks ahead, ten 9-foot cutouts of the stars were displayed in different parts of the foyer, and mammoth open book from which Dickens characters peered, was planted alongside the grand staircase. Special front also was employed. Newspaper tieins were topped with caption contest in New York American.

Harry Reiners, publicity director, Proctor's, Newark, N. # $2600 Cash Prizes On 'Ruggles' Contest

Paramount swings into the 1935 contest line with announcement of $2,600 in cash prizes for best exploitation campaign on "Ruggles of Red Gap," money split as follows:

First prize, $600; second, $400; third, $300; fourth, $200; fifth, $100, and twenty prizes of $50 each. Contest starts Feb. 15 and winds up April 12, with duplicate prizes given in case of tie.

Bob Gillham's department is preparing an exploitation manual containing rules, detailed exploitation and publicity suggestions that may be incorporated in campaigns. However, the last is no "must" and entrants who do not use them, will not be penalized. Usual evidence is required on all things done, and decisions will be based on effectiveness of campaign in individual spots in relation to theatre and town, regardless of size.

Uniform scrap book is available at Paramount exchanges, free to contestants to use in making up campaigns. Contest is to cover advertising and publicity as well as exploitation.

All entries in "Ruggles of Red Gap" campaign are also eligible for the Quigley Awards competition. However, to receive consideration for the plaques, entries must be at Quigley headquarters before the monthly deadlines. These will be turned over to the Paramount after they have been judged for the Quigley Awards. Entrants who wish to send duplicate campaigns in both competitions may do so.

In the case of those entrants sending in one campaign and wishing to be represented in the two projects, notice of such should be attached conspicuously to campaigns to prevent any miss-outs.

Central Americans Also Go "Tarzan"

A rather startling street bally as can be seen by the accompanying photo on "Tarzan and His Mate" was used by O. Beer in San Salvador, Central America for seventeen of his circuit's theatres. Grotesque masks depicting various jungle animals were placed over heads of boys who rode on top of bannered truck to the accompaniment of a Miramba Band. Oscar tells us each boy was given a pass to see the show and we hope they left their masks off when they attended.

Local Gals Go Hollywood On Totman's Promotion

Few months ago, Jimmy Totman, at the Warner-Erie, Pa., tied in with one of his dailies to send local gal to Pittsburgh to interview Dick Powell, appearing there locally. And now, Totman expands his horizon with a hookup with his A & P stores on "Flirtation Walk" in a voting contest to send two girls all the way to Hollywood.

Stores took care of all the necessary expenses, the stunt being put on with 40 units of the chain in that area. Paper also came in, running daily coupons, stores giving these with purchases, Totman reporting over half million of the coupons in circulation each of which carried theatre ad.

Special displays were carried in all A & P units, stores additionally devoting much newspaper space to details of contest. Daily ran buildup stories weeks ahead and plugged the gag thoroughly during its run. Included in these were front page breaks with three column pictures of winners, and action shots of girls in Hollywood visiting with Powell and other Warner stars.

Other merchants cooperated by donating dresses, shoes, hats, gloves, travelling bags to the winners. These stores gave windows to the tiein and in some instances, carried copy in ads.

Outside of the contest hookups, Totman worked on a lot of other effective slants, two of which were newspaper tieups, one on a bowling contest and the other, on a football score guessing contest. Two full co-op pages were promoted, and girls distributed teaser cards on street corners.

The campaign received full coverage in the thorough manner expected in the Totman exploitations, but the vote idea of course topped every thing, netting the greatest amount of publicity any Erie theatre has received from any one angle.

Preliminary sprints were held at nights and exhibitions during the day. Final races were held on the stage in conjunction with picture's preview.

City officials cooperated with Hart on a field day and costume bicycle parade at local park under auspices of Recreation Department. Announcements and entry blanks were distributed at all schools, mentions also being made in classrooms. The Quaker kiddies costumes events were put on and wide publicity was secured. Ed states this is one of the most comprehensive tieups he ever worked on.

PRESS BOOK OPINIONS

"ZIM" DIFFERS WITH ED FINNEY

Dear Mike:

"In defense of press books" seems to be an appropriate title for advertising men with major producing organizations, who, in many cases, prepare ads for press books which can only fit the purses of a de luxe, or downtown second run theatre.

Naborhood theatres, which comprise the bulk of our theatre industry are the "forgotten men." Discounting the use of community newspapers where you can buy space for passes, or practically a few cents, and which is oftimes used as a weapon to solicit money from local merchants for so-called guaranteed advertising, every naborhood theatre is eager to sell their wares via reputable metropolitan newspapers. BUT! In almost every situation, at 40c per line, how much space can a small theatre operator use with from three to five changes a week? Also, don't overlook the fact that in each metropolitan city, there are more than two daily newspapers.

Press Books Need Improvement

Press books are the greatest aid an exhibitor has. There is no doubt about this important point. However, it can stand much needed improvement. . . . Mr. Finney probably doesn't realize how important a role an ad plays in the success of a picture. He probably hasn't worked directly with press books distributed by all producing organizations every day of the week. That's how flaws are noticed—and painfully so.

In place of delving deeply into detailed accounts, allow us to enumerate suggestions as follows:

1. More time should be given to small ads, remembering that the slug must be placed in the same mat which contains the theatre slug, date, policy, price and perhaps associate feature.

2. Heads of all advertising and publicity departments MUST issue orders to their exchanges to discontinue false economy by ordering at least two mats of each ad as indicated in press books. Our trouble lies in the fact that when you do find an ad suitable for your needs, the exchange replies, "We have only one set." What about this situation Mr. Finney? What good are press books then?

Rates Press Book Ads

In laying out a campaign an exhibitor finds himself up a tree when trying to arrange ads. In our opinion, the press books receiving low rating are Columbia and Radio as far as ads are concerned. Warner, Paramount and Fox are about the best to work with intelligently. Naturally ideas differ in most cases as regards copy, but the make-up, material and fine way in which matter is handled, makes it a pleasure to go after a picture which you think has no possibilities, and we have numerous to handle every week. Warner Bros., Paramount and Fox save us the expense of an art department. Universal and Twentieth Century are acceptable to every situation. No reference is made to Metro press books because the writer doesn't have the pleasure of writing or exploiting its product in St. Louis.

3. Since the press book is an aid to the exhibitor, why not, in making deals with various novelty concerns, try a little bartering on price? This too, would prove a great aid to the exhibitor. Mr. Finney! You know the old adage, "To make money—you must spend money"—but not foolishly.

4. As a whole, press books serve as a great incentive for an exhibitor whose business sense includes "aggressiveness." Otherwise, all the dynamic ideas contained in press is a second bible. There, we get an honest idea of what the picture is about . . . spotted here and there with superlatives and adjectives long discarded when Hecht and MacArthur, the budding producers, cub'd. Nevertheless, the story is there and that's what we need. The ideas are there—and coupled with one or two of inner-suggestions, a good campaign evolves.

In a concensus, Mr. Finney, press books are a great aid! More than you can begin to suspect. But we certainly wish advertising heads would take suggestion "two" seriously!—Al Zimbalist, Adv. Dir., St. Louis Amusement Co.

AND THIS MEMBER DIFFERS WITH "ZIM"

Dear Mike:

Thanks for bringing up the press book discussion, I believe some real good will come of it.

In my humble opinion, United Artists and RKO put out the best press books. The other producers leave much to be desired and could easily improve their press books 100%.

Uses Outside Mat Service

I note the letters you publish aim criticism at press books in general, which is as fruitless as criticising the human race in general. I believe in being specific and am setting down my suggestions as follows:

1. MGM press books are too big and bulky and all of the stories are too long for any use. In re-writing it is hard to even dig a good summary of the picture out of them. I have found it almost impossible to plant stories over 12" in length. Their scene mats are not very good and often there is not enough variety.

2. Paramount, Fox and Warner Bros. leave much to be desired in the way of short eight-inch stories.

3. We can't get along without press books, in our situation they are the only medium of giving us the details of the picture. I have had good luck with many of the suggested newspaper contests, and some of their exploitation ideas have been really effective. It doesn't take long to pick out the workable ideas and the more they print, the better chances of finding effective ones.

4. We rarely use press book ad mats as we have an outside mat service. Newspapers complain that many of the exchange mats are of poor quality and difficult to make good cuts from them, consequently the art is black and smudgy.

5. We never use mats of line drawings, half tones being so much more attractive, but perhaps someone does or they wouldn't persist in making them.—Anonymous.

The acme of something or other was reached when A. B. Jeffries at the New Piedmont, Piedmont, Mo. (population 916) held a Christmas party attended by 1,013 youngsters. Cash was donated by various merchants for candy and toys and additional expense was born by theatre. Jeffries reports this the second year party has been held and he intends making it a yearly event.

And in Nashville, Tenn.

Then to Pittsburgh, Pa.

CLUBS INCREASE EFFICIENCY

Says Massachusetts Member Who Details History and Procedure Of Theatre Employees' Clubs

by PAUL W. KUNZE

Old Plymouth and Colony, Plymouth, Mass.

Just a few lines to let you know we are still doing business at the same old stand. This time it's the Interstate Service Clubs at both the Old Colony and Plymouth Theatres. I appreciate the fact that employees organizations are not new, but possibly our method of conducting our clubs has an angle worthy of note.

Our Service Clubs have been functioning since November. They comprise a membership of 26 employees divided between our two theatres here. As every manager will verify, it is a problem of no small proportions to get 100% satisfaction from ushers, doormen, cleaners and employees in general, but the Club idea goes a long way toward accomplishing it, since it is possible to create a greater appreciation of the importance of their positions in the minds of employees, and at the same time establish a desirable closer contact with employees, without the intimacy which defeats the purpose.

Although the Clubs were established earlier, we waited until the opportunity of a dignified tie-up at Christmas time with the local paper and Salvation Army Christmas Basket Fund to introduce ourselves to the public.

In each theatre there is comfortable club quarters, constructed and nicely furnished by members themselves out of the finances of each organization. There was no cost to theatres in connection with the organizations. Furniture was provided by various members and a radio purchased for each club from the proceeds of turkey raffles at Thanksgiving time.

Club Operates Under Charter

Each club operates under a charter granted by the theatre, a copy of which is enclosed. There are rules and regulations posted in the rooms as well as regulations governing the operations of our service staff in the course of their duty, for which fines are imposed for violations. It is this feature which has considerably increased the efficiency of our ushering staff, which is ordinarily a headache in anybody's theatre. Privileges are granted to members, the possible loss of which acts as an incentive to better attention to duty.

Regular meetings are held on Saturday mornings once a month at which club affairs and theatre affairs are openly discussed. The meetings are conducted strictly according to accepted Parliamentary procedure, a copy of which is enclosed. This is an especially desirable feature as many of our service staff members are high school students who study and are interested in it. Much that is constructive can be gotten from these meetings, if properly conducted, since employees contact with patrons is consistently closer than that of the manager.

Club affairs are maintained from weekly dues of 10c per member. This provides for daily papers, magazines, occasional parties and other club recreations as funds warrant. In our case here each of the two clubs is operated independently, although they are similar in requirements as far as theatre operation is concerned.

Naturally, their proper operation takes up some time, but it does accomplish something that would take a manager's time in other ways to do. Am very much pleased with the way it has worked out here, since it seems to a large degree to answer the problem of employees' co-operation, a most important one wherever a maximum of service to patrons is required (and that means everywhere, nowadays).

Says Benefits Are Unlimited

The attached clippings show advance page one story on Christmas Basket tie-up, follow up story, item about New Year's party, copy of charters for both clubs, list of rules and regulations, exclusive of ushers requirements, membership cards.

Naturally, the possibility of benefits from operation of this type of organization is only limited by one's own effort and resources. Unless they are correctly and seriously conducted they become only a "hang out" and don't help. Otherwise, if members are sincere and can appreciate its advantages, it will be reflected in their work in and about the theatre.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Paul forwards tear sheets showing page one breaks on his club tieup with Salvation Army Basket Fund, and photo of members at theatre with barrels of food collected. For those members who are interested in forming their own service clubs, we shall be glad to send copies of the parliamentary procedure Kunze has adopted. Available also are copies of his club charter, membership cards, and other data that may be helpful.

Lawlor Invites Governor And Staff to Preview

R. W. Lawlor, Orpheum, Springfield, Ill., personally extended an invitation to the Governor and his staff to attend a preview of "Forsaking All Others." Leading newspaper stuffed heralds in all editions and florist association sent out pluggers with Crawford's head superimposed on gardenia. In addition all florists displayed art card with stills.

Two days before, selected list secured from chamber of commerce, was circularized with postcard invitation from Clark Gable. Lawlor also tied up with the telephone company, which attached to all outgoing bills photo of Gable talking over phone. Still was from regular production set, and fitted in nicely for the tieup.

A Handsome Theatre Lobby with FORMICA!

. . . THIS lobby of the Broad Theatre in Newark, N. J., was handsomely and inexpensively modernized by covering the walls with Formica, and by the installation of Formica doors. Metal inlays in the Formica sheet add to the decorative effect which the splendid surface and varied colors of Formica make most attractive.

Formica is very popular with theatre operators. It is thoroughly modern, easy to install, and very durable. It can be washed without injury using any sort of cleaning solution. In addition to lobbies and doors it is used for theatre fronts, linings of the marquise, etc.

Be sure to get an estimate on Formica before you modernize.

Better Theatres

FEBRUARY 9, 1935

THE MPTOA LOOKS TO THE THEATRE

The run-down condition of motion picture theatres, a persistent industry ailment often complicated with the gangrene of obsolescence, is to receive, apparently, some very serious attention at the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in New Orleans this month. The program recently announced calls for demonstrations of developments in theatre architecture and engineering, and lists a number of speakers who represent these fields with authority—Mr. Robert O. Boller of Kansas City, long prominent in theatre architecture; Mr. W. C. Brown, one of Nela Park's leading research workers in theatre lighting; Mr. J. T. Knight, Jr., Paramount maintenance engineer who has been in charge of the physical operation of theatres for many years; and still others of equal experience and high repute.

This is a very healthy sign. The treatment possible at New Orleans will of course not be able to effect a cure. But by calling in the specialists for a bedside consultation, the patient seems to be taking an interest in his own case. That, as we see it, is the real significance of this part of the convention program. It could not have a more important one.

THEATRE DESIGN AND THE PUBLIC

Writing in the Ideal Kinema and Studio of London, Mr. John Betjeman (who is not further identified) is quite comprehensive and very forthright in declaring his complete distaste for British theatre architecture. "The truly modern kinema has yet to be built in England," he says, and ultimately gets around to indicating at least one reason for this:

"People will go on replying to what I have said with phrases like: 'Well, we know what the public wants,' and, 'The public is interested in art—what it wants is something different from its own homes and entertainment.' 'I try to make our picture theatres the nearest approach to Heaven that their patrons will see on earth'."

The point of view that Mr. Betjeman criticizes is familiar to us on this side. Over here, however, it is less articulate than it used to be. Mr. Betjeman calls for more theatre engineering and less sheer architecture in his country. We are getting that over here.

AIR-CONDITIONING AND SOUND

Dr. Vern O. Knudsen (who, incidentally, has contributed to Better Theatres on theatre acoustics) and Dr. H. O. Kneser recently won the $1,000 prize of the Association for the Advancement of Science for their paper on the effect of gases on sound absorption. Not only the chemical nature of the gas, but its current condition, such as temperature and water content, exert substantial influences upon sound waves. Air being of course a gas, added importance is thus given air-conditioning facilities in the motion picture theatre.

The idea, at least, is not entirely new to acoustics engineers. We are able to cite in point Mr. J. E. Volkmann's article in Better Theatres of October 21, 1933. Messrs. Knudsen and Kneser, however, have apparently constructed a working theory concerning these phenomena, and this may prove to be yet another instrument in the hands of the studio and theatre technician, for the improvement of motion picture entertainment.

PROPER PLANNING FOR AIR-CONDITIONING

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Air-conditioning today has more to offer than ever. And now is the time to plan for it. Here, then, are factors to be kept in mind

THE EFFECT of extensive advertising and discussions of air-conditioning, has been to capture completely the mind and imagination of the motion picture theatre operator. There is more equipment in the market today (and more self-styled experts) than it would be possible to describe in a dozen articles on the subject. The air-conditioning of motion picture theatres—and I say this from experience—requires more technical detail, combined with practical engineering, than any other type of air-conditioning job that can be mentioned, or any other engineering project to be compared on a dollar-for-dollar basis. This statement is true, because in theatre work there are many more variable and limiting conditions that must be given consideration, in order to arrive at a satisfactory solution.

This leads to another fact which is vital: In designing and specifying a theatre job there are more corners that can be cut by an engineer or company of indifferent standards than an exhibitor can possibly be aware of, unless he makes a special effort to ground himself in some of the tricks of the trade, or has at his disposal the services of a competent engineer of known reliability. More than 60% of any theatre air-conditioning job is layout, or design, which includes specifications and engineering. This means engineering brains. It follows then that the choice of equipment alone cannot and will not result in an acceptable condition unless the engineering plan is right.

CONTRACTING FOR EQUIPMENT

ANY ENGINEER with a minimum of experience can guess approximately the tonnage of mechanical refrigeration needed for a particular job. But remember, this is just a guess based upon some pet rule-of-thumb, or some empirical formula developed for a quick check of a prospective job. No proper estimate can be submitted until an accurate survey by engineers has been made and complete drawings made of the layout and detailed specifications drawn up. If the exhibitor asks for a bid on air-conditioning, and anything less than drawings, specifications and contract are submitted, it calls for rejection until such time as the whole plan and specified equipment is presented and checked over carefully. Elaborate specification for the machinery of air-conditioning can have the effect of clouding the whole issue with a lot of uncheckable statements about the materials of which the compressor is manufactured, of cylinders, pistons, wrist pins, crank shafts, bushings, bearings, valves, etc. In brief, the point I make is that the average proposal today for air-conditioning is in reality a machinery specification. Many give little or no space to a description of the plan of air-conditioning, and unless specifically demanded there never is a drawing in detail submitted.

Of course, it costs money to make a survey of a theatre in detail as suggested above, and this is the first reason given why detailed proposals are not submitted. The question of the cost of a survey was put to the chief executive of one of the larger companies, and his opinion was that the cost is about $50, but it is the writer's opinion that over a reasonable number of jobs at varying distances from home or field office, the cost is closer to $150 per survey.

GUARANTEES

Here is another oddity about the present type of proposals. The seller will guarantee the elaborately described equipment for one calendar year only from date of completion. If I were in the artificial ice business or the cold storage business and were buying equipment to run, say, 12 to 18 hours per day, 365 days a year, I would get the same year's (calendar) guarantee against mechanical defects. With the theatre man's air-conditioning plant it will probably operate during the first calendar year, say, 60 days of 10 hours each, which means that if the manufacturers of equipment gave the theatre man the same guarantee that he gives the ice man, he would guarantee the theatre man against mechanical defects for seven years. For any equipment, a guarantee against mechanical defects based upon a specified number of operating hours is the only proper solution.

SPECIFYING OBLIGATIONS

Here is another characteristic of the average proposal as submitted today. It should be very clearly stated what work is to be done by the seller, and what must be done by the exhibitor. It is frequently found that the tedious things are omitted by the seller, and the exhibitor is expected to do them. For instance, the compressors are to be located in the basement in front of the house, but the electricity, water and sewer are possibly under the stage or on the side of the theatre. In such cases the proposal usually specifies that such services are to be brought within a convenient distance of the compressor location.

There are dozens of other little items that often are omitted and often unexpected by the exhibitor who thinks he is buying a complete job, only to learn too soon that he has another thousand or fifteen hundred dollars to spend to really get a job. When questions are asked about such omissions, the usual answer is "Well, you can have those things done as cheaply as we can do them." This is no answer at all, because if you were in a position to be your own contractor, you could possibly do the whole job more cheaply than they are doing it for you. Really the worst result from any split-up of work is that it also splits the responsibility for the performance results, and this is bad because it provides alibis and excuses.

Other than the guarantee against mechanical defects that might come to light within the first year, it is customary to make some statement which has the semblance of a performance guarantee. The performance guarantees seldom are explicit, and in their vagueness they provide loopholes. It is a very difficult thing to give an out-and-out guarantee on any theatre air-conditioning installation, because, as mentioned earlier, of the many variable conditions met with. Performance guarantees can be given with a much greater degree of certainty on industrial jobs, but with the variable human load on a theatre job, variable outside conditions, infiltration, distribution, light load, standee load and the skill or lack of skill of the operating engineer, and the additional fact that no theatre job is ever figured for absolutely maximum conditions, it becomes impractical as well as hazardous business practice for any company to give an absolute iron-bound performance guarantee on any theatre air-conditioning job.

This lengthy explanation has been gone into because no inference or implication is intended that air-conditioning men intentionally put escapes in their performance guarantees, nor do they intentionally evade the issue.

DECIDING TYPE OF INSTALLATION

IT SHOULD BE remembered that there are no two theatres exactly alike, hence there can be no two air-conditioning jobs exactly alike. Basic principles always apply, but in the practical application of the known, tried and proved principles there are always many differences of detail. This does not mean that all air-conditioning problems are approached with this degree of open-mindedness. Frequently quite the contrary exists. There are sales organizations who have no choice but to push one type of equipment, and to listen to one of their salesmen you are led to believe that their particular equipment is the final answer to all air-conditioning problems. On the other hand, there are many engineers with very fixed ideas about the use of certain principles of air-conditioning, and these fellows will adhere to their ideas and their small group of principles in laying out air-conditioning for any size or shape of auditorium. Air-conditioning is very far beyond a laboratory stage, but there are frequently new developments made, and the capable engineer is one who keeps abreast of developments and makes use of every new proved principle. Every job presents the problem of adapting to practical job conditions a few of the many principles known today.

Manufacturers and their engineers have gone a very long way in perfecting various classes of equipment. In many classes of equipment there is really very little to choose from among the products of the various manufacturers. Frankly, few manufacturers, if any, produce in their own plants the complete equipment marketed under their trade-mark.

Immediately, at the outset of considerations for air-conditioning, the exhibitor must determine if he really wants air-conditioning, or whether he is looking for a cheap substitute that he may be able to advertise as air-conditioning. An air-conditioning layout designed to meet a pre-determined price, or based upon how little the theatre-going public will be satisfied with, is wrong from the very beginning. Such limitations at the outset are many times the forerunner of completely unsatisfactory results and represent merely money wasted. The question of ultimate cost is clearly a matter of detailed analysis of the theatre and the proposed installation. Price is probably the last feature to consider.

TABULATING CONDITIONS

To start the study of air-conditioning intelligently and methodically, a tabulation must be made of the factors affecting the condition of the air within any particular auditorium. This tabulation of facts becomes the basis for the design and specification of the entire job. Every company that undertakes the survey of a property for air-conditioning must make such a tabulation —if it doesn't the job is not likely to be properly designed. The owner has every right to expect a complete listing of the design conditions as part of the specification for the job in order that he may know all that has been taken into consideration in the design of the plant. This is important so that the exhibitor can be sure that each company bidding on the job is figuring on the same basic conditions.

The following are major factors in determining what an air-conditioning system should be like for a specific theatre:

1. The actual seating capacity.
2. The actual standee capacity.
3. The average number of people accommodated by foyers or lobbies.
4. The cubic foot content of the auditorium, foyers and lobby to be conditioned.
5. The determination of the outside conditions for which the plant is to be designed. A suggestion for establishing this is to call on the Weather Bureau for the records of the past several years and select the hottest month of the year, then take the hottest condition experienced, which

A HEATING PLAN (answering R. K.): I am assuming that you are concerned with the cost of these changes, just as every other theatre owner is concerned today. I further assume that the radiators as you have them now provide enough heat in winter. Unless you are prepared to install a real ventilating job now, I make this suggestion: Use the present hot water boiler, installed as you have planned it, but don't put it in "a hole." This would of course be necessary if you had to rely on gravity for the circulation of water. However, a small pump can be purchased and driven by a small electric motor and you can thus have a forced, positively circulating hot water system. The pump must be in operation whenever heat is desired in the theatre.

To refine this installation further, a thermostatic switch can be installed to start the pump as soon as the water in the boiler reaches a predetermined temperature. If you had in mind a more elaborate system I shall be glad to give you more information. Your theatre could be perfectly heated and ventilated for about $4,500, but if I were you I would do the job that I have suggested, which in addition to the cost of building the tile installation and moving the boiler, means the purchase of only a few lengths of pipe and a pump, which at most should not exceed $225 additional.

The arrangement of pipes in the heating chamber that you have suggested would not be efficient. If you still desire to experiment with this arrangement, the blower should be outside of the heat chamber, and it should draw the air from the chamber and force it into the theatre. The warm air should be delivered to the auditorium through two grilles, one on either side of the screen. The lowest edge of these grilles should be at least 13 feet above the floor. I cannot tell you the size of boiler or the number of steam pipes required under this arrangement without having more information, such as, total final seating capacity, type of construction (masonry, tile, stucco, etc.), exposed walls, kind of roofs, and the coldest temperature that you have in the winter time.

HEATING INSPECTION: Now is the ideal time of year to check thoroughly heating plants. The heating season is just about half over. Get a heating contractor to help you and try to schedule the work and expense over the time between now and next October.

Boilers: Clean out the bottom of the stack. Check cleanout doors in the boiler for tightness; Check cracks in the stack and boiler settings; does the breeching make tight joints with the boiler and the stack?

Clean the heating surfaces of the boiler. Are the grate bars warped or burned or have lugs been broken off? Clean the gauge glass. Is the pressure indicator functioning correctly? Test the safety valve. Is there enough air supplied to the boiler room to support proper combustion? These questions do not cover the whole job by any means, but they do cover the important points about the boiler proper.

WATTAGE REDUCTION: There are 6-watt electric lamps on the market that may be used in chaser borders of the marquee instead of the 10-watt lamp generally used. The reduction in wattage is not perceptible to every one, the effect is still there, and they do permit an appreciable saving.

FURNITURE WAX: Wax furniture polishes are expensive to use, not so much because of the initial cost, but because so much labor is required to use them properly. They are good polishes, however. All excess wax must be removed and the surface very vigorously rubbed in order to bring out the polish.

EUROPE'S NEWS THEATRE CRAZE AND ITS ARCHITECTURE

A sober illustrated report on the development of a new field of theatre design, particularly on the Continent

By DEXTER MORAND

NEWS THEATRES are steadily gaining ground in Europe as a new field for architectural design. The subject presents some new problems, as it deviates in several respects with current practice of the usual cinema construction. It is interesting to recall that the earliest examples of theatres devoted to short subjects appear to have been erected as recently as the summer of 1931. The Studio Automatic theatre (S. Charles Lee, architect) in Los Angeles, and the first Trans-Lux theatre in New York were about the first examples.

Some of the problems that arise are the location of name and external publicity; the external presentation of the program; the short duration of the performance; the seating capacity; free movement to and from the seats; and the internal lighting which facilitates movement. In addition to this, the Continent throws up an additional problem because of the fact that performances of news theatres commence at 9 o'clock in the morning.

Cinema building in England, in America and in France, seems to be the work of a small group of architects who specialize in this subject. On the Continent it is to be noted that the majority of these news theatres are the work of de Montaut and Gorska, who have, within a short space of time, built several of these cinemas. It is of interest to record that news theatres are becoming a feature of railway stations, no doubt based on the theory that people prefer to see a film while they wait. Examples exist in England at Victoria Station; in America at the monumental new Cincinnati Terminal; in France at Gare Montparnasse and Gare St. Lazare. The latter two being the work of de Montaut and Gorska.

CINEAC BELGE

It may be of interest to take one example as carried out by de Montaut and Gorska, and examine it in detail so that the principles involved can be seen. The Cineac Belge, built at Brussels, is one of their latest examples. This project consisted in reconstructing an existing cinema in the shortest possible time and converting it into a news theatre at the minimum cost. The reconstruction had to deal with the facade, which was small and of no publicity value; the entrance, which was extremely narrow and long; and the auditorium, which was in poor condition with respect to visibility, acoustics, lighting, decoration and projection.

The facade was remodeled to obtain

every ounce of publicity value. To overcome the narrowness of the facade a marquee was erected and made conspicuous by lighting effects, show windows were built to house the advertising accessories, and brilliantly lighted to attract attention. The long narrow entrance was divided into three parts. The first part was lined with mirrors and was well lighted. It was used in effect to enlarge the entrance. In the treatment of the entrance (proper), the second part was decorated, and artificial interest was created by having the doors open automatically by means of a photoelectric cell mechanism. The third part was made into a small lobby, which gave access to the auditorium. The lighting diminished as one progressed through each part. A feature was made of the auditorium lighting, the pilasters having three green tubular lights which produce an attractive effect.

The examples in general show that neon lighting is very much in use for external work, with brilliantly lighted exteriors to attract attention. The situation of the ticket booth is an important factor, and while the ticket booth as used in the Cineac Belge represents the usual practice, the ticket booth in the Cinema de Actualides in Madrid (Ularqui, architect) presents an alternative treatment, as it is well designed and attractively presented. This is carried out by the use of chromium steel accentuated with light. The mobile ticket booths at the Gare Montparnasse are poorly placed, deeply inside.

PARIS AND MADRID

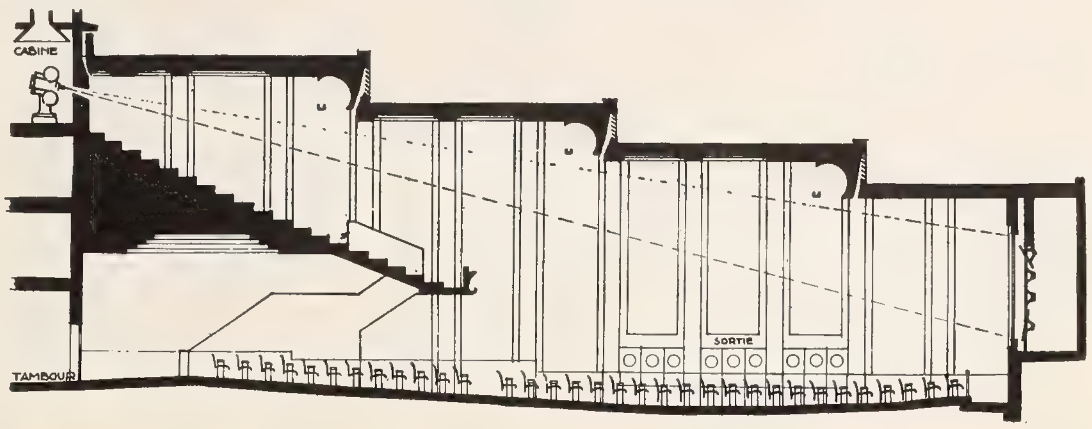
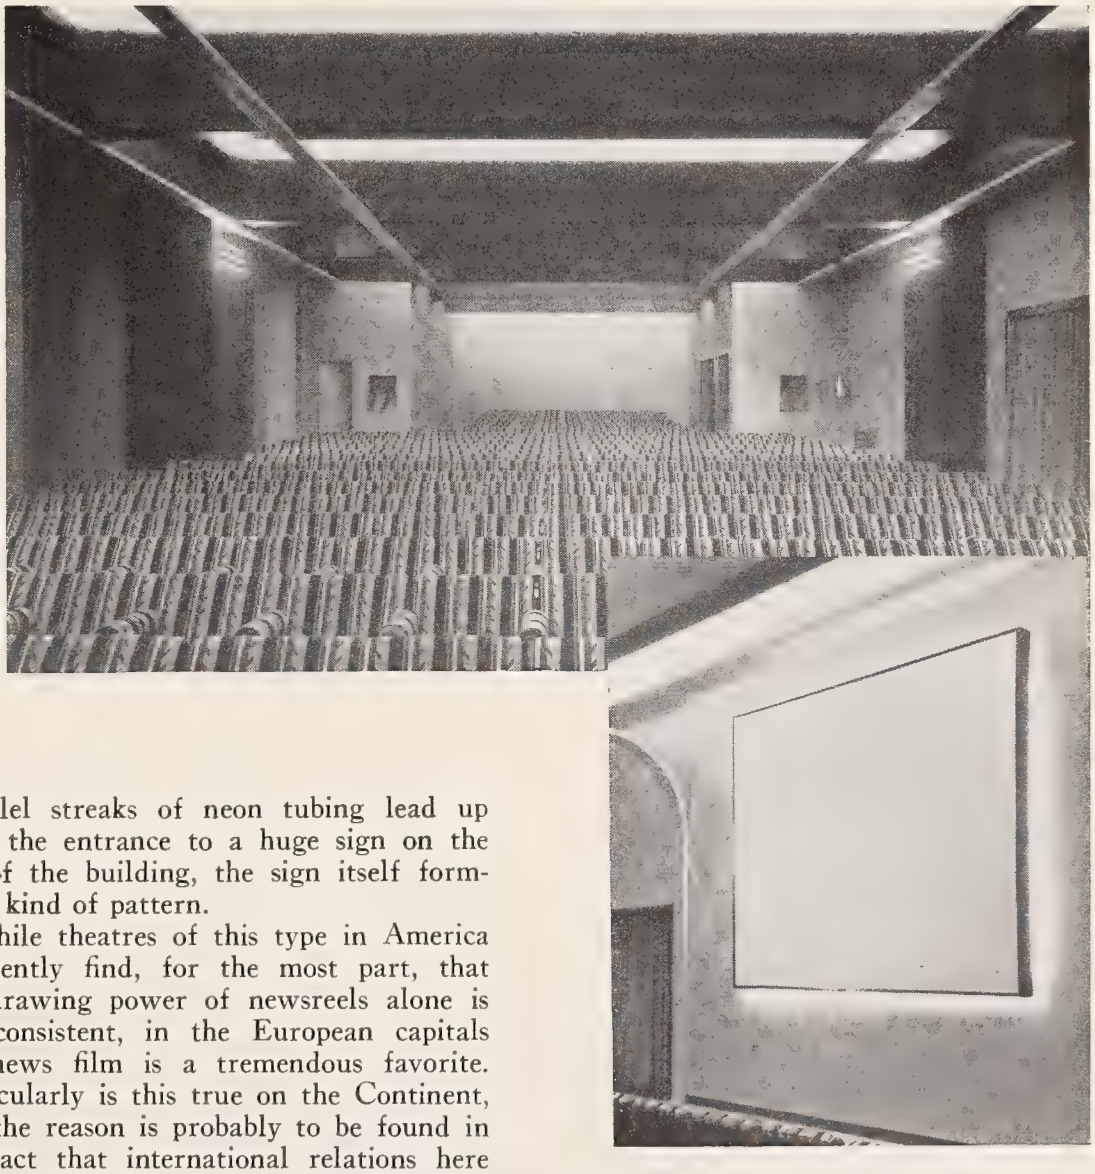
To secure attention requires ingenuity. Doors opening by invisible rays, as mentioned, are trick features. De Montaut and Gorska have, however, used a legitimate idea in the Montparnasse news theatre by having the projection booth made visible, which creates the required interest. The auditoriums do not present anything new in the way of design.

The screen of the Madrid cinema is an innovation. The single rows of seats in this cinema, however, do not permit of free movement. In the Gare Montparnasse cinema (Paris) a feature has been made of retaining subdued lighting in the auditorium, which would be just strong enough to allow the public to move freely without in any way detracting the eye from the screen. De Montaut and Gorska, the architects of the Cineac at Boulevard des Italiens in Paris, claim that this particular facade was the first attempt to establish what they term advertising architecture.



Longitudinal section, Cineac Belge, Brussels.



Two views of the auditorium of the Cinema de Actualides in Madrid. The upper picture shows the auditorium looking toward the rear. The lower view shows the screen position with the proscenium arch eliminated and the speaker platform concealed.

Parallel streaks of neon tubing lead up from the entrance to a huge sign on the top of the building, the sign itself forming a kind of pattern.

While theatres of this type in America apparently find, for the most part, that the drawing power of newsreels alone is not consistent, in the European capitals the news film is a tremendous favorite. Particularly is this true on the Continent, and the reason is probably to be found in the fact that international relations here are ever interesting (to put it mildly), begetting an intense alertness to each day's developments in public affairs. The effect of this is to emphasize location and traffic facilities within the theatre, rather than beautiful surroundings and comfort.

SETS AND ROUTINES FOR KIDDIE SHOWS

Inexpensive stage presentations to draw child and parent — the fifth article in a series on augmenting the screen program

By O. T. TAYLOR

THE MAJORITY of theatres that throughout more prosperous times offered vaudeville and other stage attractions with pictures on one or more of their weekly changes, have eliminated stage shows as unprofitable because of the necessarily high "nut," or cost, of the attraction as compared with the revenue at reduced admission prices. Many theatres however, are still offering stage entertainment in the form of locally produced stage shows—tie-ins with schools, fraternal orders and service clubs; dancing school recitals, style shows, etc.

Not only do theatres find such activities profitable; they also find that local co-operative shows stimulate interest in the theatre—and in pictures. It is but a step from the haphazard local show to a "planned" attraction; from an offering depending entirely on the talents of the performers for its interest, to an attraction augmented by novel ideas and bits of colorful settings and scenic effects.

This is where the theatre lobby artist, so to say, steps from the lobby on to the stage. It is but a step from designing lobby displays to creating stage displays, which stage settings after all really are displays designed to enhance the entertainment offered by performers, whether with songs or dances or music.

Except for regulation scenery, such as woods, garden, conservatory, etc., all of which are more or less foreign to the modern stage-equipped motion picture theatre, scenic art can hardly be called a specialized service. Decorative scenery, suggesting a locale rather than depicting it, ornamental panels hung in a stock cyclorama as a background for an act, set pieces for a unit, a pretentious setting for a complete production—all can be created by the versatile lobby display artist. He will find scenic display a fascinating art, an interesting change from lobby displays, a pleasing diversion, and an accomplishment that eventually should lead to a more secure position in the field of theatre art.

The stage settings described in this article are practical and economical to build. They can be elaborated upon or simplified to suit requirements and local conditions.

Believing that some of the many theatre managers who by now are well into their "Kiddie" activities—Mickey Mouse Clubs, Kiddie Clubs, etc.—may be in receptitve mood for suggestions pertaining to novel, inexpensive stage entertainment featuring children, we offer this month a Kiddie Kabaret. This idea is one of the many that have been staged by the author, and that have proved successful as well as practical.

KIDDIE KABARET

IF A WIDE variety of talent is available, the routine may be planned and the performers selected to carry it out. Usually it is more satisfactory and less confusing to build the routine around the performers. The novelties offered in conjunction with the main setting of this idea, however, are flexible enough so that one or all can be used. A brief synopsis of each novelty is given together with a description of building and painting. This is done so that the builder of the set pieces and the producer of the show may know the purpose for which each piece has been planned.

THE SETTING

The main setting (Figure 1), in which practically all of the action takes place, is a pergola effect (A) set on a platform (B) one or two steps high. Bear in mind that his setting is for children performers and that therefore the step or steps should be low. Also, that while the platform is desirable it is not essential. Vases or baskets with flowers, potted plants, or artificial floral pieces, any of which could perhaps be borrowed, are used to dress (decorate) the set. Natural or artificial ivy or other vines hang suspended from the pergola. A medium dark cyclorama (C) closes in on the sides and top of the pergola. A draped curtain (D) on a fly batten, hangs directly back of the pergola. Suspended from the same batten on fine wires are the words, Kiddie Kabaret, cut from beaverboard. This curtain conceals from the view of the audience any set piece or performers stationed on the platform until such time as the curtain is raised. The routine is so arranged of course, that the performers in the majority of acts enter from the wings, thus providing time to change novelty sets on the platform behind the curtain. The pergola is backed with a plain blue sky drop (E).

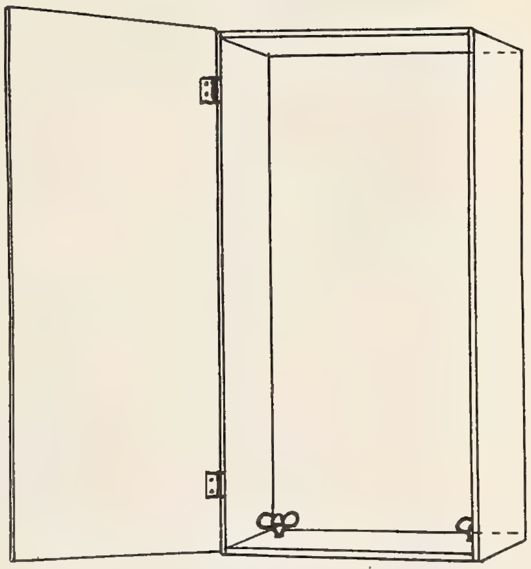

Figure 6

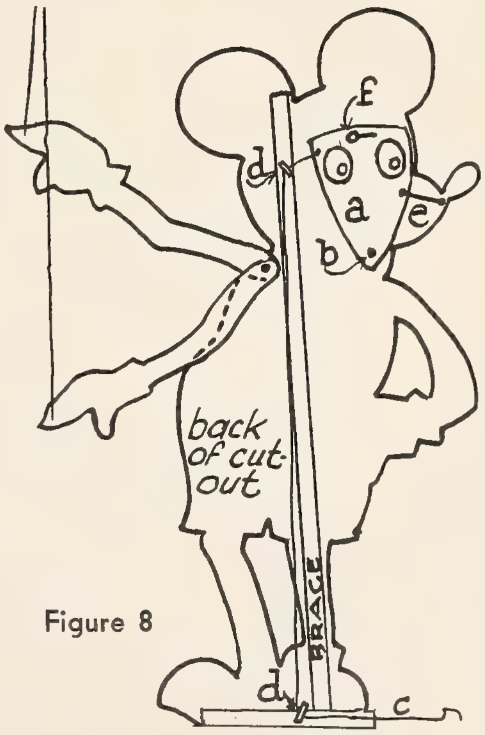

Figure 8

Dimension: Opening between posts, 8 feet. Height of posts, 12 feet. Width of posts, 16 inches. Width of beam, 12 inches. Length of beam (lower edge), 12 feet. This is a suitable size for the average stage.

SCREEN PROGRAMS

"BRIGHT EYES" WITH JAMES DUNN JUDITH ALLEN

FOR MANY YEARS did the Garrick theatre brighten Chicago's Randolph Street, when, indeed, that street was something of a Rialto. A prominent "legitimate" theatre, the Garrick was also noteworthy, at least to those of architectural interests, as a product of Louis Sullivan, eminent among those who have created an American style in building forms and structural methods. (Much of this has gone to Europe and come back as Modernism!)

Today the Garrick is a motion picture theatre, and as recently remodeled, capable of assuming an important place in the Balaban & Katz circuit. The designs for the remodeling are by A. M. Strauss, Chicago architect, and the project was supervised by B. B. Buchanan. Their first job was to take an antiquated, sombre front and make it modern and inviting.

In addition, there were two especial problems involved in the re-designing of the front of this building. First the lease limited the treatment as to height and width. It was permitted to re-treat the front up to the first story, and the height of the sign above this was limited to the top of the second story. In width, the designer could not treat the entire first story of the building, but only the central theatre entrance portion. The second problem was imposed by two massive structural columns in the center of the theatre entrance that acted as a practical barrier to any open or invitational feeling.

The problem of the two large columns was solved by treating the lower portion of them as large circular poster frames, and the upper portion as ornamental free-standing features, having the character of large urn-like light fixtures, and having no relation to the structure lintel overhead. The material used was heavy-cast aluminum with hinged aluminum doors for poster frames, and concealed lighting effects in the "flower-pot" portion above. The castings forming the lower portion are said to be the largest aluminum castings of their type made to date. The rather forbidding and gloomy entrance closure was completely removed and the old lobby converted into an open loggia, entirely open into the street, the entrance doors being moved back to the inner side of the old lobby.

The wall treatment of both the street facade and entire open loggia was designed in alternating horizontal ribs of heavy extruded aluminum and dark blue agate type Vitrolite glass, providing a very striking contrast.

Probably the most unusual and outstanding feature of the entire front was the innovation of introducing a continuous light motion effect from the face of the canopy back into the open loggia. This light motion consists of three large ribs built with an imported red glass in the center portion of each rib, with a flashed white opal forming two side members. Back of this glass there are four rows of lamp sockets on three inch centers, with continuous flashing motion into the theatre. The center rib extends up the front of the "V" sign above

RECENT LABOR LAWS AND THE THEATRE

By LEO T. PARKER

Reviewing new legislation and higher court decisions and analyzing them for theatre owners and theatre managers

A FEW DAYS ago I received a letter from a theatre owner, similar to other letters received from exhibitors in different localities, asking, "What is the extent of liability of an exhibitor who violates Section 7A of the National Industrial Recovery Act? In the event of its violation will an injunction be granted, and if so by whom must suit be filed?"

With respect to the first inquiry, the question of liability has not been adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States. However, it has been generally conceded that failure of a code signer to abide by the provisions of Section 7A is a breach for which the exhibitor is responsible and liable in a suit filed by an "interested" party. However, this does not mean that a union, or other party not directly interested, may file the suit.

Under the old law, unless prevented by some valid statute or by an existing contract, theatre owners may discharge and hire employes at will. Until the enactment of the National Industrial Recovery Act, there was no doubt at all that theatre owners might discriminate against union men or against members of any particular union. An important ruling recently was laid down, and reported in Advance Sheets dated January 15, 1935, by a higher court, which in substance held that violation of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the President's Re-employment Agreement, and of the Code, in respect to wages and hours of employment of the members of a company union does not result in an outside union having a right to sue to compel the employers to fulfill the provisions of Section 7a of the National Industrial Recovery Act, hereinafter referred to as N. I. R. A.

Moreover, although the Recovery Act and also state law authorize the courts to restrain violation of the codes in suits by those whose "interests" are adversely affected, a trade union does not have the right of suit although its economic and social interest in wages or hours of employment is affected. So held the higher court in Sherman v. Abeles (193 N. E. 241, New York, New York.

CASE

The facts are that certain exhibitors signed the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry with respect to the employment of projectionists and which contained the usual and often discussed Section 7a, which provides that "employes shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers, in the designation of such representatives and, further, that no employe shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining a labor organization of his own choosing." Also, Section 7a provides that "employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the President."

Suit was filed by Local 306, a union of motion picture projectionists in New York City, and by an individual member of this union against the Independent Theatre Owners' Association and the several theatre owners. It was alleged in this suit that the exhibitors organized and became members of the Theatre Owners' Association and entered into a ten-year agreement, providing, among other things, that projection rooms should be manned by fewer projectionists operators than had been previously required, and that they should work longer hours and receive less compensation. It was alleged further that the exhibitors required membership of their employes in the union.

A NEW SERIES ON REMODELING

From many angles and in many manners have architects and theatre engineers discussed Modern Remodeling in Better Theatres. Yet still a new approach to the subject is promised in a group of features to be started with the March 9th issue, one that we believe particularly well calculated to bring the experience of specialists to this many-sided matter. . . . Also in the March 9th issue, as an additional Remodeling feature, will be an article on architectural trends by Robert O. Boller, designer of many theatres.

The lower court promptly granted an injunction against the Theatre Owners' Association and the exhibitors were ordered to discontinue these alleged practices. However, an appeal was made to the higher court on the contention that the alleged violations were not true, and also that an outside union, as Local 306, could not file and prosecute a suit of this nature. In upholding this contention, and dissolving the injunction, the higher court said:

DECISION

"It was found that there had been violations of the Recovery Act, of the PRA, and of the Code as to wages, hours of employment, and increase of duties of employes so as to decrease the number of such employes. It was further found that Allied was a company-controlled company union. . . . Since the proof was held insufficient to show that any one seeking employment from the defendant exhibitors had been required 'as a condition of employment' to join Allied or 'refrain from joining, organizing or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing,' that part of the injunction order relating to illegal acts under Section 7a, subd. 2, is likewise without support. . . . None of those acts, however illegal they may be, affects either of the plaintiffs (Local 306) otherwise than remotely. From the nature of the complaint made, we assume that none of the members of Local 306 is an employe of defendants. Local 306 occupies the status of an 'outside union'. . . . There is, therefore, no basis for the injunction order and it must be reversed."

VALIDITY OF RECOVERY LAWS

IT IS IMPORTANT to review the court holdings in other recent cases involving the National Industrial Recovery Act, or N. I. R. A., and state laws formulated therefrom, as follows:

CASES

The authority of the Legislature of a state to empower an administrative board to govern and regulate distribution and fix prices of milk and milk products has been upheld. Nebbia v. People of the State of New York (291 U. S. 502).

In a controversy between rival unions of projectionists, the validity of the N. I. R. A. was sustained, but its constitutionality was not discussed. (Sherman v. Abeles, 269 N. Y. S. 864.)

A higher court reversed a lower court's decision denying an injunction for violation of the provisions of the Code of Fair Competition. This Court, however, in no manner discussed or passed upon the constitutionality of the state law. (Gross v. Auction Galleries, 273 N. Y. S. 376.)

In People v. Harris (274 N. Y. S. 171), a proprietor was convicted of a violation of a state law formulated from the N. I. R. A. The higher Court sustained the conviction without any discussion or apparently any question being raised concerning the validity of the law.

In Stokes v. Newtown Creek Coal & Coke Company, (275 N. Y. S. 286), the court held that the N. I. R. A. and the state law were constitutional.

Some recent courts have held, however, that a state Legislature cannot delegate the sovereign powers of the state to an administrative or executive authority of a foreign jurisdiction. Or that it cannot surrender the sovereignty of the state, regarding the acts constituting a crime, to federal executive or administrative authority. In other words, some courts hold that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people. (U. S. Constitution, 10th Amendment.)

A most recent case involving this point of the law was discussed in the late case (reported in Advance Sheets dated January 1, 1935) of Darweger v. Staats (275 N. Y. S. 394, New York). In this case the court held the N. I. R. A. invalid with respect to intrastate transactions or businesses, i. e. business strictly within the state, and not interstate.

STATE RECOVERY ACT

Also, this court held void a portion of the New York State law known as the Schackno Law, in which is used the identical language of the N. I. R. A., and then states that the emergency likewise exists in the state and affects the welfare and undermines the standard of living of the people of the state of New York, and declares that the N. I. R. A. is effective with respect to intrastate business.

The facts of this case are that a proprietor of a business filed suit and asked the court to grant a permanent injunction to restrain the members of Divisional Code Authority from interfering with the conduct of his business, fixing or attempting to fix his prices. He also requested the court to prevent them from instituting proceedings against him for violation of code provisions. He contended that if the court failed to grant the injunction and permitted the code authorities to interfere with his business, in the above mentioned manner, he would have to quit.

After thoroughly considering the law this court granted an injunction against the Divisional Code Authority from interfering with his business, fixing price, or instituting proceedings against him for violating code provisions and said:

STATE ACT RULING

"The plaintiff here is not engaged in interstate commerce. His business is a purely intrastate business. . . . The N. I. R. A. of itself does not and cannot control the manner in which plaintiff shall conduct his business, or fix the price at which he shall sell his product while engaged in purely intrastate transactions. It has not yet been held under the Constitution that the Congress has control of purely intrastate commerce. It is claimed, however, that the plaintiff (proprietor) is bound by the code adopted by the National Recovery Administration under the N. I. R. A. relative to his business, because of the provisions of the so-called Schackno Law. . . . The Shackno Act does more than merely declare a policy and provide means to carry it into effect. The N. I. R. A. is not adopted, but it is declared to be the policy of the state of New York to conform in intrastate commerce and transactions with its purpose and administration. Codes adopted under the N. I. R. A. are made, though not in existence, by reference to

PROCEDURE OF INCORPORATION

By M. MARVIN BERGER
Member New York Bar

AT ONE TIME a corporation came into being only by a special act of the Legislature of the state in which it was formed by which a number of persons would be given authority to conduct some particular business.

Today, however, while this old method is still in use to a very limited extent, there exists in most states a general corporation law, which permits a number of persons to organize a corporation by following the procedure set forth in the law. While the details of procedure vary in each state, they generally consist of the following steps:

1. A number of individuals having the qualifications of residence and citizenship required by the laws of the state in which the corporation is to be formed, file an application or charter or certificate of incorporation.
2. The application ordinarily states the names of the persons organizing the corporation, the purposes for which the corporation is formed, the proposed capital of the corporation, the classes of stock, the number of shares in each class of stock and their value.
3. In most states, when the application has been approved by the state authorities and copies of the application have been placed on file with them and with the clerk of the county in which the corporation is to have its principal office, the corporation comes into existence.

Every properly organized corporation has certain general powers, which are given to it by law and which generally need not be mentioned in its charter. Among these powers are (1) the power to buy, hold and dispose of property; (2) the power to sue and be sued under the name of the corporation; (3) the power to elect directors and appoint officers; (4) the power to dissolve. When a specified majority of the stockholders of a corporation vote to wind up the affairs of the corporation, it may dissolve by following the procedure laid down by law.

In order to conduct business, a corporation needs more than the general powers given above, and so the charter or certificate of organization must set forth the special powers which the corporation is to have. The most important special power is that which describes the business which the corporation may conduct. In naming the business which the corporation may carry on, it is usually advisable to give it the greatest possible freedom that the law permits.

In addition it is often necessary to give the corporation other special powers such as the privilege of holding stock in other corporations. Great attention must be given to the contents of the charter with regard to the corporation's powers, for unlike an individual, a corporation may legally do only those things which the general powers set forth in the law or the special powers mentioned in its charter, permit it to do.

For example, if a corporation is not authorized by its charter to hold stock in another corporation, then in the event that it attempts to purchase such stock, the contract of purchase may be declared void or a stockholder of the buying corporation may get an injunction to restrain the purchase. In addition, the directors and officers of the buying corporation may become personally liable to the stockholders or to third parties as a result of having the corporation do something which is beyond its powers to do.

It must not be supposed that a corporation is forever tied down by the contents of its original charter, for the charter may be changed to permit the corporation to do anything the law permits it to do. Such a change is brought about by obtaining the consent of a substantial majority of the stockholders to the amendment, usually by vote at a meeting of the corporation. If approved by the required majority of stockholders, amendement is filed with state and county.

SURFACING MATERIAL

● Among materials to be noted in recent theatre remodeling projects is Formica, which has been well known in architecture for many years. Formica, which is produced by the Formica Insulation Company of Cincinnati, is a laminated material made by impregnating a fibre base with a synthetic resinoid, and may be obtained in a variety of colors and patterns, many of which have been only recently introduced. This material comes in over 40 colors and is flexible in its application because one color can be inlaid over another contrasting color, or metals may be pressed into the sheet when it is made.

For theatre fronts, vestibules and lobbies Formica is particularly effective, for in addition to its architectural values, it is of such chemical composition that it does not react to fumes in the atmosphere (therefore does not rot, corrode or change color), and it can be washed safely with a variety of cleansing compounds such as those containing alcohol, gasoline, benzol, and acetone.

For fronts and lobby walls this material is available in sheets on a board back either 5/32-inch or 9/32-inch thick. Bright metal moulding in stainless steel or aluminum are available to cover the seams between the sheets. These sheets are laid against wood grounds, and this work may be done by carpenters. Theatre entrance doors may also be laid with Formica, in veneers over wood centers where fire regulations permit. Where metal doors are required, the Formica sheets can be cemented on and the edges bound with a metal moulding.

A variety of uses for this material in the theatre were described by Eugene Clute in the September, October and November, 1934, issues of BETTER THEATRES.

UNIFIED PROJECTOR

● Further refinements of the new DeVry projector include complete enclosure of the projection and sound mechanisms in a metal casing integral, in design, with the base (modern "streamlining," as it were). It is pointed out by the manufacturers (Herman A. DeVry, Inc., of Chicago) that this unit design is not only for appearance, but to save space, and that the building in of projection and sound mechanisms has permitted the elimination of various parts.

AIR-CONDITIONING

● A new brochure has been issued by Kelvinator of Detroit on its air-conditioning equipment, including that designed for theatres. The page devoted to theatre installations is not particularly informative, but does illustrate diagrammatically the nature of the Kelvinator system.

CORK TILE

● A new cork product has been introduced by the Cork Insulation Company of New York. It is intended to meet floor covering requirements and is available in standard special sizes and in colors varying from light to dark brown. There are two thicknesses. That 3/8-inch thick weighs 20 ounces per square foot, while the 9/16-inch thickness is 33 ounces per square foot. These thicknesses can be sanded down where this is required. Also available in this material are coved angles, wall bases and nosing for stairways.

NEW WIRING RULES

● New regulations have been adopted by Kansas City, Mo., concerning wiring. Hereafter new wiring must be able to carry a load of 60 amperes.

NEW CARPET PATTERNS

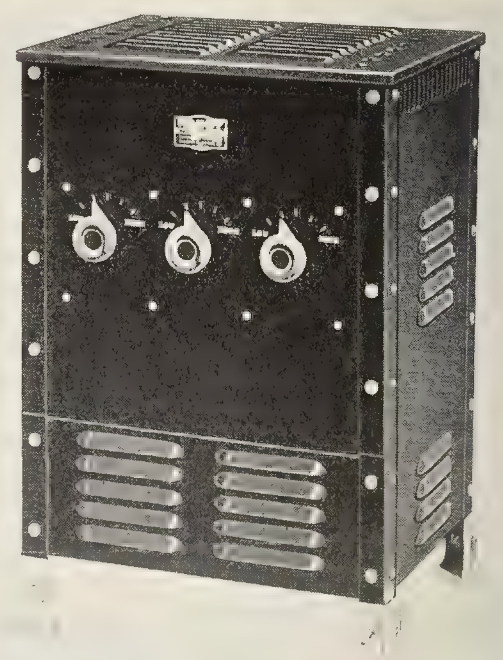
● A number of new patterns have been developed for spring showings by the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company of New York. In this company's Beauvais line is a block and floral design with mahogany-colored ground. There is also a Provincial type diamond formation in soft greens, rust and golds. There are many other new items, many adapted to theatres.



The new "Handy" rectifier developed by the Baldor Electric Company of St. Louis. Specifications are: Amperage range, 30–60. Voltage range, 30–40. Additional voltage tap to deliver approximately 55 volts. Operation on 3-phase, 220-volt, 60-cycle a.c. circuit. The rectifier is designed for adaptation to Suprex arcs and low-intensity.

VOLTAGE AND CAPACITY TESTS FOR DETERMINING BATTERY CONDITION

By MAX L. ROBINSON

Casual examination is not enough when storage batteries are depended on, and here are given the proper tests

A SUBSTANTIAL number of theatres are still using lead plate storage batteries for the power supply of sound systems, while many houses which have supplanted them with rectifier units, are holding batteries in readiness for emergencies. To this extent storage batteries continue to play an important part in sound reproduction.

Projectionists using battery sets are well enough aware of the necessity of proper battery maintenance, but many are not familiar with a suitable procedure for ascertaining the efficiency of the batteries and the approach of the need for replacement. In theatres dependent upon batteries for sound reproduction, this represents a continual threat to the performance.

There are three things to test for: (1) the specific gravity of the electrolyte, (2) voltage of cells, and (3) the ampere-hours capacity.

Specific gravity of the electrolyte is the ratio of the weights of the acid to that of the water. This ratio varies during the cycle of charging and discharging. Portable batteries are small in size and because of their small electrolyte capacity, have a higher gravity than the stationary type batteries, which have a much lower gravity.

The specific gravity of portable batteries is usually from 1.280 to 1.300 (the stationary type averages from 1.215 to 1.240). The specific gravity is determined by using a good hydrometer and will be about 1.150 when the battery is discharged, and from 1.215 to 1.240 when charged. This variation is because different makes and types of batteries use different specific gravity electrolytes.

The gravity test is a quick, convenient method of determining the approximate state of charge. If the battery is old, has had the electrolyte spilled or acid added, voltage and capacity tests should also be made, as the gravity test alone would not give a true indication of its condition. Some types of cells have "floats" built in them for indicating the specific gravity.

TESTING FOR VOLTAGE

As a battery ages, a variation in cell voltages will probably be found when the cells are tested with a 3-0-3 scale voltmeter. Voltage tests should be made while the battery is on charge or discharge, as open circuit voltage readings are of little value. The voltage of a fully charged lead plate cell will be approximately 2.4 volts, and 1.66 to 1.75 volts on discharge, depending upon the rate at which the cell is discharged.

As a general rule, when the sediment space below the plates has filled until the sediment nearly reaches the plates, the cell will be found to have very little capacity and should be discarded.

CADMIUM TEST

Voltage tests of the positive and negative plates can be made by using a "cadmium" stick attached to the negative lead of the voltmeter. Some voltmeters are calibrated for this purpose, but if a voltmeter is not marked, these approximate figures can be used. This test is especially adaptable to the portable batteries used in sound reproduction. A fully charged positive plate should show a voltage reading of about 2.4; the negative .175 on the opposite side of zero. The total cell voltage is about 2.4 plus .175, or 2.575 volts.

The cadmium test is made by inserting the cadmium stick in the electrolyte, while the cell is on charge. Do not let it touch the plates. Place the positive meter prod on first the negative, then the positive terminal of the cell. This means that the cadmium is a positive plate to the negative, and a negative plate to the positive plates of the cell. This test is usually made to determine why one cell does not charge as high as others and to find the condition of the plates. A cadmium stick must be kept under water when not in use to prevent scale from forming on it, as scale prevents an accurate indication by the meter.

CAPACITY TEST

The capacity test is really the best. The capacity of a battery will become reduced as the sediment in the bottom of the cells increases. Connect a variable resistor (a carbon pile is recommended) and ammeter of sufficient capacity in series with the battery. Adjust the resistor until the proper ampere rate is obtained for either the 3-, 5- or 8-hour discharge. This figure can be obtained from the instructions put out by the battery manufacturer. Keep track of the time until the cell voltage falls to 1.66 or 1.75 volts per cell, depending upon whether the discharge is fast or slow. The charging resistor will have to be adjusted occasionally in order to keep the ampere discharge rate the same.

The ampere-hour capacity can of course be found by multiplying the ampere discharge rate by the time the battery is on discharge. This test should not be made on a new battery until it has been "cycled" a number of times, as the capacity will increase as it is charged and discharged.

The difference in ampere-hour capacities of a battery when discharged at different rates can be illustrated by taking the factory figures for a 9-plate, nationally known battery. The ampere hour capacity at the 8-hour rate is 74; 3-hour rate, 57; 2-hour rate, 48; 1½-hour rate, 42; and 36 for the 1-hour continuous discharge rate when discharged to a voltage of 1.75 volts per cell.

HOW TO RUIN A THEATRE STAFF

RECENTLY, in a conversation with projectionists, I remarked that the men themselves should maintain pride in their profession and their work.

"That's true," one of them replied, "but managers show no appreciation of high-class work in projection." And all the rest of the men nodded vigorous assent. In fact, one of them added this item of managerial wisdom. Said he:

"Not long ago I asked the city manager of our company for a pass admitting me to the other theatres of the chain. 'What do you want it for?' he asked, and I replied, 'So I can visit them and see where I possibly can improve upon my own work.' Said he, 'What for? There's nothing to learn! The men in a theatre each have just a little routine to go through, which is easily learned, and once they have learned it that's all there is to it.' "

This from a city manager! Certainly a man with such views is unfiit to be boss over a crew even of floor washers. And why in the name of all that is queer do theatre circuit owners put men with such a destructive point of view in managers' offices? And I have not the least doubt that the projectionist in question—a Pennsylvania man, by the way—was telling the exact truth.

Yet we now have many progressive theatre managers who realize that in order to get maximum results at the box office every man in the theatre must understand his business thoroughly and be on his toes every minute of the time an audience is present. As to projection, even the commonest kind of commonsense should tell us that this is true of projectionists. They have a lot of finely adjusted, costly electrical, optical and mechanical equipment to handle. Without due care it deteriorates rapidly. And its efficient operation calls for considerable technical knowledge.

As for "routine," may I ask this question: Suppose the seats are full, $500 or so in the house. The projectionist is doing his "routine" and suddenly something goes haywire. It could be fixed in a moment by one who knows how, but of course that is not included in the "routine" of projection, so the projectionist doesn't know how. The audience is dismissed and their coin handed back! Or there is a long delay while a service man is summoned!

But aside from the technical end of the matter it certainly is not good business for a manager to deliberately discourage men from attempting to do better work. Such an act is equivalent to ordering the cashier to sell no more tickets than necessary! The real theatre manager will give every possible encouragement to every man in the theatre to learn every possible thing he can about his job, and to put every bit of knowledge and every bit of energy he possesses into his work, for only thus can a theatre consistently prosper.

NEW BLUEBOOK TO BE OUT SOON

AFTER THREE YEARS of intensive labor I have turned in the manuscript for the sixth edition of the Bluebook. It will be published by the Quigley Publishing Company and every possible effort will be made to have it ready for distribution in a month or so.

I have taken Mr. Aaron Nadell into collaboration on sound. The whole book, except for some of the illustrations, is new. There is not a line of the old work in it. Not only that, but in this work there is something that, so far as I know, has never before been attempted. I am not going, just now, to take time to explain to you what it is, but I may say that veteran projectionists (George Edwards, for example), after examing some of the manuscript, have said, "Well, Rich, that's the first real handbook of projection that has ever been put out." And with this even I am willing to agree, because it is a book in which you can find the answers to almost any question dealing with motion picture projection or sound and find them with little trouble and no delay.

I believe this edition is going to give you a new and better understanding of sound, sound action, sound equipment, trouble shooting, etc. I regard this new book as in many ways by far the best thing I have ever done, and in saying that I desire to give credit to Mr. Nadell for his share of the work. The exact publication date will be announced later.

VARIATION IN TRACK DENSITY

FROM IRE GORDON, projectionist of Akron, Ohio, has come a justifiably indignant letter about sound bands of widely varying density, with photographic examples. Other projectionists have been protesting against the same condition. Writes Mr. Gordon:

"One of the things that is literally raising hell with good sound reproduction and projection in theatres is the frequent need for very high fader setting in order to get sufficient sound volume to enable comfortable audibility in all parts of the auditorium. Of late the situation has been growing worse, and, coupled with the wide variations in the density of the same sound track, there must be constant manipulation of the fader to prevent a blast of sound one minute and almost inaudible sound the next.

"I first took note of this condition about two months ago, when it often became necessary to advance the fader to the very limit of the dial in order to secure sufficient volume when the original sound was normal. On scenes where the voices were to the constantly repeated question, "What makes the reproduction of Wright-DeCoster Reproducers superior?" . . . is this:—

The combination of a well designed, properly built speaker installed in the patented 309 Horn. Without this Horn, the reproduction cannot be equalled. Brilliancy without a resonant point is the secret of the patented 309 Horn.

low, or there was whispering—well, it was just too bad!

"Usually the amplifier has a lot of punch. My first thought was that some of the tubes were going haywire. However, a check with instruments disclosed nothing radically wrong with the outfit, and the next picture came through okay, with the fader set at about normal.

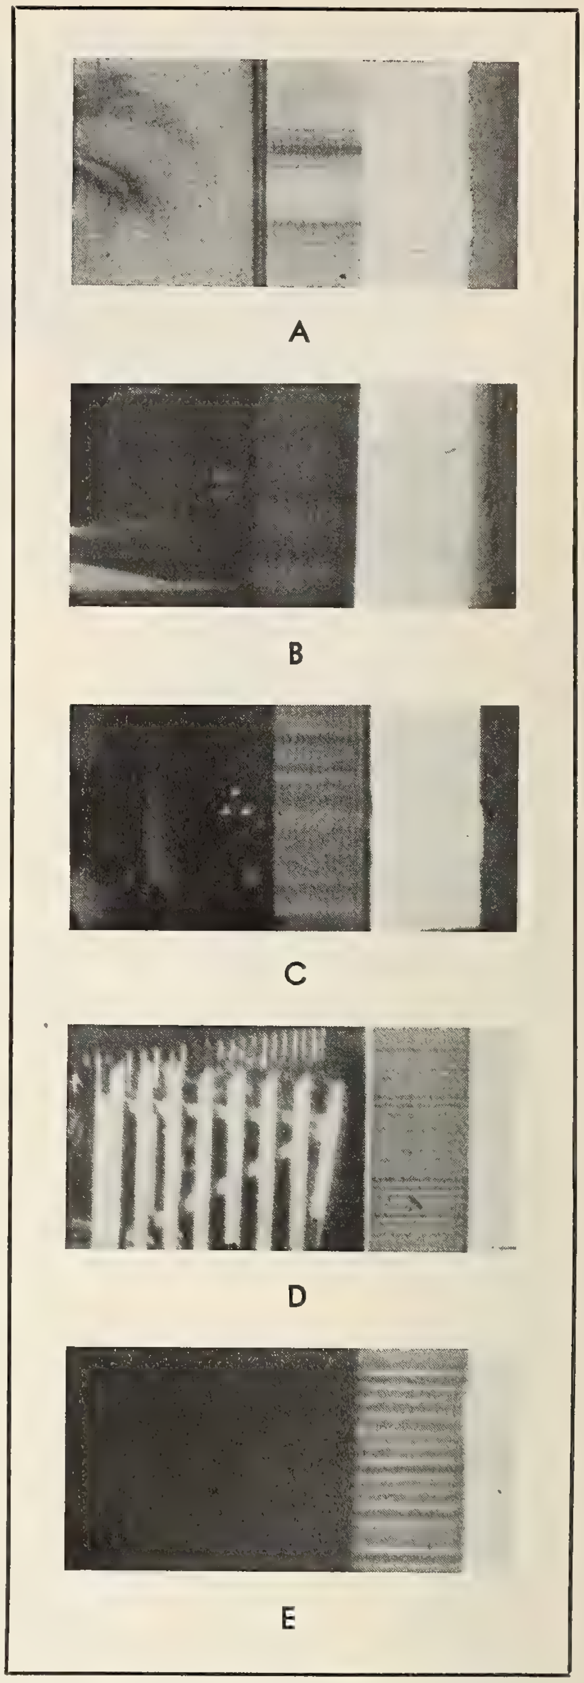
"A few days later, though, another print, from a different major producer, came through which had to have the same treatment, so I dug out my Sherlock Holmes outfit and got me busy! Investigation revealed the fact that in spots the sound track was almost opaque. It also was noted that the scenes where the sound track was dark also had a dense picture, and vice versa.

"I therefore came to the conclusion that it might be due to an error in timing the print in the laboratory and dismissed the subject with a statement to the theatre manager as to the condition of the print. Soon, though, another print came through on which, though I boosted the fader to the limit, the sound was, in places, insufficient for comfortable audibility in the auditorium. To further complicate matters there were places where the sound track was much less dense, while at still others it was clear almost to the point of transparency, with sharp lines and densities. A few feet later it would jump back to one of the dense spots.

"While such a situation might possibly be taken fairly good care of in a two-man room, where one man could keep his fingers constantly on the fader knob and his eyes glued to the screen, it requires no super-intelligence to understand what is going to happen to sound in a one-man room, in which the projectionist must leave his projector to thread up, trim the lamp, and other things. When he leaves the projector to attend to something the volume may be okay. Then a portion of sound-track far less dense comes along, and zowie! what a blast the audience gets!

"And who gets blamed? After a few too-low and too-high experiences, the theatre patron complains to the manager, and friend manager proceeds to walk rough shod on the projectionist's helpless neck. The projectionist is of course the goat. Incidentally, from the number of times he has to pose as that animal one might suppose he would in time grow horns, bleat like the real thing and perhaps learn to butt like one, too!

"I suppose the recording studios also have their difficulties and that technicians are constantly laboring to eliminate the 'bugs.' There seems, however, no really good reason why an almost opaque sound track should be joined to a track of far less density (speaking of the W. E. track, of course). I appreciate the fact that a dark track might tend to cut down the surface noise, but even so it defeats itself, because one must use a higher fader setting and the amplifier noises are then picked up. True, this may not hold good in some of the newer systems, but the fact remains that very many of the older sets are still in use, and the condition does exist.



"I see no good reason why sound tracks cannot be printed throughout without such extremes of density, instead of density jumping all over the map. As an illustration, I made photographs of a number of frames in one of the offending productions, grouping them for your inspection. They were all printed to the same density as that of the film they were taken from.

"The result speaks for itself. Clip A is the sample demanding the limit fader setting, and with not so much sound even at that. Those designated A, B and C are all MGM prints; those marked D and E are Fox. Sample B required a slightly below normal fader setting, and D was used at normal fader setting.

"Possibly A was just a rush batch from the lab, and other prints were okay. Again, it might be something new they were trying out. As has been pointed out, whatever may be possible in the two-man room, in the one-man one the projectionist cannot be constantly at his projector. That is one of the things that cannot be done, therefore the sound must and will suffer under such a condition. If producers want their productions to be and to remain popular, may I suggest that they either watch their product more closely or else demand two men in all projection rooms, so that the fader may be worked quickly and constantly. I trust the situation is purely local and that it will be quickly remedied. If it is general, it demands investigation."

I'll say it does. Also, the trouble is not entirely local. I have recently had complaints from Toronto, San Francisco, Miami, and St. Louis concerning wide and violent density changes in variable density sound track. Imagine the fader set for maximum on B, and along comes A, with the projectionist threading up projector No. 2. What a blast friend audience would be enabled to "enjoy"! Or even if the projectionist be at his projector, his hand on its knob and his eyes on the screen, it is not at all impossible that before he could act a blob of blare would get through. This is clearly a matter needing immediate attention from the technical executives of production and distribution.

WHEN SPEED CONTROL BEGAN

JOHN L. CARDILLO of Charleston, S. C., writes, "Recently I had an argument about things long ago. I said speed control was first applied to projectors about 1908. Am I correct? My statement was disputed."

If any speed control was used in 1908 it would necessarily have been applied to the good right arm of the projectionist, for the simple reason that in that year no projectors were motor driven. That came along about 1908 or early in 1909. At that time there was no speed control, however, the motor usually being belted directly to the projector flywheel.

TRUE ECONOMY IN BUYING PARTS

FREQUENTLY I receive complaints either from projectionists or theatre managers, that have their inception in mistaken ideas of economy, in attempts to "save" by buying equipment parts other than those made by the manufacturer of the equipment. Managers depend upon the equipment to reproduce faithfully and effectively the films they book. That is of course indisputable. Now take for example, the motion picture projector: Surely all theatre managers know by this time that for excellence in results, all the vital parts must be made with extreme precision, frequently measured in ten-thousandths of an inch. If, for example, an intermittent movement, or any one of its many parts be "out" enough to cause the mis-register of successive frames by even so little as one thousandth of an inch, what will be the effect? A moment of reflection will convince even the most uninformed that the picture posed over the aperture will be magnified vertically as many times as the screen image is taller than the projector aperture.

All of which of course shows conclusively that all vital parts must be made with almost absolutely perfect mechanical accuracy, and that is a very costly proceeding. It is, in part, lack of such mechanical accuracy which enables manufacturers who have no responsibility for, or interest in, the performance of certain equipment, to reduce the cost of parts. But the cheapening is much more than likely to be very expensive in the end to the theatre.

Nor is that all. Unless such parts be made of the highest-grade of material suitable for the part, it will certainly wear faster than it should. That is self-evident, and in this one item the entire "saving" effected by its purchase, as against that of the genuine part, may and probably will be absorbed.

The reputation and prosperity of an equipment manufacturer depends absolutely upon perfection of performance of the equipment that he makes. He must supply the best possible parts, while the manufacturer whose only interest lies in selling some parts, has no interest whatever in equipment performance.

The price of genuine replacement parts may be higher. It has to be. However, in the long run the price is not only as low as that of spurious parts, but very much lower, if efficiency, durability and performance mean anything.

PROGRESSIVE MANAGEMENT

RECENTLY I received a request from Mr. L. A. Edwards, general manager of the Prudential Long Island Theatres, a circuit operating or directly concerned with a total of 41 theatres, that I journey out to Patchogue, Long Island, and address the Prudential managers. Mr. Edwards promised also to have the projectionists present.

The invitation was accepted, and I found Mr. Edwards to be very anxious to interest his managers in demanding perfection in projection. Moreover, he was very willing to supply all things necessary to keep the projection equipment in first-class condition.

Mr. Edwards asked what spare parts should be carried in stock. The Simplex is used exclusively in the theatres under his management. I suggested that in some central location there should be spare intermittent movements so that when any movement was in need of repairs, including the installation of a new intermittent sprocket, one of the spares could be obtained, the movement sent to the factory and the necessary repair be made properly, which suggestion Mr. Edwards agreed with. I also suggested that at the same central point a supply of spares of high-intensity carbon jaws and all other parts that must from time to time be replaced, should be carried. With this he also agreed.

Mr. Edwards made this significant statement: "I have found it an expensive matter to have repairs made elsewhere than at the factory where the equipment was made, or a repair shop directly specified by the manufacturer of the apparatus. It has been my experience that other repair shops more or less 'dupe' parts, and while they do the work cheaper, in the end the results are not nearly so good and the cost in the end at least 30% higher because of the necessity for more frequent repairs."

I thoroughly agree with what he said in this regard. "Cheap" repair work is almost invariably very expensive repair work when the tale is all told. In reply to my inquiry as to just what lines he would suggest I talk to his managers and projectionists along, Mr. Edward said, "I realize the importance of projection. It is my desire to build up a spirit of friendly co-operation between the managers and projectionists of my theatres, instead of the feeling, too often emphasized, of boss and employe. They are the two important personages in any theatre. They should co-operate, be friends and work together."

And it was to some extent along these lines that I addressed the meeting in the auditorium of the Patchogue theatre. Mr. Edwards is entirely correct. There are too many instances where managers are apparently much more interested in emphasizing the I-am-the-boss idea, than in getting the best possible work.

After the meeting I had lunch with Mr. Edwards and three of his partners in the Prudential circuit—Messrs. Harry Britwar, Edward Seider and Moe Seider.

INTERMITTENT SPROCKET RENEWAL

L. R. DANIELS of Chicago, writes, "Well, F. H., I've had quite a scrap with our manager, who refuses to have new intermittent sprockets installed. He says those on the projectors 'look all right!' He can see nothing wrong with them. Also he claims I should put them on when they are needed.

"He has a lot of respect for you, Friend Richardson. He reads your department and often springs something you have said on me. Will you therefore do me the favor to again print the various reasons why his ideas about intermittent sprockets are wrong. I know you have several times advised against using intermittent sprockets too long, and against projectionists installing them, but I can't locate any of the articles."

There are several reasons why intermittent sprockets should be replaced as soon as there is any visible evidence of wear. True, it need not be done quite so soon now as when such sprocket teeth and the rims they rest on were hardened. Then they did not wear off evenly. Instead, the film cut an indentation, or tiny notch at the base of every tooth, and those notches certainly did raise Old Ned with sprocket hole edges. Every one of them gave the edge of the hole a rasping pull as the tooth was forced out.

Today intermittent sprockets are not subjected to hardening processes, and the teeth wear off perhaps more rapidly, but do so evenly. There is no longer any undercut. Instead, the tooth edge wears off on a curve and may be worn considerably without serious damage. Just how far the wear may extend has not as yet been definitely decided by any responsible body, but it is entirely safe to say that as soon as the resultant hook form becomes in any degree visible to the eye, the sprocket should be replaced with a new one.

It is to be hoped that some time we may be supplied with definite knowledge based upon adequate investigations as to just how much an intermittent sprocket tooth may be decreased in thickness at its base before replacement is necessary.

As to the projectionist replacing an intermittent sprocket, it is a big chance that results will not be what they should be. The fit between sprocket and shaft must be within 1/10,000-inch, yet there must be no heavy pressure. If the sprocket is forced on too tight, since because of necessity for cutting down weight and thus reducing inertia, the rim is made very thin, there will almost inevitably be some strain exerted, with consequent warping of the sprocket rim out of shape. And remember that any such fault will be magnified on the screen rather enormously, so that a fault of 1/10,000-inch may be quite visible to audiences.

The projectionist, save in rare cases, is equipped with neither experience, knowledge nor tools for such delicate work. He might get away with it, yet, but the chances are against it, and if he does not—well, it will be either a wasted new sprocket or fault visible to the audiences so long as the one installed is used.

I have myself on several occasions tested pictures projected with worn intermittent sprockets, or with home-installed ones. In most cases, upon holding a marker at the edge of some horizontal line in the screen image, it was found the line "jiggled."

"But," says the manager, "if the movement is not sufficient to be visible to audiences, what difference does it make?"

Answering that I would say there is such a thing as conscious and unconscious visibility. Conscious visibility is that permitting recognition of a movement as movement. In the other the eye is not conscious of movement but is nevertheless affected by it.

Remember that the theatre patron looks more or less steadily at a screen image for a period of from one and a half to two hours. A 7,000-foot feature takes almost 80 minutes to project, and during that time the eyes are constantly on the screen. Now that is pretty hard on the eyes, even though everything be perfect. Undue wear of the intermittent sprocket teeth sets up, or is very apt to set up, a slight condition of imperfect registration of the picture over the aperture, and therefore of the screen image itself.

And now for the pay-off. Such a movement, as you all must know, would slightly blurr every horizontal line in the screen image, and in proportion every line angled between horizontal and vertical. I also think that such slight blurring will have an inevitable effect on the eyes looking at it for from one to two hours at a stretch. The theatre patron doesn't know anything is wrong. He only knows the pictures hurt his eyes, hence he does not attend the theatre as often as he otherwise would.

A PRACTICAL CARBON SAVER

VERY OFTEN I am called in to examine inventions, and recently the Projector Improvement Company of New York invited me to call and examine a carbon saver they now have on the market. Now as you may have noted, I have not been very favorable to carbon savers. It has seemed to me that present-day projectionists have too many important things to attend, to be monkeying around in an attempt to save a few cents worth of carbon, when the saving is effected by joining a new carbon and a stub, or two carbon stubs. I therefore approached this device in a very skeptical frame of mind. However, this particular carbon saver seems to represent a logical method of utilizing carbon stubs that are long enough to run an added reel. With this "saver," all of the stub may be used except about 1½ inches in case of the H. I. positive (no saver necessary for negative), whereas the low-intensity can be all burned except about ½-inch.

The saver is simplicity personified. It consists of a heavy, hollow copper-coated steel tube (d, Figure IV) six inches long, and of a diameter equal to that of the positive carbon being used.

By means of a wood-handled gadget, (C, Figure I), a thin copper cap (a, Figure I), is clamped on the carbon tip (b, Figure I). To do this the cap is slipped on the end of the carbon, and the small end of the tip is inserted into the inset in top of the handle (c Figure I). The whole is then up-ended, the carbon tip laid on the soft wood block shown in Figure II, and the top of the handle struck sharply with the palm of the hand. This clamps the cap on the carbon, whereupon the job is finished. It takes perhaps seven or eight seconds to do all this. The finished job presents the appearance indicated in Figure III. The soft wood block is used to prevent breaking of the crater rim.

With a supply of stubs capped and ready for use, it is only necessary to slip the small end of cap into the hollow rod (d. Figure LV) and tighten up the knurled knob at its bottom end, which clamps the cap and rod into tight mechanical and electrical contact. The device has a steel reamer for cleaning carbon jaw contact surfaces, but this I would not feel like either commending or condemning until I have reports from projectionists who have used them for some while. It may be quite all right if used carefully. The Suprex 7-mm. stub capper does precisely the same thing, only in a bit different way. Presumably by now you have the main idea, which is that the steel rod takes the place of the carbon itself insofar as has to do with the carbon clamp, thus enabling the burning of the carbon down as closely as may be without injury to the end of the steel rod. The rod is clamped in the carbon jaw exactly as the carbon itself would be.

net (see Figure 3). The scene opens with the little girl standing behind the rustic picket fence. She opens the gate, walks down the steps and down stage for her number. After finishing she exits to wings while the Kiddie Kabaret curtain is again dropped in front of the set piece. The latter is then removed and a new novelty set-piece placed.

THE SET

The posts, fence and gate pickets are cut from wall board and nailed to 1 x 2-inch battens. The tree and ground row are also cut from wall-board and braced with battens. The gate should swing back so that only the front shows to the audience. To facilitate handling the entire set in one piece, mount the several pieces that make up the set on a floor frame as shown in the plot (Figure 3), and in section in detail as seen from the back (Figure 4) showing bracing of vertical pieces to the floor frame.

The moon should be a moon box if a dye sky-drop is used. If the drop is painted, the moon could be cut from wallboard painted yellow and hung in front of the drop. (See the November 17th issue of BETTER THEATRES for instructions on how to make a Moon Box.)

The fence can be white, very light pink or any pastel tone that fancy dictates. Do the tree in decorative style—foliage bright, medium-green shaded in blue-green; trunk and branches shell pink, light turquoise, pale green; outlines in very light green; ground row bright medium-green with flowers in colors.

SURPRISE SWEETS

The curtain opens to disclose a big candy box surmounted by a circle decorated with streamers and hearts (see Figure 4). The cover swings open. A demure little miss in costume representing a chocolate, or other form of sweets, steps out of the box and trips down stage for number. Kiddie Kabaret curtain down as performer exits to wings.

THE SET

Promote a large dry goods box or radio shipping case of the approximate proportions of a candy box. As candy boxes come in many different shapes this should not be difficult to do. Cover the sides and front (hinged cover) with paper (pasted on). Line the inside of the box with cheese cloth or crepe paper. If no cover comes with the box, this can be cut from wallboard or plyboard. Hinge the cover as shown in Figure 6. Fasten the box to the platform or floor with stage screws or large screw eyes set in holes bored in the bottom end of the box. This is to prevent the box from moving or tipping

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A.I.A.

The Question:

I HAVE BEEN a consistent reader of your Planning the Theatre department for many years and at this time take the liberty to ask your advice and suggestions. I am forwarding you under separate cover some sketches which, though crudely and hurriedly done, may be of help to you.

At present this building is bringing in an average of $225 a month rent. It is situated in a town of 1,000 people but has a vast drawing territory. It is the nucleus of several small towns. The theatre is paying at present, but we feel it would pay better if it were something more attractive.

I would like your advice as to what this building is worth as it stands, being of entirely wood construction and badly in need of repairs. What would it cost to remodel it into a modern 400- to 500-seat theatre with stores and other rooms? Is it possible to fix the part above the theatre soundproof so it could be used for lodge rooms? There is too much room in the basement, so could the stage be moved back on the lot in the rear and also lowered to some extent?

We may not be able to purchase this building and do with it what we want. We would then be interested to know about what it would cost to fix the front with a decent marquee, properly decorate the theatre auditorium and make a loft to the stage, cutting out part of the upper floor.

Also could you advise us as to some theatre architect and approximately what such fees would be to draw up plans for what we need. Thanking you for any service whatsoever, I am.—R. A. L.

The Answer:

YOU ASK ME to place a valuation on your building. It is very difficult for me to do so as I do not know the local real estate values and how old the building is. The value of property is generally based upon its earning power. The yearly income is commonly figured on 10% of the property valuation.

To remodel such a building into a modern 500-seat theatre with store and lodge rooms will cost about $7,500, exclusive of equipment. The floor between the theatre and lodge rooms can be easily soundproofed with any good soundproof material placed between the joists.

I do not know of any reason why the stage cannot be set back and the floor lowered. It will give more ceiling height in front of the stage. For any building of the type of construction as you describe in your inquiry, the New York State Code allows only a Class-B stage, to be used only for motion picture exhibitions, so you do not need to provide for a loft. Should you desire to remodel only the front and build a new marquee and decorate interior, it will cost from $1,000 to $1,200.

I regret that I am not familiar with the name of a theatre architect in your locality. Architect fees for remodeling jobs like yours runs from 7% to 10% of the total cost. There is no doubt that by employing the services of an architect you will be able to obtain the most satisfactory results.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Question:

I AM commencing studies for remodeling the M—— theatre. The owner tells me that you have a department which advises theatre owners and offers suggestions for better theatres. Inasmuch as he and myself are both anxious to avail ourselves of all the information and help that we can get in making his new theatre as near ideal as we can, we are asking you for such suggestions as you see fit to offer. If the information which we have furnished is insufficient please ask us for more.

The present building is 38 feet wide inside, and is 118 feet long inside. The stage is 32 feet deep, floor of stage 3 feet, 6 inches above low point of auditorium floor. Proscenium opening is 24 feet wide and 14 feet high. The ceiling height just in front of the stage is twenty feet. Entrance lobby, in the center in front, is 20 feet wide and 10 feet deep, and just behind the lobby and before entering the auditorium is a cross aisle the full width and 5 feet deep, thus leaving an auditorium seating area 70 feet long. There is a poor balcony which is to be removed. The entire lobby, box office, toilet rooms, balcony and booth are to be removed and rebuilt.

The owner has acquired 60 feet of additional property directly behind the present theatre.

Here is what we have in mind so far. The building faces north across a wide parkway, possibly 400 feet, and hence has no protection from north winds. We are planning to arrange a double lobby, one set of doors to be removed in the summer with the box office behind the exterior set of doors, protected in the winter but open in summer. Behind this will be a fairly roomy foyer, say 20 feet square, steps up to the cross-over at the rear of the auditorium. Arrange toilet rooms and stairs to the balcony on each side of the foyer. Enter operator's booth from balcony. Use, say 40 or 45 feet for this arrangement. Allow 25 feet of the rear for stage. This will leave an auditorium depth of 108 to 113 feet, and only 38 feet wide.

Now the balcony would extend from a point just about over the standee rail at the rear of the auditorium back over the foyer, etc., practically to the front wall on each side of the booth, which would be located in the center of the balcony and at the front walls. If our screen was located 10 feet from the front line of the stage, the machines would have a throw of approximately 155 feet. Is that practical?

Some of our patrons who had to sit in the rear of the balcony would be approximately 165 feet from the speakers if they were located behind the screen. Is that practical? Would it be desirable to have additional speakers in other parts of the building? Where would you suggest?

We are contemplating elevating our auditorium floor, starting about 16 feet from the stage, rising ¾-inch to the foot for the next 16 feet, 1 inch to the foot for the next 16 feet, and so on to the rear of the auditorium, adding ¼-inch to each rate of rise to the foot at each sixteen-foot distance, or thereabout. Is that too rapid a rise? Would it be better to make those closer to the screen somewhat flatter and leave those at the rear about as we have planned?—U. S. B.

The Answer:

I CANNOT imagine the benefit of a double lobby. There is such a thing as too many doors to be opened to reach the auditorium proper. Therefore, I suggest that you separate lobby and foyer, and foyer and auditoriums by doors. By all means place the box office between the entrance doors. A foyer 20 feet square is large enough to accommodate patrons waiting for seats. You may plan for plate glass openings in wall between foyer and auditorium so that the people in the foyer can see the picture. Plan foyer doors at the end of the aisles so that no extraneous sound can penetrate to the auditorium.

The toilet rooms and stairways to balcony should be in the foyer. Make the lobby 15 feet deep. Since the width of the auditorium is only 38 feet, do not make the length any more than 100 feet. This distance is from stage apron to rear wall. Do not plan for standee rail. A wall between the auditorium and the foyer answers this purpose. The stage, 25 feet deep, is large enough for a 24-foot proscenium arch. Make this arch as high as you possibly can. One foot between the ceiling and the soffit of the arch is all you need (the proscenium arch is not featured today as in the past). The auditorium walls simply stop at the front curtain. A 155-foot projection throw is not impracticable. It all depends on what kind of projection apparatus is used.

If you plan your theatre for the proper acoustic conditions, you do not need to fear that the patrons in the last row of the balcony will experience any trouble hearing the sound. The speakers should be behind the screen, or at least adjoining it.

The seating arrangement as planned by you is all right. Place as many seats in the center bank as your state code permits. Remember they are the best seats in the house. The majority of states allow from 13 to 14 seats in a row. It is not necessary that the wall banks have an even number of seats across. The best method of establishing the proper incline of the auditorium floor is to divide the space from the orchestra pit to foyer wall in 15-foot sections. Leave the first section level, raise the next section 9 inches, the next section 12 inches, the next section 15 inches, and so on, increasing the incline of each section by 3 inches. Do not plan the first row of seats closer than 20 feet from screen.

The Question:

WE ARE CONSTRUCTING a modern motion picture theatre in this city which will accommodate approximately 3,200 people and which will be furnished throughout with the latest and most modern of equipment. It will be an atmospheric type theatre, and since it will be the first theatre of this type in this city, I would greatly appreciate, should it lie within the bounds of your service, information as to the treatment of the atmospheric ceiling.

We have on hand various samples of different acoustical plasters, the relative merits and durability and adaptability of which we have no practical knowledge. Since there have been so many of this type of theatres built in the U. S., I would greatly appreciate information from you as to the material from which the best results have been obtained and its general mode of application.—J. M.

The Answer:

THERE ARE several makes of acoustic plaster on the market, and I have found that nearly all of them are giving satisfactory results. However, the matter of application is a great factor. While applying this material, the surface is to be stippled with a wire brush. This stippling should be done at an angle of 45 degrees with the stage.

The matter of paint is also to be considered seriously. No paint containing oil can be used, as this will seal the pores. Use only water paint and apply it with a spraying machine.

For atmospheric interiors the ceiling should be vaulted so that there will not be any right angles with the walls.

The Question:

I HAVE JUST built an extension to my stage, out into the audience, and am now faced with the problem of how to swing a curtain out over this extension. If you are able to fathom the enclosed rough diagram you will see where we extended the stage 6 feet out from under the proscenium, and out from under the line over which our curtain now passes. Hence, it would be quite advantageous to be able to draw a curtain across the front of the new stage.

It would not be practical to draw the curtain in a straight line, for when not in use the curtain would either be within the sightline to the screen or hang in a visible bunch at each side of the auditorium.—L. A. H.

The Answer:

THE ONLY solution for your problem is to use a semi-circular or segmental track and extend this track far enough behind the inside of the proscenium arch so that when the curtain is open the material will be out of sight from the audience. The track may be supported from ceiling.

You did not state whether you want this curtain electrically operated. If so, you had better take this matter up with a track manufacturer. Such operation is entirely possible, and in many cases highly desired.

If you expect to operate the curtain by a rope, use a roller bearing track with eyelets fastened to the bottom of the top of track for rope. There will be two ropes required to open the curtain with one operation.

The Answer:

I FIND that your town, with its surrounding territory, has a drawing power of about 1,000 people. This would justify you to show pictures at least four times a week, as the size of your theatre will hardly accommodate more than 150 persons. I do not think that by running the theatre one night a week your investment would be worth while. By shopping around you may be able to keep the cost of the equipment down to a minimum.

Do not expect to make a large return on your investment, as it will be impossible to do so with such a small house, even if you sell out every night, seven days of the week. It simply cannot be done. Before you go into this proposition, I advise you to consider this matter over from every angle.

Planning for Air-Conditioning

often occurs between 3 and 4 o'clock p. m. Take 90% of the dry bulb, and 90% of the wet bulb of this hottest condition, and consider that as the controlling outside conditions. Average conditions for the hottest month are never satisfactory, because an average indicates that the conditions are exceeded 50% of the time; hence with only average conditions taken as the basis for design, an under-capacity plant will result.

6. Establish from consideration of the basic outside conditions, the maximum inside conditions that must be maintained in the auditorium. Do this by referring to the comfort chart, and also give consideration to the fact that health requirements do not permit too great a difference between inside and outside conditions.

7. Determine the rate of air motion permissible within the auditorium and the general direction of air motion. This, of course, means some limit between perceptible drafts and stagnation.

roof and side walls. This requires engineering knowledge.

9. Establish the B.T.U. light load in the space to be conditioned. Every electric light burning under normal conditions adds to the heat load.

10. Establish the B.T.U. mechanical load. Every motor that may be located in an unventilated or poorly ventilated space adjacent to or connected with the space to be conditioned will add to the heat load.

11. Establish the infiltration load. Just for information sake and to show that sometimes this is a substantial consideration, with a 15- to 20-mile per hour wind blowing, a weather-stripped exit door will admit about 15 cubic feet of air per hour per lineal foot of crack, while a door without weatherstripping will admit as high as 50 cubic feet of air per lineal foot of crack.

12. With mechanical refrigeration, recirculation must be considered. With recirculation the minimum quantity of fresh air per person must be determined. Some authorities hold that 7½ cubic feet of fresh air per person is satisfactory. I am quite convinced that as a general rule 10 cubic feet of fresh air per person per minute, with a total of 30 cubic feet of air (including recirculated air) per minute per person, is the minimum for theatres.

All of the foregoing considerations are strictly items of air-conditioning, and with a plant designed to overcome or meet each requirement regardless of the total heat load or gain or loss in water vapor, the theatre should have a satisfactory operating plant. However, to keep the varying conditions, considering the plant properly designed, the next important consideration is flexibility and control.

OPERATING FACILITIES

THERE HAS BEEN adequate development in control instruments, so there is really no excuse for failure to provide sufficient control equipment for intelligent and practically fool-proof operation. It is urged that exhibitors seriously consider instruments of the recording type when feasible. They are somewhat more expensive, but they do become of inestimable value in checking operations and in determining the skill with which the plant is operated. These records also relate the history of a whole season, which is never equaled for accuracy when compared to operating logs kept by an engineer. Such records also establish a means of checking the cost of operating the plant.

MAINTENANCE

In choosing the equipment, aside from its performance, much consideration should be given to facilities for maintaining the equipment. As many parts of the equipment as possible should be easily accessible, and spare parts and service men should be available within reasonable distance of the town where the theatre is located.

Second only to the initial investment, the exhibitor is concerned with operating costs. The buyer of air-conditioning today has the right to expect the company from whom he bought the plant to furnish a detailed cost analysis of the operation of the plant. The exhibitor should expect the service of an engineer for an undefined period of time to assist in bringing the operating costs in line with the preliminary analysis. Such engineering service should spread over sufficient time to establish thoroughly the results of the plant in operation, and to determine operating methods and complete instructions in the management of the installation.

NOISE AND VIBRATION

In addition to all the many considerations listed, the exhibitor has another most important factor, that of noise and vibration. The sound level of the theatre must not be raised as the result of an air-conditioning installation. Scientific control of noise and mechanical sounds is a fact today and there is no excuse for disturbance from this source. The installing company should absolutely guarantee against annoyance from this source. If in the elimination of noise it becomes necessary to line the interior of ducts only, fireproof materials should be used.

FREON REFRIGERATION

Perhaps the most recent and important development in theatre air-conditioning is the use of a refrigerant known as Freon or F12 (dichlorodifluoromethane)—the application of direct expansion, thereby eliminating the air washer; and the use of multiple-unit compressors, instead of one large compressor unit.

The operating refrigeration range of F12 is very satisfactory for air-conditioning, and would seem, at this time that more and more mechanically refrigerated air-conditioning installations will use Freon instead of carbon dioxide, Dielene, Carrene, etc.

Freon as a refrigerant was developed by Dr. Thomas Midgley, the man who gave the automotive industry ethyl gasoline. It is non-inflammable, non-explosive and non-toxic. Experiments have shown that small animals can live in air contaminated with 20% Freon. It decomposes when heated by a flame in the presence of water vapor; because of this characteristic some local authorities do not entirely approve of it. The fear seems to be that if a fire should get under way and the Freon system should spring a leak, the resulting breakdown would aggravate the fire-fighting problem. When not in the presence of water vapor, Freon is thermally stable up to 1,000° Fahrenheit. Freon is non-corrosive in contact with metals used in refrigerating compressors and cooling systems. It is extremely important that Freon systems be clean and dry, for water or moisture in the system will give no end of trouble at the expansion valves.

Due to the particular operating pressures of Freon, under the principle of expanding the compressed refrigerant into finned coils and drawing the air over these coils to cool it, the usual step of cooling water and then using the cold water to cool the air is omitted. This principle is known or referred to as direct expansion. In this method the air below its dew point, and the moisture is condensed from the air. This method is somewhat cheaper than the air washer method and is equally effective for all practical purposes.

The use of a series of comparatively small compressor units rather than one large compressor of the rated total tonnage capacity, should be carefully considered. There are some advantages resulting from this type of installation. From the comparatively few installations of the multiple-unit compressors, and consequently lacking positive records, it is hard to determine positively which type of plant is superior. The multiple-compressor plan offers operating flexibility and lower operating costs. When conditions are such that only half the refrigeration is required, then only half the compressors will be operating with a 100% load, instead of one large compressor operating at 50% load, which latter is inefficient. The other advantage is one of protection against complete breakdown. With the multiple installation, say of five compressors, one might be out of commission, but the theatre would have 80% of its capacity available for efficient operation. This seems to be a strong argument for multiple installations in theatres.

Most naturally the question might be asked: What about the maintenance cost of the multiple compressor units as compared with the single unit? Data on theatre installations is insufficient to answer this question with any degree of positive assurance now. However, there have been many commercial jobs of the multiple type and they do not indicate higher maintenance cost—if anything, it runs slightly less than that of a large single compressor. The fact that it costs less to maintain small machine units than large machine units makes it seem logical to believe, although one cannot be sure, that total maintenance on multiple compressor jobs will not exceed total maintenance on a one large compressor job of equal tonnage.

In using Freon with the direct expansion principle, it is standard practice to install some type of air filters. Filter installations become very necessary if air washers are not used—they can be omitted, but it's not advisable. Recent developments in air filters have placed on the market highly efficient, less clumsy and cheaper filter equipment, easy to maintain and in keeping with the improvement in other equipment used in heating, ventilating and air-conditioning.

Many companies are prepared to make air-conditioning installations on a plan permitting payment over a period of time varying from twelve to twenty-four months, depending, of course, upon the credit status of the buyer. Most companies ask for a payment of some amount upon the signing of the contract, unless the job is being done on a cash basis.

(the entire height limited because of provision of lease not to obscure office building above), and the side ribs extend up the face of the attraction board. All three ribs then proceed in continuous motion across the soffit of the canopy and into the open loggia across the main light fixture of the loggia and back to the other entrance doors, giving an invitational flashing from the curb line back to a point approximately 15 feet into the building.

Another unusual feature of the loggia is the continuous V-shaped light fixture extending the full length of this loggia and down each side, directing attention to the built-in poster frames at each end. This light fixture is built of heavy flashed opal glass inserted between extruded aluminum ribs and arranged in such manner that each glass may be slid over the one adjacent for re-lamping and cleaning purposes. Discs of spun aluminum form the border ornamental features across this light fixture and down the poster frame on each side.

The box office of the Garrick is somewhat unusual in that it is a complete circle and of modernistic design built entirely of cast and plate aluminum and projecting beyond a black Vitrolite base. The floor of the loggia is designed in rubber tile carried out in alignment with the vertical ribs beneath the end poster frame and with a circular feature around the box office.

The treatment of the entrance doors is somewhat unusual in that they are combined with a large cast aluminum grill consisting of bold discs with an intermediate modernistic cast aluminum tracery effect.

The improvements to the Garrick included the remodeling of the lobby, complete re-decoration of both the lower and upper foyers and stairways as well as the removal of the old projection room from the main floor and construction of a new projection room above the lower balcony. Very few changes were made in the auditorium, which was of unusually excellent original design and is one of the outstanding architectural achievements of its day.

An interesting feature of the interior is the use of built-in furniture of modern design. This furniture was executed from full-sized details prepared by Mr. Strauss, being upholstered in leather and with the wood-work of veneer in Carpathian Elm, English Lacewood and Italian Olive. It is rather interesting to note that veneer of this comparatively expensive wood may be used in very thin thickness to achieve a rich effect, without excessive cost.

Recent Labor Laws and the Theatre

those of the state of New York. The act adopts not a law of the Congress, but a body of rules and regulations prepared by individuals, approved by an administrative authority and finally approved by the President, and then provides that, upon filing a certified copy in the office of the secretary of state, a violation of any provision of such code so adopted and filed is a crime under the laws of the state of New York. To term such a method of legislation, such a manner of attempting to create criminal offenses, vicious is to indulge in mild criticism. To hold such a legislative act constitutional seems contrary to the plain language and import of our fundamental laws, both national and state. . . . The constitutionality of the National Industrial Recovery Act is not for us to determine, but must be determined by Courts of federal jurisdiction. . . . We hold that subdivision 1 of section 2 of chapter 781, Laws of 1933 (Ex. Sess.) is in violation of the Constitution of the state of New York, article 3, paragraphs 1, 17, and void; that it is an unwarranted attempt to delegate the power to create a crime; that the declaration of the acts constituting a crime rests with the Legislature and cannot be delegated to federal administrative or executive authority. We hold that the plaintiff has established sufficient reasons to justify the granting of an injunction. . . ."

STATE LABOR INJUNCTION LAW

A GREAT DEAL of litigation has arisen in the past over the question whether or not a state Legislature may pass a valid law prohibiting the courts from granting injunctions against members of unions who peacefully picket or persuade employes from continuing in the employment.

With respect to this question, it is well settled that a state Legislature may, in the exercise of the police power of the state, enact those laws which have a tendency to promote the public comfort, health, safety, morals, or welfare of society.

In the exercise of this power, the Legislature may enact laws regulating, restraining, or prohibiting anything harmful to the welfare of the people, even though such regulation, restraint, or prohibition interferes with the liberty or property of an individual. In other words, the Constitution of the United States was not designed to interfere with the police power to enact and enforce laws for the protection of the health, peace, morals, or general welfare of the people.

CASE

For instance, in the late case of Fenske Brothers, (193 N. E. 112, Chicago) it was disclosed that a state law was passed which provides: "No restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court of this State, or by a judge or the judges thereof in any case involving or growing out of a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment . . . or from peaceably and without threats or intimidation being upon any public street, or thoroughfare or highway for the purpose of obtaining or communicating information, or to peaceably and without threats or intimidation persuade any person or persons to work or to abstain from working. . . ."

It was contended that this state law is invalid as violating the United States Constitution. However, the court held the law valid and enforceable, saying:

DECISION

"Inasmuch as the Legislature had a right to legalize acts of peaceable picketing and peaceable persuasion, it necessarily follows that forbidding the restraint of such peaceable acts does not deprive anybody of a remedy for an injury or wrong. . . . It is not to be presumed that the Legislature contemplated legalizing peaceable persuasion in furtherance of any unlawful strike or actionable conspiracy."

RECORDING OF CHATTEL MORTGAGE

CHATTEL MORTGAGES are a common source of controversies in theatre operation. It is well settled law that a chattel mortgage is valid and enforceable provided the mortgage is properly signed and recorded in accordance with the provisions of the law. However, if the mortgage is not properly recorded, or not properly signed, it is not effective with respect to any person or firm who may purchase or otherwise obtain possession of the subject of the mortgage while acting in good faith and without knowledge that the mortgage was executed.

On the other hand, the courts will not declare a mortgage invalid, unless the party who has acquired it proves conclusively that the mortgage was either improperly signed, or improperly recorded, and that he obtained possession of the mortgaged property while acting in good faith and from one who held legal title to the property. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Robert Morton Organ Company v. Armour Montesano Theatre Corporation (38 P. [2] 257, Washington).

CASE

In this case it was shown that a man named Armour owned a theatre building. An organ manufacturer sold to the Montesano Theatre Corporation, a co-partnership, which occupied the theatre building, an organ for the purchase price of $6,500. The partners paid $500 when the contract was signed and agreed to pay the balance in monthly installments over a period of three years. The contract was recorded in the office of the county auditor.

However, the contract was not acknowledged, nor was it accompanied by the usual good faith affidavit of the mortgagors. By reason of those defects, the contract, as a chattel mortgage, was void against all others who may purchase the organ for value and in good faith from the partners. But the absence of the affidavit of good faith and the lack of acknowledgement did not invalidate the mortgage as to persons who had full knowledge of the contract.

One paragraph of the contract provided that in the event the partners failed to pay the installments the seller could retake the organ, sell it, and charge all costs and attorney's fees to the purchasers, who should be liable for any deficiency.

Some time later Armour died and left his entire estate to his wife, who had been a partner of Montesano Theatre Corporation but who had not signed the contract purchasing the organ. Later the wife sold the theatre building, which had been the exclusive property of her husband who had died. This sale was made to a theatre corporation. After considerable time had passed the organ manufacturer filed suit to recover possession of the organ in view of the fact that the installments had not been made in accordance with the provisions of the contract.

It was contended that since the wife had inherited the building in which the organ had been installed, and since she had not signed the original contract of purchase of the organ, that she acquired possession of the building and the organ in good faith and that the organ manufacturer could not regain possession of it from the theatre corporation which had purchased the building and the organ from Mrs. Armour.

However, it is interesting to observe that the court held the organ manufacturer entitled to recover possession of the organ, and said:

DECISION

"There is no evidence that the organ was transferred to Glen W. Armour, or to any one else, by the 'Montesano Theatre Corporation,' or that any of the members of that co-partnership transferred his interest in the partnership property. . . . There is no evidence that Eva L. Armour, who was not a party to the chattel mortgage and not a member of the co-partnership, acquired the interests of the co-partnership. . . . A personal judgment for the amount of the mortgage debt cannot be entered against any one other than the original mortgagor or mortgagors or their successors in interest who assumed payment of the mortgage debt."

TAX FOR USE OF STREETS

UNDER ANY circumstances a city ordinance is valid and enforceable by the terms of which companies, such as traveling shows, located outside the city are required to pay higher license fees than paid by those located within the city, providing the ordinance is authorized by a state law and explains that the higher license fee is based on use of the streets by vehicles owned by the companies whose principal places of business are outside the city limits.

For example, in the late case of Crosswell (172 S. E. 698, Bishopville, S. C.), it was disclosed that a city enacted an ordinance which required payment of license fees by firms located outside the city limits and who utilized vehicles on the streets. The ordinance did not specify any license fees to be paid by local companies, but explained that the payment of license fees by outside firms was intended to compensate the city for use of the streets.

Although the validity of this law was contested by a company located outside the city corporation limits, the higher court held the ordinance valid.

TAXATION OF CHARITY FUND

ANOTHER IMPORTANT point of the law is that although neither a state nor a city may arbitrarily interfere with the theatre business or prohibit carrying on any lawful occupation or impose unreasonable restrictions upon them, this rule of the law is not applicable to prevent a state or city from exercising its ordinary police power to protect its citizens from imposition and fraud, or to safeguard its citizens in any other manner. This rule is especially applicable to laws and ordinances which regulate soliciting of charitable funds, or selling tickets, if the proprietor promises to pay a percentage of the receipts to a charitable institution.

For illustration, in Commonwealth v. Creighton (170 Atl. 720, Philadelphia), decided during the past few weeks, it was shown that a state law was passed which required payment of license fees by all those who solicited moneys for charitable purposes. A solicitor was arrested and convicted of selling for a corporation which offered to pay 10% of the proceeds to an orphange. He appealed to the higher court which, however, upheld the validity of the law.

when the occupant steps out. By adjusting the box to lean back slightly the cover can be made to close automatically.

The circle and hearts are cut from wallboard. Crepe paper streamers are attached to the back of the circle. Use a light, bright color scheme to stand out sharply against the dark background. A tie-up with a local candy manufacturer might be affected whereby the candy box carries his trade name in return for candy for prizes or gifts to the youthful entertainers, or the entire act might be sponsored by a candy manufacturer or shop.

MICKEY MOUSE

Whether the stage presentation is the direct result of a Mickey Mouse Club or other "Kiddie" organization, an act built around Mickey is always welcome diversion for adults as well as children. The following novelty caused much favorable comment when it was recently staged by the author.

A giant Mickey Mouse cutout is revealed as the curtain rises, standing in front of a draped drop. Mickey's eyes move as if looking the audience over. His left hand moves upward, lifting the curtain. Through the opening in the curtain enters a line of young dancers in Mickey Mouse costumes for a snappy tap routine. Mickey closes the curtain.

This is an ideal dancing school tie-up—one that any progressive dancing teacher will be anxious to take advantage of for its splendid publicity possibilities.

The cutout of Mickey (Figue 8) should be from 8 to 10 feet high, made of wallboard braced with 1x2-inch battens. The left arm (a) (a, different positions indicated by dotted lines) is fastened to the body by means of a stove bolt (b). The draped drop is fastened to the hand, which is raised and lowered by means of a pull line running through a pulley. The line is, of course, behind the curtain and therefore not seen by the audience.

The animation of the eyes is also very simple. The eye-openings are cut out, and a triangular piece of wallboard (a Figure 8) on which the eyes have been painted, is fastened behind the head to a pivot (b). A string (c) fastened to one edge of the triangular piece and running through screw eyes (d-d) off stage, pulls the triangle to one side; a rubber band (e), one end fastened to the triangle, the other end to the cutout, pulls the triangle back. A large-headed nail (f) set in a narrow slit in the triangle acts as a stop post to the latter.

Do Mickey Mouse in the familiar colors: white face, gloves and shoes; black body; red pants with white buttons.

NOTED SEATTLE SHOWMAN REVEALS SIMPLE RECIPE FOR HAPPINESS

Dear Jack Warner:

The other night I sat in a preview on SWEET MUSIC, and if the audience reaction to this picture means anything, SWEET MUSIC is going to be one of the best audience pictures of the season, and I hasten to extend to you my praise for the manner in which you handled Rudy Vallee.

You made a regular trouper out of him immediately on entering his first scene, and you kept him a regular trouper all the way through. Before we were in the picture five minutes, everyone in the audience was convulsed with laughter. This picture deserves success because it is filled to overflowing with entertainment value.

With worlds of good wishes,

Sincerely,

John Hamrick

READ RUDY'S MOST SENSATIONAL

You're going to be surprised when you see Warner Bros.' first Rudy Vallee show. But just so you won't be too surprised, we're reprinting these friendly warnings from three recognized authorities.

"Introducing a brand new and grand new personality: ladies and gentlemen, I give you Rudy Vallee! . . . Just go to see 'Sweet Music', is all I ask; and I'll practically guarantee you'll all become Vallee-conscious in the cinema as so many of you are over the air waves. For here's a different Rudy, a genuinely likeable chap . . . There's a refreshing spontaneity to 'Sweet Music' absent from the screen since 'Forty-second Street' . . . and through it all the Vallee Charm, which I'd always believed to be a myth but now admit is an American institution."

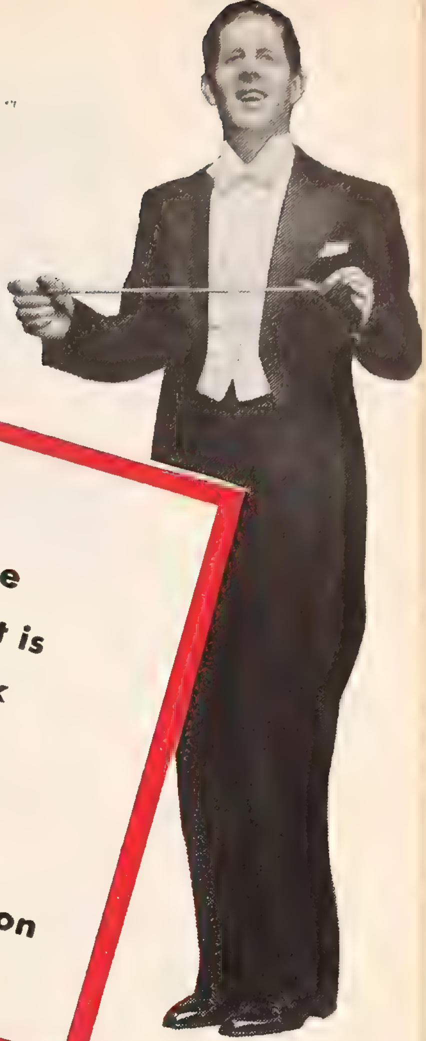
"After screening SWEET MUSIC, today, I believe this picture has great box office possibilities. It is the best thing Vallee has done and Ann Dvorak is excellent. It is a down-to-earth picture that I am sure will bring in money."

—M. J. MULLIN,
M & P Theatres, Boston



"Last night we screened SWEET MUSIC for about twenty people, including some of the local critics, and if ever we received a surprise, it was after looking at this one. It was the unanimous opinion of everybody that Vallee will be made after this picture is released, and that the picture contains everything to make it sure-fire box office. If it doesn't break box office records, it will not be the picture's fault."

THE DIRT IN KANSAS CITY

"WHAT has happened to defenders of dirt in the drama?" asks Mr. Lowell Lawrance in the Kansas City Journal Post. . . . "Those liberals ventured the opinion that the movie reform wave would bring back the stage because the living drama, unshackled by the rigid censorship imposed on Hollywood, still could be bold, virile and spiced with naughtiness. Sin, said the anti-censor spokesman, is more interesting than virtue and is what the public wants to see in the theatre. . . . Well, look what happened to 'Pagan Lady,' the sensuous play in which the voluptuous Lenore Ulric starred last week at the Shubert Theatre. It was as meretricious and brazen a play as the stage has offered in recent seasons—the kind of shockingly sexy salaciousness the liberals maintain the public wants. The audiences were small and failed to get excited about its sin. Maybe that means something."

Mr. Lawrance's observations, interesting enough, fail however to take cognizance of the fact that there has been nothing whatever in the current disciplines of the motion picture addressed at keeping "sin" off the screen. The aim of the Production Code Administration, approved by the leaders of the Legion of Decency, is addressed at making the essence and implications of drama square with decent American life, to deal with "sin" as sin instead of just good fun.

Must we say again that there is nothing demanded of the screen now, by the Production Code under which it is operating, except that its representations of misconduct, such items as murder, adultery, arson and burglary, shall represent them as invasions of the social interest and not as suggestions for a career.

As for "Pagan Lady" in Kansas City. Maybe the story is getting a bit familiar. There have been several of the sort.

HOLLYWOOD dispatches quote Mr. M. H. Aylesworth as announcing that "we are ready to launch television. . . . " and that " . . . it will be a big asset to the movies." If it's as big a help as radio it will be in the vicinity of colossal.

NOT MAE'S FAULT

DR. FRED EASTMAN, whose ardent interest in the motion picture is sometimes tinctured with just the slightest hint of disapproval, in speaking to a convention of pastors at Columbus in Ohio last week said that he "estimates that the movie campaign has cost the industry $10,000,000 at the box office" but that while "the producers have been forced to dry clean their productions in no sense have they been converted." "More people will see Mae West's next release than have seen Hamlet in the 300 years of its existence," he exclaimed. May we not delicately suggest that Dr. Eastman might profitably devote some of his attention to finding out what has been the matter with Hamlet for these three centuries before he goes any farther with the movie problem. Apparently his showmanship is about as good as his accounting. He is considerably more than ten million dollars off on his box office figures.

THERE'S enough smart-crack smut in the Screen Guild's Magazine, Vol. 1, No. 11, to show where some part of Mr. Joseph I. Breen's troubles begin. It sells for twenty cents and seeks public attention. Hollywood has been quite bitter of late about misrepresentation of the art and its people by newspapers and fan magazines.

SCREEN ODD-JOBS

DISCUSSING adverse publicity in the editorial column of Film Daily, Mr. Don Carle Gillette speaks of the "importance of spiking misinformation about the movies as fast as it gets out" . . . "one of the most effective ways to do this is through the newsreels. . . ."

There is distinct merit in the notion that the screen may perhaps carry a discreet message for the motion picture industry, but it would have to be in terms that made it as important to the customers as to the picture makers.

But newsreel editors will promptly snort at a suggestion for lading their product with any more errands. The newsreel because it is swift, facile and made of short units tends to catch all the odd jobs from picturing the President's relatives for Washington goodwill to photographing some senator's aunt's cat, and making "locals" for such jobs as defeating Upton Sinclair. The newsreels have done plenty for the industry, which might about now do something for them. They all rate better with the public than they do in their own offices.

ONE and a half million words of evidence were poured into the Hauptmann trial at Flemington in New Jersey, and the press wires carried out thirteen million words from reporters about it. However, it was deemed improper for the sound motion picture to mention the matter.

MEXICAN THEATRES

Facing severe competition from films, Mexican legitimate theatres in effect have been exempted from special taxation. The exemption covers theatres playing all possible types of production with the exception of motion pictures. The legitimate in Mexico has long begged for assistance. . . .

WAR FILM BEAT

Laurence Stallings' graphic pictorial record of the war, "The First World War," Fox release, has beaten the Canadian government to the theatres of the Dominion. For three months the government has been making "Lest We Forget," official historical war record from its archives, but the film has not yet been released. . . .

GRIEVANCE GROUP

Established by the Seattle censor, headed by L. Kenneth Schoenfeld, is a committee of three to hear exhibitor grievances arising out of competition, including advertising, and attempt to settle them amicably. The group will not conflict with the local code grievance board. Will Hays has approved the plan, it was said.

FAN MAGAZINES

"Two or three" fan magazines, using objectionable material contrary to the recent agreement with the Advertising Advisory Council, shortly may find themselves the object of summary producer action unless the publication of undraped nightclub entertainers as film players is halted. . . .

UNIVERSAL SCHEDULE

The same number of pictures as were produced last year (36 features, six westerns) is planned by Universal for next season, declared general sales manager James R. Grainger last week. Already 12 stories have been purchased, the production budget to remain much as currently.

SECOND GENERATION

Recently incorporated in Boston was Comi Brothers, Inc., theatre supply and service firm of Ernest and Edward Comi. Their father and uncle, also known as Comi Brothers, were called the first exhibitors in Vermont. Edward is credited with being the inventor of the Simplex rear shutter.

PROFIT-SHARING

Worked out by division manager E. C. Rhoden of Fox Midwest is a profit participation plan for employees, whereby a percentage of profit over the preceding year period will be paid every 13 weeks in cash bonuses, ranging from five to 7½ to 10 per cent, depending on class of operation.

FLYING THEATRE

Flying at night, carrying passengers and mail from Washington to Pittsburgh, a plane last week showed Warner's "Devil Dogs of the Air," while an announcer broadcast from the plane, and portions of the sound track were picked up. An elaborate Washington ceremony preceded the flight of the Central airliner, christened the "flying theatre." The exploit was devised and executed by Joseph Feldman, Warner Pittsburgh advertising director. . . .

ADVERTISING COST

It costs 30 per cent less to reach 1,000,000 readers with full-page newspaper advertisements than with full-page magazine ads, according to a survey by Frank R. Elliott, of Indiana University, the United Press reports. The magazine cost was found to be $2,799, compared to the newspaper cost of $2,156. . . .

FLOOR LEADER

Some considerable comfort and encouragement must have come to the motion picture interests of Nebraska to learn that William Haycock, Calloway, an exhibitor, has been selected as the Democratic floor leader of the House in the Nebraska legislature at Lincoln. . . .

DESERVES CREDIT

Entitled to considerable credit for maintenance of high standards and continued progress during a period of economic stress, the industry has been subject, instead, to unjust criticism, John McManus, Loew's Midland theatre manager, told the Round Table Club, Kansas City women's organization. The amusement medium of the great majority, the screen deserves universal support, said Mr. McManus. . . .

COLOR SUIT

Directing 35 "interrogatories" at the plaintiff, attorneys for Fox, Paramount and Walt Disney last week took their first step in joint defense of the color patent infringement suit brought against them by Leon F. Douglass of Menlo Park, Cal., in San Francisco Court. Millions might be involved in damages, but the case is as yet far from trial. . . .

NO PRODUCER CREDIT

Considered by RKO Radio is the release of several pictures for the new season as "company" films, minus screen credit to the individual producer involved. Done by combined studio talent would be the implication. Report that all studio product would be released thus has been denied.

PUBLIC PROTEST

The musket rattle of public protest broke about the A. H. Blank Omaha district headquarters last week in connection with the allegedly salacious advertising and publicity on "The Continental Revue," stage featuring the Paramount reopening. From Legion of Decency members came protest, despite approval of the film shown, while from district head E. R. Cummings, no comment. . . .

THREE-DIMENSION

Coast interest is astir over a new three-dimensional technique developed by William Adler of Pasadena, former cameraman, now with the California Institute of Technology. Claimed to differ from other processes chiefly in that one instead of two images is used on the film, the process entails a triple mirror attachment over the lens. For the exhibitor, it is said, no extra cost; for the producer, added lighting cost. . . .

CONCERNING THE VAN SCHMUS AND WHEREBY HE IS THE BUSINESS MAN OF THE SHOW BUSINESS AT THE MUSIC HALL

Cosmo-Sileo

"We never try to kid the public—or ourselves."

FOR "a thousand nights and a night" a modern Scheherazade might tell of the wonders and strange adventures of that city - within - a - city builded of dreams and oil, dug deep into earth and pushed high into sky, with the magic names of Radio and Rockefeller, of the vanities and foibles of the califs and grand viziers, amid their towers and courts and gardens, splendid with gold and crystal waters.

And no tale that ever beguiled an incensed hour in the courts of Baghdad could be more wrought with marvel than that of the coming and rise to power of the amazing new master of that city-within-a-city's caravanserai of glamours—the Radio City Music Hall, gemmed grotto of the houri shadows and the hundred dancing girls, slaves all of the rainbow lamps.

This new master has come strangely into a strange place. Also he has come into power without pipes and pageantry, silently, bringing the world's most fantastic miracle, showmanship without show.

A delirium of commonsense has taken command of the Music Hall and the show world wonders.

Miles Standish in homespun presiding at the court of Harun al-Rashid would be no more in contrast than W. G. Van Schmus ordering the operations of the great and glittering domain that Roxy I left.

All the splendors are still there, but the room of special magnificence that used to be the office of the maestro is now dedicated to use as a reception office under the name "The Studio," while the white haired, quiet Mr. Van Schmus, 58 and unexcited, sits in broadfaced tranquility in a conveniently compact and unawesome office on an upper floor.

The punctilious bebuttoned pages dash about, slick heels and salute as before. The mirrored vistas of the aisles and acres of artfully lighted modernism at its most elegant are still there unmarred, intact, but the atmosphere of magnificent fantasy seems to vanish at the threshold of the Van Schmus office. The only show he puts on is on the stage where he can sell it.

This show business is, it would appear, just another business.

It was that point of view that brought Mr. Van Schmus to his desk at the Music Hall. Back there in the days when Rockefeller Center and the Music Hall were in the fury of creation, this quiet, white haired and pleasantly spoken person was seen about a deal, known more as "Mr. Rockefeller's Man" than by name. Mr. Van Schmus just went about observing, and there was magnificently extensive observing to be done.

Even before the Music Hall was opened it would seem that Mr. Rockefeller, or his office at least, had become aware that everything had been done about the frame and nothing much about the picture it was to present. It also appears that it was foreseen that just possibly not one but several of the miracle workers of showland who had been importantly OK'd to Mr. Rockefeller were going to prove embarrassingly short of miracles. It is unnecessary to repeat the unhappy details. A number of supermen stalked in and melted out. When it was all over Mr. Rockefeller had his big Radio set back, only slightly used, and very little else worth mentioning except some positively spectacular operating figures.

Mr. Van Schmus-the-Observer, it was to be gathered, knew more about what had been going on than anyone else, and it appeared appropriate to set him in to see if something might not be done. He was made vice-president and comptroller of the Radio City theatres and a director of the Music Hall. The RKO corporation affiliations dissolved and the Rockefeller Center amusement houses, the Music Hall and the Center became entirely Rockefeller with an all-Van Schmus administration.

A sober, dignified business man in his middle years found himself in charge of the world's greatest theatre—suddenly the most conspicuous exhibitor in a nation that has some fourteen thousand of them.

It was another of the Arabian Nights whimsies of movieland.

Mr. Van Schmus was never headed for Broadway. He grew up in Chicago and went to North Central College in Naperville, Illinois, a school which his grandfather had served as a founder and where his father had been graduated before him. His first job was with the Hill Publishing Company, an old Chicago concern, and subsequently he was for years an executive of Schlesinger & Mayer, the concern known today as Chicago's big Carson, Pirie, Scott & Company, department store operators. Thence he went to the big May Company in Cleveland and presently appeared in the post of general manager of the George L. Dyer advertising agency in New York. In the Dyer agency he met Louis Lee, brother of the late Ivy Lee, and through the Lees came to know Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. If all had developed according to design in Rockefeller Center, Mr. Van Schmus probably would still be just observing.

At his new desk, Mr. Van Schmus observed almost immediately that the problem, as in the department store, appeared to require a line of goods that might interest the public and steps toward telling the public where and when.

There was a production and operating machine and organization there. He made arrangements to let it go to work. He declined to cast himself as an impressario and now after a year and a half has so far shown no tendency toward leading the orchestra.

With something less, decidedly less, than first choice of the world's best pictures, the Music Hall in the 53 weeks ending January 19 is credited with having collected admissions totaling about $3,988,000. Despite the fact that the cost figures are not ranged alongside, it would appear that business is being done.

The Music Hall staff numbers some six hundred persons, in fifteen departments. The department heads lunch with Mr. Van Schmus every Friday. Pictures are previewed by varying cross sectional audiences selected from the big staff. The preview reactions count. The creative departments are headed by Leon Leonidoff, director of stage productions, Russell Markert, associate producer, and Erno Rapee, director of music. Music Hall publicity is under the attentions of Hazel Flynn, who was long screen editor for the Chicago American.

Mr. Van Schmus, chary as he is of utterance, remarks that "both Hollywood and New York might well wake up and serve the better taste of the American public." "I do not mean the Park Avenue public," he adds. "The Sweeneys have better taste than they are credited with—and it's the Sweeneys that make our bread and butter."

"And, we never try to kid the public—or ourselves."

Ritchey Wins Distribution Suit Against Philip Lewis

Justice William T. Collins of the New York supreme court has permanently restrained Philip S. Lewis, head of American Trading Association, from distributing the film "Ships of Hate," as the result of an action brought by the Ritchey Export Corporation, foreign distributor of Monogram product. Ritchey, the court decided, has exclusive distribution right to the film outside the United States and possessions, and Canada, American Trading being ordered to turn over to Ritchey all prints and advertising material on the picture.

Ready for Launching of Television, Says Aylesworth

"We are ready to launch television in this country," M. H. Aylesworth, president of National Broadcasting Company and chairman of RKO said in Hollywood this week. "It will, however, be enormously expensive." Mr. Aylesworth left for New York with Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation.

$200,000 Expected Gross Of "Copperfield" in 4 Weeks

"David Copperfield," MGM picture, is being held a fifth week at the Capitol in New York, with an expected gross of approximately $205,000 for four weeks. The picture took in $18,000 during the last weekend, with an approximate $45,000 or more for the fourth week. The gross for the first three weeks was $160,120. It is considered possible that the picture will be held a sixth week.

Educators Evolve A Film Study Plan

The extension of critical appreciation of the motion picture through a clearing house of educational associations was embodied in a plan adopted last week at a meeting in New York of the committee on motion pictures of the department of secondary education of the National Education Association.

The plan is considered the first step in the nationwide development of film appreciation in schools, as inaugurated by the National Council of Teachers of English. The National Education Association will further consider the matter at its Atlantic City convention February 25.

William Lewin, chairman of the committee, said: "We are opposed to censorship of the movies. We are in favor of enlightenment and the development of independent critical taste. You can't legislate good taste."

The committee announced a 10-point program, which would develop new units of classroom instruction, formulate children's standards of judgment of films, evolve methods for teaching motion picture standards, cooperate with public libraries, cooperate with theatres and community committees to eliminate double billing and develop family programs, oppose censorship legislation, publish lists of films worthy of discussion, cooperate in the preparation of visual aids for classroom use, encourage experiment, and list worthwhile pictures.

Government to Speed Suit For Dissolution of ASCAP

The Department of Justice in Washington this week indicated through official sources that it will make every effort to speed prosecution of the monopoly suit filed in New York federal court against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was in Washington last week making inquiries regarding the government's plans with respect to the suit and it was understood that, in a report given to Mr. Kuykendall, the Department of Justice corroborated the indication that it is speeding the action.

Mr. Kuykendall sought information on the subject from the office of Attorney General Homer S. Cummings in order to be able to advise his organization's national convention at New Orleans late this month.

H. G. Ponting, Cameraman Of Scott Expedition, Dies

Herbert George Ponting, noted explorer and camera chief on Scott's last expedition to the Antarctic in 1910-13, died last week in London at the age of 64. His film, "At the South Pole," was presented in New York at the Lyric theatre in February, 1929. An adventurous life included early years in California and foreign newspaper correspondence, which carried him all over the world many times. He wrote considerably, mostly of his travels. In 1926 he sold his Scott expedition film to British interests at a price, it was reported, a great deal smaller than the $250,000 said to have been offered by an American museum.

BIG DISTRIBUTORS CONSIDER DOING 16 MM. FILMS; INDEPENDENTS ACTIVE

Allied, Master Arts, Monogram, Mascot, Others Contract with Walter O. Gutlohn to Reduce Past Season's 35 mm. Films

75 Features and 250 Short Subjects Now in Company's Library; Declared to Be Not in Competition with Theatres

Several of the large producer-distributors are quietly considering the advisability of taking from their shelves outstanding features of past seasons, now out of general distribution, and reducing them from their present standard 35 millimetre size to 16 mm. for exhibition in the so called nontheatrical field. Already many of the more important independent distributors are doing this, with such companies as Monogram, Mascot, Allied, Master Arts and others contracting with Walter O. Gutlohn, Inc., large distributors of 16 mm. pictures for the nontheatrical field, for reduction of their past season product to 16 mm.

Under the present plans of the larger companies the eventual sources of exhibition are held to be completely outside of established channels of theatrical exhibition, and in no way would offer competition to regular theatrical accounts. That is also the fact in the case of those independents who currently are selling 16 mm. rights to the Gutlohn company. The majors, on the other hand, face the possibility of strongly organized exhibitor opposition to such a move, especially from affiliated theatre men, and because of this they are proceeding with extreme caution. The larger companies interested in the 16 mm. field will not discuss their plans publicly at this time.

The independents now appear to have taken the lead in that field. Gutlohn, Inc., has been handling some of the above accounts for two years and more, and last August signed a contract with Monogram for the 16 mm. rights to all its feature product. The product so reduced and distributed is, as in the case of the majors' projected plans, usually at least two years old. Gutlohn, which has been in active business for a little more than a year, in addition to one year during which time it handled Master Arts' product, has had the 16 mm. rights to Allied Pictures product for two months. Showmen's Pictures one year, and Progressive Pictures product for about a year. Mascot has just sold 16mm. rights to its pictures to Gutlohn.

75 Features on Hand

Included in the Gutlohn library at all times are an average of 75 feature pictures and 250 short subjects, including educational, instructional and regular theatrical subjects.

"For the next year at least the major distributors will not enter the 16 mm. field," said Walter O. Gutlohn on Tuesday. "When they do, furthermore, they undoubtedly will organize their own systems of distribution."

Mr. Gutlohn explained that, contrary to reports, his company is in no way connected with any other company aside from its contractual arrangements. All stock in Gutholn, Inc., is held by himself, Mrs. Gutholn and Harry A. Kapit, the company's sales manager.

SCHOOLS' OPPORTUNITY, SAYS MRS. LOORAM

"Our Bureau has been so delighted with the great increase in motion picture classics such as 'Little Women,' 'Anne of Green Gables,' 'Great Expectations,' 'The Little Minister,' 'David Copperfield,' 'Treasure Island,' 'What Every Woman Knows,' and others, that we cannot help but hope the major producing companies will soon have these films available in 16 mm.," Mrs. James F. Looram, chairman of the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, is quoted by Walter O. Gutlohn.

"It will then give an opportunity to such concerns as Mr. Walter O. Gutlohn's, of 35 West 45th St., New York, to present the splendid classics in school rooms and school auditoriums so that teachers and students may see them, and study them. The above named pictures are the type which we should like to have made permanently available, and we feel that if they are reduced to 16 mm. size they will be accessible for school use."

The company does not sell direct to prospective accounts, dealing only with libraries. With respect to the theatrical companies from whom it requires 35 mm. films for reduction, it buys the 16mm. rights on a royalty basis for from 4 to 10 years.

Contract Booking

Gutlohn, Inc., was the first company in the 16 mm. field to introduce contract booking for nontheatrical accounts, according to Mr. Kapit, and many of the institutions with which the company's distributors do business book an average of 30 programs a year.

"Of course," said Mr. Kapit, "where there are church bookings this contract figure is considerably higher, inasmuch as most of these situations run regular programs with several changes weekly."

Gutlohn, Inc., is doing business with libraries and nontheatrical distributors in about 40 states and in several foreign countries, including Great Britain, Canada, Cuba, several South American and Central American countries, Mexico, Japan and Australia.

"The average producer fears the reaction of the exhibitor to 16 mm. shows," said Mr. Kapit. "This is, unfortunately, because they do not know the situation as it really is. We are not in competition with anyone. In most cases the pictures we handle are from two to three years old and the people who see them do not go to nontheatrical exhibitions primarily to look at the product. Their interest centers chiefly around the circumstances and situation in which 16 mm. shows are held, usually in a church for a benefit of some sort, in a school or auditorium to which the public is not admitted, but never in a situation which can be called competitive to an established theatre.

"Building Future Audiences"

"As far as children are concerned, we actually are building up future audiences for theatres in making them picture minded."

"In respect to the question of admission charges," Mr. Kapit continued, "this is not competitive because the pictures are not commercially sold and we have an agreement to that effect in every contract we make with 35 mm. distributors."

Development of nontheatrical motion picture exhibition for entertainment purposes has been prevented to date by the lack of suitable films, which must come, at least from the outset, from the producers of standard-sized product for theatres, either in 35 mm. prints or in 16 mm. reductions. Because of lower costs, and greater facility, the nontheatrical field is best served by reduction to 16 mm., and today the very term "nontheatrical" has come to signify the use of 16 mm. product and equipment.

In the Gutlohn library are included such features as "The Sphinx," "Police Call," "The 13th Guest," "The Phantom Broadcast," "The Return of Casey Jones," "Black Beauty," "Oliver Twist," and others. In addition, there is a representative list of westerns. Short subjects include classic and semi-classic music series, musical novelties, comedies, adventure subjects, travelogues and others, in addition to educational and instructional features and shorts.

Sound Recording Improved

During the past year and one-half equipment manufacturers have improved 16 mm. sound recording on film with a proportionally narrower band and a corresponding improvement in reproduction equipment. The present 16 mm. projector is capable of projecting an image large enough for a hall seating several hundred persons, with illumination equal to that of the average theatre image.

From a standpoint of technics, it has been demonstrated that 16 mm. projection can be used in commercial theatres up to about 300 seating capacity, the image under these circumstances being about 9 x 12½ feet. This suggests the possible development of a minor class of 16 mm. theatres in hamlets now unable to support a theatre, in the event that product is made available.

Suitable product also would represent something of aid and comfort to the non-

Sirovich Promises "Sensational Disclosures"; New Block Booking Measure to be Offered

The House interstate commerce committee in Washington last week approved the Rayburn resolution authorizing a $750,000 investigation of American Telephone & Telegraph Company and all subsidiary companies, including Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc., by the federal communications commission.

The Senate on Tuesday approved a companion proposal, the Wheeler resolution.

Hearings on his resolution for investigation of patent pools in industry are to begin Monday before the patents committee, of which he is chairman, Representative William Sirovich of New York said. The aviation industry will be taken up first, he said, and this will be followed by investigation of the film and radio industries, with, he promised, "sensational disclosures."

New Block Booking Action

A new block booking bill is to be offered soon by Congressman Charles Kramer of Los Angeles. Mr. Kramer explained that as soon as the Dickstein committee completes its present investigations he will give the matter further consideration. There will be no effort to regulate the entire industry under the terms of his bill, he said.

In the 39 state legislatures which convened in January, 111 measures directly affecting the motion picture industry already have been introduced. Five more legislatures will convene before the end of February. Before the 44 sessions close early next summer 250 measures are expected.

When the California legislature resumes its deliberations March 4, among the 3,448 bills introduced in both the Assembly and the Senate there will be a record number of at least 177 concerning the film industry, according to Hulda McGinn, manager of the California Theatre Association. Among the 177 proposed bills, 131 are Assembly measures and 46 Senate; at least 98 on taxation.

Labor Protests Tax Program

The California State Federation of Labor protested against Governor Merriam's program to raise $154,000,000 in new taxes to finance state government. The Federation urged labor councils and local unions to help defeat the plan. Edward Vandeleur, Federation president, specifically objected to the proposed increase in the sales tax, the new tax on electric, gas, water, telephone and telegraph service and the new tax on amusements and tobacco.

In the Colorado legislature a 2 per cent sales tax law was passed but theatres will not come under the law with respect to admission prices.

Connecticut's perennial censorship bill, providing for a state board of film censors, again was introduced in the General Assembly at Hartford. Similar measures have been defeated at each biennial session for a number of years. Other bills under consideration concern adding the amusement business to those paying the unincorporated business tax; allowing motion picture shows after 2 p. m. on Sundays; establishing a 5 per cent tax on the gross income of amusement businesses, and providing sentence of one to five years for throwing gas or stench bombs.

In St. Petersburg, Fla., Senator James F. Sikes announced he will back a bill in the state legislature to put a tax on motion picture admissions in an attempt to force down prices. Senator Sikes contended there is not free competition in Florida because the majority of the theatres are owned by the same interests.

Problems dealing with legislation affecting the trucking industry, particularly film deliveries, will be discussed by the National Film Carriers, Inc., in New Orleans February 25-29. The meeting is being held in conjunction with the annual MPTOA convention.

Would Outlaw Bank Nights

In Missouri a bill introduced in the legislature by Representative Frank F. Catron outlaws the socalled bank nights, cash nights and all other forms of gift enterprises.

Governor Earle of Pennsylvania proposed a 10 per cent assessment tax to raise $6,000,000 in two years.

A consumer's tax bill, embracing a tax of about 10 per cent on theatre receipts, was introduced in the Kansas legislature. With the close of bill introduction, the amusement group was a consistent target. One bill proposes a 2 per cent sales tax including theatre admissions, another calls for two men in a projection booth, and a third calls for a graduated circuit theatre operating tax.

Closely following the California record, 120 measures already have been filed in the New York legislature.

A bill to increase censorship fees from $1 to $3 a reel was introduced this week in Ohio by Representative William J. Zoul. The Senate passed a bill making it unlawful for distributors to require exhibitors under contract to play any film on a specific day.

Independent theatres in Portland, Ore., want their license fees cut and have appointed a committee to negotiate with the Portland City Council.

bicycling "Jack Rabbit" operator, who travels from town to town putting on shows in available halls and stores with old films purchased outright. More product would be available to him.

These distributors and producers also believe that the entire question of competition from nontheatrical exhibition of former theatrical product might prove to have been exaggerated if the films were made available under a regular system of distribution control. Pictures so released would be old, having completed their theatrical life a substantial period of time before being made available for nontheatrical programs. In addition, it is held, the regular picture patron could hardly be interested in such product for its own sake, and it is to be expected that he would still have to look to the established theatre for his screen entertainment.

There has been little to indicate, they maintain, that the private exhibition of professional product in the home will ever assume importance as a competitor with the theatre for a number of reasons, but chiefly because of the cost.

The professional 16 mm. picture would be in demand almost exclusively for occasional programs in schools, churches, lodges, summer camps and similar situations, Mr. Gutlohn said. These institutions now have their programs and parties, he pointed out, which commonly are resorted to for the purpose of raising funds, but while an old picture assuredly might prove more attractive to those compelled to attend such functions than no entertainment at all, it scarcely could be regarded as a means for satisfying the motion picture interests of persons who patronize theatres. As for summer camps, he said, juveniles and, in some instance, adults attending them are usually denied any kind of screen entertainment, since camp directors dislike as a rule to let their charges go very far to a town in the evening.

"Recoup" Losses on Weak Films

From the point of view of the producer of professional product, release some time after his films' theatrical life for nontheatrical exhibition offers an opportunity to increase the revenues of good pictures and to "recoup," at least partially, the losses suffered on the weak ones.

Exhibitors, among them the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, since the code drafting sessions in New York in the summer and autumn of 1933, have been campaigning for a definite restriction of the non-theatrical activities of distributors. Further, they are dissatisfied with the present NRA code clause governing this situation. On the face of it this clause appears inconsistent and exhibitor organizations throughout the country are continuing their efforts to obtain a clause which has "teeth" in it. Artcle 5, Section 8, Part 4 (a) of the code, dealing with non-theatricals, reads as follows:

"It shall be an unfair practice for any distributor to license the exhibition of its motion pictures for exhibition by any non-theatrical account contrary to any determination, restriction, or limitation by a local grievance board where such exhibition shall be determined by such grievance board provided for in this code to be unfair to an established motion picture theatre."

Part 4 (b), however, apparently contradicts the above. It says:

"Nothing in this part shall be interpreted to prohibit the licensing of motion pictures for exhibition at army posts, or camps, or on board ships of the United States Navy, or ships engaged in carrying passengers to foreign or domestic ports, or at educational or religious institutions, or at institutions housing 'shut-ins,' such as prisons, hospitals, orphanages, etc." (Italics are ours.—Ed.)

In any event, when an established exhibitor has a complaint about unfair non-theatrical competition, he must file his complaint with the grievance board which attempts to determine the case on its individual merit.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING RAISES TIME RATE; AFFECTS 97 STATIONS

Charges Increased as Much as 25 Per Cent in Some Cases; Chain Now Largest; 20 Million Radio Homes in U. S.

Columbia Broadcasting System this week announced a general upward revision of program time rates throughout its network, a move giving definite indication of the system's improved position in commercial broadcasts in proportion to the number of its sustaining programs. National Broadcasting three weeks ago announced rate revisions, but upward revisions in the NBC situation were not so marked as with CBS. Ninety-seven stations in 95 cities are affected in the Columbia move, and the revisions show an increase in total cost of 3.1 per cent.

The increase in time rates in individual CBS stations, however, represents in many instances a stepping up of charges as much as 25 per cent. In some situations there has been no change; in others rates have been slightly lowered.

It was also revealed that certain changes have been made in the network system of CBS, making the chain the largest in radio, strengthened still further at strategic points, with Omaha and Lincoln brought into the coverage area of the basic group, and with KSO, Des Moines, joining the network in March to intensify the system's basic network coverage in Iowa.

"On the complete Columbia network of 97 stations in 95 cities, the new rates show an increase in total cost of 3.1 per cent—a deferred advance covering only part of the increased station and operation costs which we have withheld entirely from our rates during recent years," said H. K. Boice, vice-president of CBS in charge of sales.

20,000,000 Radio Homes

"This advance is more than offset by the steady growth in number of radio homes—the current total in this country being 20,000,000—which continues to make each contract for radio time an equity worth more to the advertiser with each succeeding month. This fact is evident on the chart which the new rate card contains, showing complete network coverage for 1935 at a cost of 51 cents per 1,000 radio homes, compared with 69 cents per 1,000 radio homes as recently as 1930."

Mr. Boice pointed out three important features in the new CBS rate structure which reflect, in the opinion of the network's executives, constructive advancement in radio broadcasting operations. These include a weekly discount schedule based on the amount of time and the number of stations used each week; an additional discount for 52 weeks of consecutive broadcasting; a re-distribution of rates among stations to bring the separate price of each time into line with its relative coverage as an individual unit of the Columbia network.

"The first of these," he explained, "enables the advertiser to increase his discount rate even by adding minimum-priced stations to his network. It gives equal weight to all stations, regardless of price. It also gives equal weight to day-time and to night-time periods.

Premium for Consistent Advertising

"The second factor, an additional 10 per cent discount for 52 weeks of consecutive broadcasting, offers a premium for consistent advertising. It should make it possible for many advertisers, who have previously not broadcast throughout the year, to protect their time, hold their audiences, and maintain their advertising momentum by doing so."

"The third new point—the re-proportioning of individual station rates—reduces the cost of many supplementary stations," Mr. Boice explained. "Broadly, it brings the cost of these stations into logarithmic proportion to the number of radio homes in their coverage areas. It is based primarily upon that most sensitive and accurate of coverage measurements—the listening area method, which determines the actual, not theoretical, scope of influence of each station."

NBC Explains New Rates

When National Broadcasting Company filed its new rate card with the federal communications commission three weeks ago, the company found it would first be necessary to revise the card so that the explanatory clauses bearing upon the application of the new rates and discounts be more specific. Copies of the revised rate card with the explanatory clauses included were mailed to the trade last week.

The explanatory clauses set forth that commitments made prior to the effective date of the card will be completed at the rates called for by such commitments, but advertisers may elect to substitute new contracts effective at any time after February 4, at rates on the new card for the unexpired portion of their commitments for the effective date of such new contracts. In the absence of such election, rates in effect immediately preceding the effective date of the card will apply to extensions of the commitments for any period or periods up to and including Feb. 3, 1936, for all or part of the same facilities continuously used, and additions to such facilities will be made only at the prior rates. Rates on the new card are applicable to all new broadcast series offered on and after the effective date of the card.

RELIEF FROM UNFAIR PRACTICES GRANTED IN 75% OF CODE CASES

Exhibitors Have Three Chances to One of Getting Help Through Local Grievance Boards; 1,020 Cases Tried

Motion picture theatre owners have three chances to one of getting relief through Local Grievance Boards from unfair trade practices indulged in by their competitors in violation of the National Recovery Administration's code of fair competition for the industry.

Out of 1,020 cases tried by the 32 Grievance Boards as industrial courts under the code, 771 cases, or 76 per cent, brought relief to exhibitors. In 237 complaints, or 24 per cent of the total, relief was denied.

The exhibitors and distributors who lost, exercised their right to appeal to the Code Authority as the code's "Supreme Court of Appeals", in some 205 cases, representing 20 per cent of all cases disposed of by the Grievance Boards. In 85 per cent of the appeals, representing 175 cases, the Authority affirmed the Board's original decision, reversing the decisions in 30 cases, or 15 per cent of those appealed.

Fifty-two per cent of the complaints, some 530 cases, involved the complicated rebate clause of the code, which is intended to prohibit two-for-one-admissions, lotteries, gifts, prizes, throwaways and other such devices. These are the most widely used practices in exhibition for bolstering box office receipts in which the principles of unfair competition are involved as set down by the code.

12 Per Cent on Overbuying

Twelve per cent, or 122 of the complaints, involved overbuying, where one exhibitor purposely buys more product than he reasonably can use with the intent and effect of depriving a competitor of such overbought product. In 43 per cent of the overbuying cases, totaling 52, relief was granted by the Grievance Boards, and in 40 per cent of those which failed to bring relief the complaining exhibitors appealed to the Code Authority, which sustained the Grievance Board in 70 per cent of the appealed cases and reversed it in the remaining actions, granting relief where relief was denied.

Nontheatrical Cases 4 Per Cent

Complaints against premature advertising constituted 19 per cent of the claims filed before the Grievance Boards and totaled some 200. Under this clause no exhibitor licensed to exhibit a motion picture subsequent to its exhibition by another exhibitor who has the prior exhibition right shall advertise such specific picture by any means of advertising prior to or during its exhibition by the owner who has the prior right. If this clause proves a hardship on a subsequent run the rigidity of its provisions may be lightened.

Exhibitor complaints against unfair nontheatrical competition totaled 4 per cent, or approximately 40 of the total 1,020 cases heard, and in each instance the Grievance Board ordered exchanges to discontinue servicing the nontheatrical account. Interference-with-lease cases represented 2 per cent, or 20 cases; fraudulent transfers of assets constituted 1½ per cent and the 10 per cent elimination clause was the cause of 1 per cent of the complaints, filed by exhibitors against distributors.

These conclusions were made Wednesday in New York by Louis Nizer, motion picture attorney and counsel and secretary to the New York Film Board of Trade. Mr. Nizer is about to publish a book entitled, "New Courts of Industry: Self-Regulation under the Motion Picture Code."

The 32 Clearance and Zoning Boards, which pass only upon the grievances of clearance and zoning, disposed of 289 cases. In 172 instances relief was granted. This represents 59 per cent of the complaints filed. In 117 cases, or 41 per cent of the cases tried, the complaints were dismissed. Appeals were taken from Clearance and Zoning Boards to the Code Authority in 78, or 27 per cent of the cases. Some 82 per cent of the appeals were affirmed and 18 per cent were reversed.

GARNER TO PRESENT QUIGLEY AWARDS

Managers Bill Henricks, of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., and Morris Rosenthal, of the Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., are to receive the 1934 Quigley Grand Awards in Washington from the Vice-President of the United States, John Nance Garner, on Friday of this week.

A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has invited other government officials and legislators to attend the presentation ceremonies. It is expected that executives from the Warner and Loew Theatres organizations will be on hand, as will representatives of Warner Brothers Pictures, United Artists, and others. Arrangements also are being made by Capital showmen to further honor the Award winners.

Mr. Hendricks and Mr. Rosenthal finished one-two in the voting of the judges for the 1934 Grand Awards, all winners of the monthly plaques being eligible. Hendricks scored on Warner Brothers' "Six Day Bike Rider" and Rosenthal on United Artists' "The Mighty Barnum."

J. E. Ross Dies

J. E. Ross, Jr., 22, one of the youngest exhibitors in South Carolina, died after a brief illness, of pneumonia, recently at his home in St. George, S. C., where he operated the Strand theatre.

Price War Hits Pittsburgh Area

A general price war is in progress throughout the Pittsburgh territory. In little more than ten days what started as a price reduction in an individual theatre, the Penn, has spread until it now threatens to affect every house in the sector.

Two weeks ago the Penn theatre announced it would adopt immediately a regular stage show policy and cut its top from 60 to 40 cents. This week the Stanley and the Alvin joined the movement by reducing their scales, the Stanley, with pictures and stage shows, reducing from 60 to 40 cents. The Alvin has not cut its 40-cent top but it has inaugurated an opening price of 15 cents until 12:30. In the past, there has been a 25-cent admission from opening to 6 P.M.

With the Alvin revision, the Harris interests have cut their scale in East Liberty at the Family. This marks the first slash in the East Liberty sector and presages a full-fledged war in that district. At the Family, 10 cents has been cut, making a 15-cent balcony and 25-cent downstairs scale in the afternoon and 25 cents for all seats at night.

The Fulton reduced its prices at the same time as the Penn, leaving only the Warner among the five downtown first runs with its old scale intact. That is 25 cents from opening until 6 P.M., and 40 cents thereafter for double features.

In Philadelphia this week, the Roxy Mastbaum reduced its top price from 75 to 65 cents in a drive to bolster attendance.

Warner Loses Point In Ohio Rental Suit

Warner lost an initial step in Sandusky, Ohio, common pleas court recently when the court ruled on the validity of service against them in the $369,315 suit of Seitz Theatre Company against General Theatre Company, for rentals claimed due the Seitz Company on the lease of the State, once under Warner control.

The plaintiff contended that Warner is the parent organization, while Warner denied it was a proper party to the case. Motion of General Theatre, lessees, to make its petition definite was also overruled.

Frank O'Heron Quits RKO Production Post

Frank O'Heron, recently appointed an associate producer at the RKO studio, resigned this week because of ill health. He plans a long rest.

Mr. O'Heron entered the motion picture industry in 1925 as accountant for FBO. Before becoming an associate producer and vice-president of RKO Studios, he was a vice-president of RKO Radio Pictures and the RKO Distributing Corporation.

COOPERATIVE CAMPAIGN IS STARTED BY ALLIED

Directors Reelect Samuelson, Myers, Blum at Washington; Discuss Code Renunciation

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors is effecting a plan throughout the country to group members under citywide cooperative newspaper advertising arrangements in order to obtain large savings and to present the Allied cause to the public.

Sidney Samuelson of New Jersey was reelected president of Allied at a three-day session of the board of directors at Washington. Abram F. Myers was reelected board chairman and general counsel, and Herman A. Blum secretary and treasurer. At the first session Wednesday the board considered plans for a distinctive seal to be used in all theatres, and proceeded with plans for the annual convention in Atlanta in May.

At later sessions was expected the renunciation by Allied affiliates of the reports of impartial members of the field code boards, and code discussions. A "public relations" campaign is being planned to cultivate goodwill for Allied members and independent theatres generally. The Legion of Decency was to be discussed. Allied planned to suggest a thorough investigation of the new copyright bill and determine the attitude of broadcasters.

New Regional Vice-Presidents

The board was to vote on new regional vice-presidents and a new budget, including outside increases of the association's income. "Is the sentiment of reports from Allied leaders for united action in renouncing the code and refusing to pay further assessments?" was a question under consideration, as were the attitude of President Roosevelt toward the code, that of the National Industrial Recovery Board and Senator King's resolution on block booking, as well as the possibility of reintroducing the Brookhart bill. A final subject was the seat tax of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and it was expected that Allied's stand will be determined by the present status of the government's suit against the ASCAP.

Theatre space advertising in newspapers is usually so expensive when used sufficiently consistently for lasting effects that the smaller houses individually cannot afford to match their larger circuit competitors' expenditures. By having the local Allied association take a certain amount of space each day and apportioning this among the members on a pro-rata basis the smaller houses can advertise their programs in the big daily newspapers for a comparatively small outlay.

Secondly, it is frankly stated that the purpose of this cooperative advertising is to show the difference between producer-owned theatres and independent houses. The advertising of pictures will be supplemented by bulletins to interested groups—such as the Legion of Decency and women's organizations — explaining the trade practices under which motion pictures are sold, released and distributed. "The need for this," Abram F. Myers, chairman, explained this week, "has been made acute by the recent campaign in which the producers represented to the Bishops that the exhibitors had freedom of selection and that the blame rested entirely with them (the exhibitors) if they exhibited objectionable pictures."

It is recognized by Allied's national board that the theatres joining in this movement must have some identifying symbol, and so the directors set to work this week, through a committee headed by H. M. Richey, of Detroit, to design a seal, which will be the property of Allied and which every member theatre will be asked to display in its box office and in its advertising.

The plan already has been put to work in Baltimore, Chicago, Detroit and Washington and several hundred Allied exhibitors are participating, using in the cooperative newspaper advertisements the keynote caption: "At Your Naborhood Theatre."

The Independent Theatres Protective Association in Milwaukee started the other day to use a similar plan, inserting in the Milwaukee Journal a column of current attractions, under the heading: "Independent Theatres," for some 29 houses. Similar columns will appear eventually in other Milwaukee newspapers.

The motion picture is riding to greater popularity on Kansas City's streetcars and buses, in a unique citywide cooperative advertising campaign being financed by the Kansas City Public Service Company in the interests of better business for its transportion media and for theatres. It is a "movie star contest," with $1,050 in awards.

Transit Company "Theatre Minded"

The company, which operates the transit system in Greater Kansas City, for many years has been "theatre minded."

For 19 months the company has been issuing a weekly ticket, good for unlimited trips on street cars and buses during the week for which it is issued. While the plan has proved satisfactory, company officials decided to add a popularity contest, with the result that for six months the thousands of transit patrons, whether they compete or not, will be constantly made aware of an exploitation campaign designed to make them "motion picture conscious" as well.

Pictures in "Public Service News"

The mainstay of the campaign is the "Public Service News," a four-lage leaflet distributed twice a month on all lines. In addition, dash cards and inside cards carry the message. Great interest in the competition is reported by A. H. Wood, manager of the company's commercial department, who, with Powell C. Groner, its president, evolved the contest.

In announcing the contest, the company's publication told its thousands of patrons: "Everyone attends the movies. Try the street car or bus way the next time you go and use the weekly ticket."

Zukor to Speed Production Setup

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, left New York for Hollywood on Saturday to help set in motion the company's reorganized production management under Henry Herzbrun, the new general manager of the studio, and Ernst Lubitsch, managing director of production. Accompanying Mr. Zukor were George J. Schaefer, general manager of Paramount, and Russell Holman, eastern story editor. Mr. Zukor said Mr. Herzbrun and Mr. Lubitsch would remain permanently in their new positions.

On Friday Mr. Lubitsch held individual meetings with all of the company's writers and directors in a move to establish goodwill and understanding as to future operating policy. He emphasized in particular that he at no time would hamper individuality. Chandler Sprague, former Fox producer, was named executive assistant to Mr. Lubitsch. William Wright, supervisor, has resigned.

In New York, the company's general reorganization proceedings continued. An opinion which may result in reducing by two-thirds claims against Paramount for triple damages aggregating $10,000,000 as a result of alleged anti-trust law violations was submitted to federal court on Thursday by Special Master John E. Joyce.

Mr. Joyce's opinion held that triple damages cannot be asked of a bankrupt, but that if actual damages can be proved, the claimants are entitled to a claim for the amount provable. The remedy for triple damages is a common law action, not an action in bankruptcy, Mr. Joyce held. The opinion was written in answer to a motion by the Paramount trustees to expunge the claims of A. B. Momand of Oklahoma and E. M. Loew of Boston, which are based on alleged anti-trust law violations and sought triple damages aggregating $10,000,000.

Mr. Joyce last week approved a proposal by the Paramount trustees for expediting the reorganization of Olympia Theatres, New England subsidiary, under which Paramount is authorized to purchase for $50,000 outstanding Olympia stock and allow a claim for breach of agreement filed against Paramount by the Olympia stockholders' committee.

An order authorizing the Paramount trustees to institute ancillary action or make application to the California courts to examine Sam Katz, Ralph A. Kohn, Jesse L. Lasky, Herman Wobber and Fred Metzler under Sections 7 and 21 of the bankruptcy act, and to take depositions from them, was signed last week in New York by Federal Judge Coxe. Four of those named are former directors of Paramount and Metzler formerly was auditor and accountant.

Quigley to Publish Richardson's Book

The Quigley Publishing Co. has acquired publishing rights to F. H. Richardson's widely-known "Handbook of Projection" and is now preparing a new edition to be ready for distribution in March.

The coming edition is a totally new work in every detail. With the collaboration of Aaron Nadell, sound engineer, who prepared the section on sound reproduction, Richardson has brought his work up to date, including in it a full exposition of the latest types of projection and sound equipment and accessories as well as the theories, practices and methods now current. The book will contain more than 150 illustrations, among which are wiring diagrams and schematics never before privileged for publication.

Richardson is an international authority on projection and a regular contributor to Motion Picture Herald and Better Theatres.

Managers and projectionists rate his "Handbook" as a standard piece of equipment for every theatre.

Gambee, Eastman and Edison Technician, Dies

Joseph B. D. Gambee, inventor and former technician with Thomas A. Edison, Inc., at West Orange, N. J., and Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., died at East Orange late last week following a heart attack. He was 61.

While a young man with the Eastman company Mr. Gambee perfected a shutter which was in use on cameras for many years. He joined the Edison company as a technician in the phonograph department 36 years ago, and retired six years ago. He is survived by his widow and a brother.

Jeffrey Bernerd of GB Sails After Visit Here

Jeffrey Bernerd, managing director of GB Productions, left last weekend for London after a visit of three weeks to the company's offices in New York and several key cities. Arthur Lee, in charge of American distribution, returned last week from a southern trip and plans another tour of exchanges late this month. J. L. Schlaifer has gone to the Coast on sales deals. Mark Ostrer, company head, has delayed his departure from London, and is not expected to visit New York for some time.

Radio Stations Warned On Use of Film Records

The radio code authority has warned all broadcasting stations that the use of Paramount and Columbia transcription programs will be considered a violation of code provisions relating to rate cutting and free time. The Paramount program is called "Paramount Pictures' Electrical Transcriptions," and Columbia's "Hollywood News Flashes."

THE RACE IS ON FOR CZECHO PLAY DATES

Three-Year Barrier Lifted; Four Languages Complicate Titling; "Cavalcade" First to Show

By H. RYK

Prague Correspondent

The race is on. Branches of Fox, Paramount, MGM, United Artists and Universal were all set to go when the three-year barrier was lifted Friday. By agreement the distribution of American productions in Czechoslovakia is placed on a registration fee basis, supplanting the compulsory quota system. The Czecho government also will allow a subsidy to a company producing pictures in Czechoslovakia, with allowance on registration fees for pictures imported by the producing company.

Eagerly Awaited by Government

This moment has been eagerly awaited by the public and the press here, not to mention the government itself, whose big aim was to protect home production and to that end had fixed a quota of five domestic pictures to one imported, at a kontingent value of $840, that is, a requirement that for each film to be imported Czecho Kronen 20,000 ($840) must be paid into a film fund for development of the national production. It was at that requirement that American distributors had balked, precipitating three years of aloofness of American companies, a situation now cleared by the agreement of early January, effective Friday. At no time had the government been inimical to American product.

All American offices in Prague are working at full speed, making productions ready, titling, dubbing and reorganizing. By the end of February the first-run theatres of Czechoslovakia will be ready to show the biggest money-makers of the American studios. It is a race for booking dates, a problem complicated by the fact that many theatre owners have set their programs far ahead.

There is no doubt here but that the opening of the market to American product will be a severe blow to the German companies, most formidable of competition here. Representatives of the German industry have been in Prague for a month conferring with leaders. Tobis has opened a branch office with the idea of production here as well as the selling of pictures. Speed has been the thought of everyone, and not the least Tobis.

Four Languages

Nevertheless, American pictures of high standard should do a good business in Czechoslovakia. However, the language problem promises to give American distributors much to think about. After those three years of stalemate in which the English language was off the screen completely, the native filmgoers will need time to become accustomed to it again, to say nothing of the new crop of patrons.

From the standpoint of superimposed titles there is a problem possibly even more puzzling. It's not a matter of two languages, but of four: Czecho, Slovakian, German, Hungarian. For importation of foreign product the law stipulates that pictures must have superimposed titles. In the German section of the country, two superimposed titles are required, German and Czecho; otherwise it would be practically impossible to sell the production, as in a large part of Czechoslovakia the German language dominates.

In view of these complications it is believed in circles here that, while in general screen hits in America will be hits in Czechoslovakia, the grosses will not be as high as might have been expected.

By the end of this month the first picture from the American studio since the interregnum will be presented to a Czechoslovakian audience. The picture is Fox's "Cavalcade." Paramount, MGM, Universal and United Artists will not be far behind, however.

The market is open, the track is fairly fast and the skies are clear again.

Pearl S. Brown Dies; Wife of Colvin Brown

Pearl Sayler Brown, wife of Colvin Brown, vice-president and general manager of Quigley Publications, died at their New York apartment, 1060 Park avenue, Tuesday morning, after an illness of several months.

Mrs. Brown was born in McHenry, Ill., the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Sayler, who moved to Elgin, Ill. She came to New York in 1912, marrying Mr. Brown there in 1923. They lived in New York and at their country home, Mulberry Ledge, Stamford, Conn. Mrs. Brown is survived by her mother, Mrs. D. E. Sayler, of Elgin, and four sisters. Funeral services were held Wednesday at 11 a.m. in New York at the Stephen Merritt Chapel, with burial Thursday in Elgin.

Court Orders Rothafel Action Shall Go to Trial

Justice James T. Hallinan in New York state supreme court in Brooklyn this week denied a motion for summary judgment for $4,700 against Samuel L. (Roxy) Rothafel. The suit was brought by Joseph A. Schaines, attorney, who alleges that amount is due him for services in the suit to restrain the Roxy Theatre Corporation from using the name "Roxy." The court ordered the case should proceed to trial. Sam Spring, counsel for Mr. Rothafel, contends RKO should be liable for Mr. Schaines' fee.

Form Independent Company

L. L. Hiller, once production partner of Jake Wilk, Jack Hayes, former producer of comedies for Educational, and Sam Wiesenthal, once assistant to Carl Laemmle, Jr., have formed the Independent Producing and Distributing Corporation, which plans a series of eight Nick Carter features for the state rights market.

Decentralization Not Contemplated By Warner Now

Actual decentralization of Warner theatre operations is not contemplated at this time, Joseph M. Bernhard, general manager of Warner Theatres, told the company's quarterly meeting of zone managers in New York on Tuesday. The company will keep its entire circuit and theatre personnel intact and although district managers will be granted wider operating authority in the future, Mr. Bernhard said final operations authority will remain in the home office.

Several additional theatre acquisitions may be made, it was revealed at the meeting, this possibility being cited by Mr. Bernhard as being "directly contrary to any thought of divesting itself of property."

Mr. Bernhard's statement is construed as coming in direct reply to reports, current for some time, that Warner attorneys and circuit executives were studying means by which a number of the company's theatre units which have been operated on an unprofitable basis for extended periods might be eliminated.

Zone managers will, in future, be given direct charge of operating their units, Mr. Bernhard explained, and this will include authority to purchase all supplies and equipment, and individual zone auditing systems will be inaugurated.

Bill in Missouri Hits Bank Nights

A drastic measure which would outlaw bank nights, cash nights and all other forms of gift enterprise at theatres, has been introduced into the Missouri legislature by Representative Frank F. Catron. It is said that such a law as the bill embodies would reduce by 90 per cent the number of complaints filed with the Kansas City grievance board. Violation would be punishable by heavy fine. Representative Will L. Lindhorst seeks a constitutional amendment to remove the anti-lottery prohibition.

The Kansas City Better Business Bureau is of the opinion the Catron bill is unnecessary, since the state's attorney general has ruled bank nights and similar drawings are lotteries. The grievance board has continued to rule against users of the device.

A suit for $700 has been filed against the Tampa theatre, Tampa, Fla., by Mrs. Hazel Greene Felix, $650 asked for a bank night prize and $50 for damages in a refusal of the theatre to turn over the money. Mrs. Felix claimed she was outside the house in an overflow crowd when her name was drawn and was denied the prize.

Osland and La Hue, operating the State, Central City, Neb., have been ordered to discontinue bank nights. C. J. Riggs, manager of the Sun, was the complainant. The Des Moines grievance board has ordered discontinuation of film service to the Strand and Casino at Marshalltown, Ia., for refusal to comply with an order to cease bank nights.

To the Editor of the Herald:

"Your editorial on news reel rights in the Motion Picture Herald of February 9th is by far the best thing that has been written on the subject. We are fortunate in having some one in this business with the courage and the intelligence to state our case.

Operators' Scale Reaches Impasse

The long awaited settlement of the New York projectionists' wage scale came to an impasse last week after the proposal of Harry Brandt, president of the New York Independent Theatre Owners' Association, for a basic operators' scale for the territory had been rejected at a public hearing in Washington and two additional plans submitted. Exhibitors and operators returned to New York to study the new scales, submitted by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, and Local 306 of the IATSE.

The O'Reilly plan is based on a point system with classification of runs a primary factor in determining booth costs. The Local 306 plan, also based on a point system, eliminates runs as a determining factor and lists seating and admission prices only.

Theatrical crafts are being organized into state associations to deal with legislation and other matters, according to Felix D. Snow, international representative of IATSE.

Other union activity included a meeting of all theatre heads in St. Louis to discuss the rumored formation of an ushers' union in that city.

Government Brief Charges Huffman Exhibition Monopoly

The United States Department of Justice on Tuesday in Denver, filed a brief in the circuit court of appeals charging that Harry Huffman's company is seeking a monopoly of exhibition in Denver, thus violating the Sherman anti-trust law. Mr. Huffman was given 10 days in which to file an answer. The government action was taken as part of the film stoppage injunction suit which had been carried to the circuit court of appeals by Mr. Huffman.

L. H. Francis Returns

L. H. Francis, special representative of Heywood-Wakefield Company, theatre seat manufacturers, returned to New York this week from a two-months business tour on the West Coast.

IATSE Takes Over Affairs of Chicago Operators

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees this week took over complete control of the Chicago Motion Picture Operators' Union, following the resignation of Ralph O'Hara and Tom Reynolds. Harland Holmden, third vice-president of the IATSE, was placed in charge. The action of George Browne, IATSE president, came unexpectedly, on the heels of the death of Tom Maloy, head of the Chicago local, who was killed by racketeers last week.

Mr. Browne announced a complete reorganization of the union along conservative lines, promising a new deal for local operators and a full investigation of union records and the activities of the late Mr. Maloy. Mr. Browne and Mr. Holmden will run the union's affairs until the next election, the date of which has not yet been set.

Court Enjoins Theatre In Cleveland Dual Suit

Judge Dempsey in Cleveland last week granted a temporary injunction to the Fountain theatre, restraining the Grand Central theatre from playing double features. The Fountain owner contended that Max Kaplan, lessee of the Grand Central, had signed the local agreement prohibiting double bills, and therefore could not play duals.

Mr. Kaplan claimed he relinquished the theatre and turned it back to the landlord, who then executed a lease for the theatre with Mrs. Max Kaplan. Since Mrs. Kaplan had not signed the agreement, her husband contends, she is not obliged to abide by its terms.

Skourases in New York For Fox Contract Conference

With the arrival in New York over the weekend of Spyros and Charles Skouras and Charles Buckley, after court hearings in Los Angeles on the sale of Fox West Coast to National Theatres Corporation for $15,443,888, negotiations were scheduled to be resumed at an early date between the Skourases and Chase National Bank officials on their 10-year joint operating contract with National Theatres.

That Fox Theatres, creditor of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, may establish its right to participation in the Fox Metropolitan reorganization was indicated Monday when Federal Judge Julian Mack extended the filing date of the reorganization plan to March 15.

Drama Critics Guests At Motion Picture Club

The Motion Picture Club in New York held its second weekly forum on Wednesday, with leading dramatic critics appearing as guests and discussing current amusement problems. Harry Hershfield, well known humorist, was principal speaker. John W. Alicoate, publisher of Film Daily, was chairman, and Louis Nizer, film attorney, introduced the speakers.

Academy Approves Players' Contract

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences last week approved the new standard players' contract, which had just been ratified by the actors' and producers' branches, and announced it will go into effect March 1. Frank Lloyd, Academy head, said that producers had consented to a revision which includes terms more favorable to actors than those contained in the present contracts. The new agrement covers all free lance players receiving between $15 per day and $40,000 a picture.

Twelve producers have signed the new contract, which cannot be amended before March 1, 1937, and which is in effect for the next five years, including RKO Radio, Warners, MGM, Paramount, Universal, Fox, Educational, Columbia, 20th Century, Roach, First National and Harold Lloyd. The agreement may be signed by all other companies which may wish to do so. The new contract requires a continuous call bureau with the record open to anyone who desires to use it. It also outlaws the one-picture deal.

Approval of the new contract by the Academy in no way will affect the stand of the Actors' Screen Guild, which will continue its fight for code recognition and will insist upon what it calls a more equitable method of arbitrating disputes. Under the terms of the new pact, the Academy acts as arbitrator if the actor desires it. If he objects, there is no other form of arbitration provided.

Shortly after the Academy's board had approved the new players' contract, Major James O. Donovan dispatched to Washington the producers' brief answering writers' demands for a code of fair practice. Although he refused to divulge its contents, the document, prepared by Edwin Loeb, is believed to contend that writers' demands have no place in the code as there exists already adequate machinery in Hollywood to handle disputes.

A memorandum was filed this week in Washington with the National Industrial Recovery Board by the American Federation of Actors urging revision of the vaudeville code, which is a part of the motion picture code. The memorandum says that the code has been of no value to the individual vaudevillian, that it has not been enforced, that maximum hours have not been established and that minimum wages should be raised because of the rise in the cost of living.

Amendments sought would require houses with 1,500 seats or more and admissions of 50 cents and up to pay at least $10 per day to principals and at least $50 net weekly to specialty artists; theatres with less than 1,500 seats below 40 cents top admission would pay $7.50 net per day to principals and $40 net per week to specialty artists.

MPTOA CONSIDERS NEW CODE POLICY

TOCC and Independents Continue Merger Discussion; Directors of Allied States Convene

Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America this week are formulating plans for the drafting of a new NRA code policy for adoption at the annual convention which gets under way in New Orleans February 25. Because industry generally believes the new NRA legislation now being drafted in Washington will permit wide revisions, it is expected the MPTOA will ask immediate reopening of the code.

Among major revisions which the MPTOA is on record as favoring are an increase in cancellations, restrictions on double featuring, and elimination of score charges. In addition, it is reported, a definite proposal for amending the Code Authority organization, providing for hearing of appeals by Authority members who are in the same industry class as the litigants, may be offered at the convention.

Plan Music Tax Fight

The MPTOA also will decide upon a plan for counteracting the music tax increases effected last autumn by the American Society of Composers Authors and Publishers. To this end, a committee will hold sessions the first three days of the convention and submit recommendations the final day. This committee will be headed by Lewen Pizor.

In New York this week, renewal of discussions of a merger of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the Independent Theatre Owners was expected. Preliminary discussions were begun several weeks ago by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC, and Harry Brant, head of the ITOA, with the object of establishing the merged local organization as the nucleus of a new national exhibitor organization.

In Kansas City the first step in what promises to be a vigorous fight to correct trade practices detrimental to independents was initiated this week when the Independent Theatre Owners named a committee to consider lines of action.

Three Courses Considered

Preliminary discussions indicated three courses may be taken. Chief of those under consideration is a complaint to the Government on antitrust charges, relating to protection agreements between distributors and Fox Midwest. It is indicated also that the committee will attempt to get together with the distributors on a proposal to eliminate restrictions on double featuring and may go to the local clearance and zoning board with a complaint against clearance extended over houses charging 20 cents or less.

The independents charge the existing clearance arrangement is illegal because it has been adopted in the nature of a schedule by the distributors without the benefit of approval under the code. The situation, according to exhibitors, is that while a schedule legally does not exist, at the same time it is being enforced as a result of contractual commitments obtained by Fox Midwest.

Philippine House Passes Quota Bill

The House of Representatives of the Philippine Islands has passed a bill calling for a motion picture quota, requiring that all theatres show at least six domestically produced films each year. The measure has gone to the Senate but it is anticipated that Governor General Murphy will veto it in the event the Senate passes it. The Cinema Guide, Manila motion picture magazine, is energetically pressing for passage of the legislation, which was sponsored by Representative Prospero Sanidad.

It is pointed out that quota attempts have met with but small success in the Far East. Neither the British nor the domestic Indian producers have achieved the quota legislation they have sought for a long period in India. Japan has none and contemplates no quota legislation.

In China the quota has failed despite strong efforts, but producer interests have succedeed in imposing heavy censorship fees on foreign films while Chinese firms are examined without charge. Chinese producers have suggested that the present high fees be doubled, the surplus revenue to be used for the subsidization of Chinese production. Despite the efforts of Hong Kong newspapers the quota has not been successful in that British colony, where, it is said, British pictures are not strikingly successful. Certain Chinese interests are urging the prohibition of anti-war motion pictures in the country, basing their demand on the necessity of fostering and maintaining the spirit of war in the people for the very existence of the race. No quota legislation is contemplated in the Dutch East Indies.

Two Midwest Circuits In Merger of 16 Houses

Commonwealth Theatres, Inc., Kansas City, has merged with Central States Theatre Company of Hoisington, Kan., combining operation of 16 houses in 11 towns in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa. A new circuit, Commonwealth Amusement Corporation, has been formed to succeed the two units. L. M. Miller is president, C. A. Schultz, vice-president, and O. K. Mason, secretary-treasurer. The acquisition of theatres from time to time is planned in an expansion program.

'NON-FLAM' FILM FIGHT CENTERED ON POLITICS

Attack on Soviet Pictures Ricochets Against Films of Educational Hue; Schools Object

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Opposition to the announced intention of the Home Office to seek new regulations controlling non-inflammable films is steadily hardening. The official policy is to place "non-flam" on the same basis, as regards safety rules, as commercial film. The practical result would be to limit such exhibition to premises licensed for exhibition, with exceptions in favor of schools and other special institutions. Another result would be that non-entertainment "non-flam" films would be subject to censorship if publicly displayed.

The situation is very complicated. It would be simpler if the Government avowed the real reason for its desire to regulate "non-flam" exhibitions, which is entirely political. The new regulations will make impossible the exhibition of Soviet and other "subversive" films, which at present escape censorship because "non-flam" is outside the Cinematograph Act. Unfortunately, regulations aimed at these films must apply to all non-inflammable films, and educational institutions and others are up in arms.

A further complication is that "free" shows of advertising films, mitigated by a few entertainment subjects, have been offering a very trying form of competition to exhibitors. The trade is therefore in favor of the new regulations.

The authorities have tried to control "non-flam" by proving that it is not "uninflammable" in the meaning of the Act, but a prosecution of a miners' hall in South Shields on the ground was recently unsuccessful. An appeal is pending.

Would Free Cheap Seats of Tax

With realization that if relief from Entertainment Tax is not granted in this year's budget it may easily be postponed sine die, the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association is rallying all its forces for a campaign.

Last week the CEA circulated its official statement of policy, which can be summarized in its own words as "directed to securing that the tax is upon the same basis as it was prior to the emergency budget of 1931, with emphasis on the abolition of the tax up to and including 6d."

The cost to the Exchequer of freeing "sixpennies" and cheaper seats would amount to $11,000,000 a year.

The case for the removal of the tax on these seats is very strong. The sixpenny seat, representing at ordinary exchange rates a charge of 12 cents, corresponds roughly to the 10 cent seat in America.

There is also the point that, with an average tax of 16⅔ per cent of the admission, the percentage is heaviest on the cheapest seats. In the case of the threepennies it amounts to 33⅓ per cent, while the fourpennies carry 25 per cent.

The CEA's case is further strengthened by the fact that, in his last budget statement, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that he regarded the victims of Entertainment Tax as "at the head of the queue" for relief this year. There is undoubtedly a better chance of a reduction of tax than at any time since it was increased.

Embodied in the CEA policy is a pledge that any remission of tax will be passed on to the patron.

Public Votes on Sunday Shows

Another trade problem in which taxation is an important factor has been to the fore. Official figures were published showing that during 1934 10 polls were held under the Sunday Entertainments Act to decide for or against Sunday Opening. In five districts the result was favorable and in five adverse.

The local votes are now taking place in areas where the trend of opinion is hostile; the big victories were won when the Act was new. The interesting part about these figures is that they represent the application of the referendum principle; the man in the street himself says whether or not he wants Sunday films.

Having won the right to open by this direct appeal to public opinion, the free-born British exhibitor then is officially blackmailed. He is asked to hand over a percentage of his profits to "charity," and he is not allowed to select the charity.

This anomaly, which would be incredible in any other country, is at last stimulating exhibitors to revolt. Brighton exhibitors have been informed that their annual charitable contribution has been set at the figure of $5,250. The joke about this is that they had Sunday Opening in Brighton 20 years before the Act was passed, under a local permit reflecting local opinion, and paid no tax at all for the privilege. In London, exhibitors are "fined" $500,000 a year.

"Registering"—and Riling

Complaints of victimization are already being heard as the result of the recent decision of the Kinematograph Renters Association to classify a large number of exhibitors as entitled to limited terms of credit. The pith of the plan was that it was to be operated by the KRS. If an exhibitor fell behind with his payments, he was to find his film supply cut off by all distributors.

Like a lot of other theories, it doesn't seem to be working too well. The rigid application of castiron rules by unimaginative officials is a pretty poor substitute for the personal relation of buyer and seller. There are complaints that exhibitors' film supplies are being held up because of quite minor items, that legitimate reasons for increased credit are disregarded and that the threat of a suspended supply is being used as the cover for quite a lot of rough stuff. The guess at the moment is that the KRS will modify its policy, rapping some knuckles in passing.

Future of Two Circuits

Rumor has been very free of late regarding the future of two theatre circuits with which Gaumont-British is closely associated. One of these, General Theatres Corporation, has been under investigation by a committee of investment trusts and insurance companies, appointed as a result of a revolt of preference shareholders at the annual meeting.

The other, United Picture Theatres, has been in the hands of a receiver for some time. Wardour Street rumor has been that a large interest in both companies and probably at least part control, would pass to John Maxwell of Associated British Pictures.

So far as United is concerned, this expectation already has been negated. A meeting of debenture holders last week accepted by a 96 per cent vote an offer by Gaumont-British whereby G-B will continue management of the undertaking. The settlement includes a reduction of debenture interest from 7 to 3½ per cent, with an additional 1½ per cent as profits increase. G-B guarantees this interest for 10 years.

As regards General Theatres Corporation, it is officially announced that a plan of reconstruction prepared by the directors, representing the G-B interest, has been accepted by the investigating committee.

Asquith to Direct "Elizabeth"

Anthony Asquith, who was to have directed the now abandoned London Films production, "Twenty-Five Years of King George V's Reign," has received an even more important assignment from Alexander Korda, for whom he will make "Elizabeth of England." Flora Robson will be Good Queen Bess. Mr. Korda has entrusted the story to Phillip Lindsay, technical adviser on "Henry VIII," in association with Professor George Harrison of London University.

Paramount "Super" in London

Paramount is the likely tenant of a supertheatre superplanned for one of the most imposing sites in West Central London—that occupied by the famous Shoolbred store in Tottenham Court Road, which recently came into the hands of the Prudential Assurance Company. The financial figure behind the deal is Arthur Segal, associated with Paramount in the Astoria circuit in London and the big Paramount theatres in Liverpool and in provincial towns.

By J. K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

German motion pictures produced in the 1934-35 season will total 177 films, which will be supplemented with 54 foreign-made, so that the total offer for the current season will be 231 features. Ufa heads the list of German film producers with 25 German and 3 foreign-made films, followed by the Deutsche Lichtspielsyndikat with 20 German and three foreign, and the Bayerische Filmgesellschaft with 16 German and 7 foreign features. Approximately one hundred pictures of German origin have been shown in the second half of 1934 and the balance of 70 or more films will be shown in the first half of 1935.

A number of forthcoming productions have met with considerable interest, such as Rota's "Hundred Days," based on a play by Mussolini and Forzano. Werner Krauss, Gustav Gründgens and Peter Voss are starred in this film, which is directed by Franz Wenzler in its German version. Other outstanding films are: "Barcarole," made by Ufa, "Gipsy Baron," and "Punks Returns from America." Trenker is producing "Shining Country" and Willy Forst, recently signed by Universal, will direct "Mazurka," starring Pola Negri. Dr. Arnold Fanck, known for his numerous Alpine films, is preparing a new production.

In the twelve months of 1934 the censoring authorities admitted 196 features, 122 of them German, 37 from America and 37 from other European countries. There were 213 admitted in the preceding year, 121 German-made, 65 American and 27 European.

German production therefore has maintained the same level, while release of American feature films has fallen off considerably, owing to an increased number of banned pictures. The decrease in American product has been equalized by a greater number of films from European sources, especially Great Britain, which brought many pictures into Germany.

Ufa Heads Distribution with 22

The 122 German features were produced by 47 companies, compared with 59 companies for the 121 pictures in 1933. Concentration of production into fewer concerns was, therefore, a characteristic of the year. Ufa made 15 films, Terra 10, Bavaria 7, Gustav Althoff 5. Three companies had four pictures each, ten produced three each, thirteen made two films and seventeen produced only one film each.

So far as distribution is concerned, Ufa heads this list also, with 22 features in 1934. N.D.L.S. distributed 16, Europa 15, Bayerische Filmgesellschaft 12, Terra 11, Universal-Rota 9, Fox 7, Aco 5, Metropol 4. Paramount and MGM are not in this compilation, having released American product only.

The German pictures were produced by 65 directors. Carl Boese made 8 features, Georg Jacoby 6. Seven directors produced four films each, five directed 3 each, 17 made two films each and 34 made one German film only.

There were 867 actors and actresses featured in 1915 roles.

So far as exhibition is concerned the total number of German cinemas is given at 4,922 on Dec. 31, 1934, with a total seating capacity of 1,908,658.

There were 4,044 cinemas seating less than 500; 642 seating between 500 and 900; 236 with more than 900 seats.

From the standpoint of number of performances the seats reached the following totals:

| | Under 500 seats | 500 to 900 seats | Above 900 seats | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Daily performance | 1,342 | 569 | 312 | 2,142 |
| Twice a week | 1,310 | 46 | 2 | 1,358 |
| Sunday only | 1,009 | 2 | ... | 1,011 |

The 4,044 cinemas of less than 500 seats had a total seating capacity of 1,133,814 and the 642 cinemas of from 500 to 900 seats totaled 558,197 seating capacity and the 236 above 900 represented 286,930 places.

The decree passed Sept. 4, 1934, prohibiting for six months the erection and opening of new cinemas, has been extended over a full year and expires on March 31, 1936.

For American film companies a new regulation for import licenses is of vital importance. Passed January 22, 1934 it runs as follows:

The price of reichsmarks 20,000 ($8,000) per import license, fixed Oct. 22, 1934, will be reduced from the same date by 50 per cent to reichsmarks 10,000. A foreign-made film, imported on the socalled external license and to be shown in its original version with or without superimposed titles, is subject to this stipulation. If this film, however, is post-synchronized the fee for importation is reduced to correspond with the amount of money spent for the synchronization. In the case of an expenditure of 20,000 reichsmarks, the price for the import license will be at least reichsmarks 9,000. For every five thousand marks more spent in post-synchronization the import license will be reduced by reichsmarks 1,000, so that with an expense of reichsmarks 25,000, the fee will amount to Rm. 8,000, for Rm. 30,000 spent in post-synchronization 7,000 reichsmarks, and so on. Transfer of the import license takes place after the presentation of the bills and the payment of the respective price, according to the sliding scale just mentioned.

The post-synchronization must take place in Germany with German artists. American companies often have imported features in their original version, and afterwards produced a post-synchronized version. In this case (when the original and the post-synchronized version are to be shown in Germany) the price of reichsmarks 10,000 must be paid for both versions together.

This new regulation is effective immediately and it concerns the thirty external licenses which will be handed to the exporters of German films and which are transferable once (at a price of reichsmarks 10,000 for originals and a sliding price for dubbed pictures). Moreover the Ministry disposes of 15 import licenses more, which can be released on application, making a total of 45 import licenses. The German distributors get a total of 60 (internal) licenses which are non-transferable and must be consumed by the distributing companies themselves. These import licenses are free. Fox, making German pictures, is not affected by the new rule.

Paramount and Metro, however, are subject to the new provision.

Lower Grosses Causing Cut In Production Cost: Schenck

Producers are learning to economize as a result of smaller national grosses, this week declared Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, en route to Hollywood. "The picture that would bring $3,000,000 in America several years ago," he said, "today grosses $1,000,000 and if it is really an exceptional picture it may do $1,800,000 top."

Warner Pictures' 13 Week Net Operating Profit $16,248

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and subsidiaries this week reported for the 13 weeks ended Nov. 24, 1934, net operating profit of $16,248 after deducting all charges, including interest, amortization and depreciation, but before deduction of federal income taxes. This compares with net operating profit of $124,252 after similar charges for the corresponding period of the previous year. Net profit from operations for the quarter before amortization, depreciation and federal income taxes was $1,583,889. Current liabilities totaled $11,909,605.

Curtis, vice-president, on distribution in England through Associated.

Two new second run houses are planned for St. Louis, one to be erected by the Avalon Theatre Corporation, the other calling for the remodeling of the old North Grand theatre, by the Best Amusement Company.

Karl Hoblitzelle and Will Horwitz plan the erection of a new 1,000-seat theatre in Houston, Texas, work to start February 15. To be called the Main Street, the house is expected to cost $50,000. Three other suburban houses for the city are planned by Hoblitzelle and Horwitz.

U. S. Seeks Support For Copyright Bill

The State Department in Washington indicated Wednesday it will begin next week a series of conferences with representatives of the film, radio, publishing and other industries affected by copyright legislation in an effort to gain support for a federal bill designed to amend the United States copyright law to conform to the international treaty as a prelude to seeking approval of the Senate to our entry into the International Copyright Union.

WAY PAVED TO END CLEARANCE ISSUES

Controversial Points Settled in Los Angeles; Authority's January Expense $23,475

Final settlement of several controversial points in the Los Angeles clearance and zoning schedule, chiefly centering around geographical areas, and adoption of the schedule by the Code Authority last week has paved the way for disposal of the clearance problem in other key territories. The Los Angeles schedule supersedes all previous clearance on contracts now in force.

The Code Authority was to have taken action on the proposed schedule for the New Haven sector last Thursday, but discussion was put over until late this week. With prices as the basic factor in the coast setup, and a provision protecting distributors from possible print shortages where theatres with similar admissions get like availabilities, the New Haven and other schedules are expected to be adopted in quick succession.

Five Kansas City exhibitors have asked the Code Authority not to vote on that schedule in the hope that an amicable arrangement will be worked out with Elmer C. Rhoden of Fox Midwest. When the Kansas City plan does come up, it is understood the Code Authority will hold decision in abeyance until the Fox Midwest matter is settled. Milwaukee and Detroit schedules will be discussed after Kansas City.

The local grievance board at Zanesville, Ohio, last week in the case of Castro Theatre Corporation, an M. A. Shea enterprise, ruled that Castro must give up 24 features to Zanesville Theatre Corporation, in what is described by P. J. Wood, secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, as one of the most important rulings ever rendered by a local board. The board found that Castro had bought 159 features and played only 129 during the 1933-34 season and already had contracted for 172 features for 1934-35, but that only 35 of these had been played up to January 24. On the basis of only 129 films played last season, the board felt the respondent should be allowed to increase this number by 15 per cent, giving him 148 pictures, and Castro was ordered to make up two lists of 24 features each comprising films which remain unplayed prior to March 1, and the complainant is to select one of these lists.

The Code Authority, after three hearings on the Warner-Fox West Coast clearance dispute involving two Los Angeles theatres, decided that the houses are non-competitive and in different zones. The Authority's ruling sustains the Los Angeles clearance and zoning board, but reverses a decision by an appeals committee which had reversed the opinion of the coast body. The complaint had its inception last autumn when Warner started to buy protection over the FWC Uptown, Charles Skouras objecting on the ground that the Forum was in competition and had been for many years. Both houses charge 35 cents. Considerable importance is attached to the Code Authority's ruling, inasmuch as it establishes a precedent by declaring non-competitive two theatres not more than one mile apart with a drawing population of 25,000, and operation features of both theatres practically identical.

John C. Flinn, executive secretary of the Code Authority, left New York for Hollywood last week. He plans to call a meeting of the local clearance and zoning board to explain various phases of the schedule which was approved last week. He will be gone about 10 days.

The approach of the deadline for payment of 1934 code assessments, Friday, February 16, was brought up at the Code Authority meeting and members delinquent after that date were warned they cannot file complaint with local boards.

January Expenses $23,475

Total January expenses of the Code Authority amounted to $23,475, it was announced this week. Of this amount, expenditures of the Authority headquarters in New York were $9,342; Hollywood office, $3,054, and local boards, $11,078. Receipts from exhibitors during January amounted to $14,419, and from producers and distributors, $11,350. A cash balance as of February 1 was noted as $37,129.

Photo, Cine, Radio Exhibit To Be Held in Bombay, India

The Motion Picture Society of India, with headquarters in Bombay, will hold a Photo-Cine-Radio exhibition, at the Town Hall, in Bombay, from February 16 to February 23, with present plans calling for an extension of the time by one week, if it appears warranted. Ram L. Gogtay, of the Society, is secretary of the exhibition.

Lectures, demonstrations and excursions are included in the exhibition program, relative to each of the three phases of the exhibit. As part of the program, the first Indian motion picture convention is to be held, with producers, distributors and exhibitors to take part. Each section of the exhibit is to be divided into three main divisions: historical, basic materials and present day conditions, with special reference to practical application.

HOLD 'EM, YALE

Paramount

As the title suggests, this is a football story. A Damon Runyon story, however, rampant with the oddly named characters of his yarns, it departs radically from formula. Essentially a farce romantic comedy, it deals with a Yale football player who hated football and consequently was not much of a success as a gridiron star. When, via gangster threats, romantic complications develop and his true love is given a going over that the society miss' father much appreciates, the stage is set for a football situation wherein mobster menace, invading the Yale bench, succeeds in making the football player a devastating combination of all the super-"All Americans."

Adaptation is by Eddie Welch and Paul G. Smith, who was a collaborator on "One Hour Late." Direction is by Sidney Lanfield, who directed Arlis in "The Last Gentleman."

Patricia Ellis is the heroine and Larry (Buster) Crabbe the hero. Runyon's mobster characters are portrayed by Cesar Romero as Gigolo Georgie; William Frawley as Sunshine Joe, Andy Devine as Liverlips, Warren Hymer as Sam, the Gonoph, and George Stone as Bennie South Street. George Barbier is Miss Ellis' harassed father. Others appearing are Hale Hamilton, Gary Owen, Ethel Griffies and Leonard Carey.

Comedy being the principal essential, that quality, plus the prestige that has accrued to the more successful Runyon productions, appears to be the outstanding selling asset. Football being merely incidental to the main theme and action, and the furore of that sport season having passed, there should be no temptation to ballyhoo the attraction as a fall sport feature.

THE BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN

Universal

This being a sequel to the original "Frankenstein," it appears to be a natural for similar showmanship treatment. As was the first production, this is suggested by a story by Mary Wolistonecraft Shelley. It also is being directed by the man responsible for the first "Frankenstein," James Whale. Karloff again is the monster; Colin Clive is Henry Frankenstein.

As the poets Byron and Shelley discuss the story, this production picks up where the other stopped. As they talk, the story fades to the wind-mill burning finale and the monster is discovered to be alive. Frankenstein is visited by the sinister Dr. Pretorius, from whom he first learned the rudiments of artificial life creation, who demands that he join him in further experiments—this time the effort being to create a feminine mate for the monster.

From this point on the story majors in eerie thrill, terror and horror, counterparting in practically every phase the character of the original story, but with much that is vastly new.

In addition to the names mentioned, Valerie Hobson succeeds Mae Clarke in the role of Elizabeth, Frankenstein's sweetheart. Ernest Thesiger portrays Doctor Pretorius. Others are Elsa Lancaster, currently in "David Copperfield," and Una O'Connor, also appearing in the same picture; E. E. Clive, playing the part of the burgomaster, now is being seen in "The Mystery of Edwin Drood." Douglas Walton is Shelley and Gavin Gordon is Byron. Others are Dwight Frye, Neil Fitzgerald, Lucien Prival, Harry Northrup, Grace Cunard (the one-time serial heroine), Joseph North and Helen Gibson.

THE CASINO MURDER CASE

MGM

Through the S. S. Van Dine murder cases, William Powell and Warren William have been seen in the role of Philo Vance. In this story, which lately appeared serially in Cosmopolitan Magazine, Paul Lukas essays the role. In "The Casino Murder Case," Vance finds himself face to face with the most amazing and baffling puzzle of his experience. The crux of the action, with all its related drama, romance, mystery, comedy and thrill, is the amazing murder of a noted man about town as he stands at a roulette table in an exclusive casino.

The screen play is by Florence Ryerson, who collaborated on "Wicked Woman," and Edgar Allan Woolf, who did the screen plays for "Murder in the Private Car" and "The Night Is Young." Together the pair also prepared the screen play for "Have A Heart." Edwin L. Marin is the director.

Supporting Lukas are well known screen personalities. Ted Healy portrays Sergeant Heath. Others appearing are Rosaline Russell, seen in "Evelyn Prentice" and "Forsaking All Others"; Alison Skipworth, Isabel Jewell, Leslie Fenton, Eric Blore, Louise Fazenda, currently in "The Winning Ticket"; Arthur Byron, William Demarest, Grace Hale, Wallace Clark, Edward Van Sloan, Charles Sellon and Louise Henry.

As a unique showmanship suggestion it is interesting to note that three companies shared the making of the six preceding cases. Paramount produced the "Canary," "Greene" and "Benson" murder cases; Warner made "Kennell" and "Dragon," and MGM previously tried its hand with "The Bishop Murder Case." That these leading companies have considered the subject matter and its famous character as a medium of continued entertainment gives the Van Dine stories a prestige of acknowledged value.

TIMES SQUARE LADY

MGM

The idea of this story, from both an entertainment and exploitation standpoint, is off the beaten path. It is modern and topical in theme and atmosphere. A great sports promotor-night club figure dies. His hockey teams, dog tracks, night clubs, fighters, wrestlers and other enterprises are left to about a dozen shrewd, chiseling mug managers. With plenty of jealousy and trouble on their hands, the situation takes on a surprising twist when they learn that his daughter, a person of whom they never had heard, is coming out of the Midwest to take over her late father's affairs. Expecting a corn-fed, they find a gorgeous, well dressed creature, who knows the answers to all the questions and makes the big city swell dames look like products of a bargain basement.

The original screen play is by Robert T. Shannon and Albert J. Cohen. Direction is by George B. Seitz, who made the current "The Winning Ticket."

There being unusual showmanship leads in the title and subject matter, which features much action in its hockey game, dog track racing, night club and sporting world atmosphere, there is also extraordinary value in cast personalities. The role of the girl is assumed by Virginia Bruce, the Jenny Lind of "The Mighty Barnum." Also introduced as one of the players is Pinkie Tomlin, author and singer of "Object of My Affections." Other personalities are Robert Taylor, whose work in "Society Doctor" is outstanding; Isabel Jewell, Helen Twelvetrees, Nat Pendleton, Jack LaRue Robert Elliott, Raymond Hatton, Henry Kolker, Fred Kohler, Sr., Russell Hopton and Richard Powell.

RECIPE FOR MURDER

Fox

This is the eighth production in which Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen have been co-starred. The present vehicle, authored by Vincent Starrett, appeared as a short story in a recent number of Red Book. It is a comedy drama of two detectives in a race to solve a murder mystery. The screen play is by Arthur Kober and direction is by Eugene Ford, maker of the recent "Mystery Woman."

The cast supporting the leads is made up of well known names. Although there is no rivalry for a girl, each has a sweetheart, the girls being Rosemary Ames, currently in "One More Spring," and Mary Carlisle. The only other feminine character is Madge Bellamy, a famous Fox star of the silent days, now making a screen comeback.

Others are C. Henry Gordon, Henry O'Neill, William Janney, Charles Wilson, John Wray, John Qualen, Herman Bing and Robert Gleckler.

The Little Colonel

Comedy Melodrama

As Shirley Temple again demonstrates her extraordinary versatility, "The Little Colonel" establishes itself as unique entertainment of commercial value. Essentially the show is a comedy melodrama. Pitched to a popular key, it intelligently accentuates the characteristic humanness of the Annie Fellows Johnson story. From the moment Miss Temple makes her appearance, she is the center of interest. The resulting entertainment is amply laden with deep emotional appeal to adults and, at the same time, unusual attraction for the children. As sympathy-stirring heart interest is the motivating quality, there are many times when its pathos provokes tears. There are just as many occasions when smiles and laughs are in order.

Localed principally in the old South, in the Reconstruction Days, the story, adapted from a legendary best-seller, actually opens when the old die-hard rebel Colonel Lloyd shuts the doors of his mansion to his daughter Elizabeth because she had the temerity to marry the Yankee Jack Sherman. A brief bit, in the New West, presents their child Lloyd being made an honorary Colonel in a cavalry regiment. That Sherman may have unhindered opportunity to make his fortune, mother and child return to a cottage adjacent to the Colonel's mansion. Then begins the thrill of the show when the little colonel, partly by outbursts of traditional family temper but mainly by irresistible sweetness, reunites the family.

Alive with drama and comedy, this action is highlighted by the Negro baptismal rites; the two dancing sequences with Walker (Bill Robinson) and the Colonel's frustrating of the second attempt on the part of Swazey and Hull to victimize his son-in-law for the second time. Robinson presents his staircase clog dance, in which he is amazingly accompanied by Miss Temple and in the second incident the pair go through a challenge dance with the little girl capably demonstrating intricate steps. Also Shirley sings "Love's Young Dream."

As a piece of all audience entertainment, with plenty of acknowledged values incorporated in meet the demands of both large and small theatre operation, creation of wide public interest for it should be easy. Besides the names values there are intriguing showmanship tips in the production.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Captain Hurricane

(Radio)

Comedy

Merely a comedy character study of Cape Cod folk and their ways, tinged with bits of melodramatic action, "Captain Hurricane" has just average entertainment values. Dealing primarily with older personalities, although accompanied by a formula youthful romantic story, the picture only vaguely attains the exciting color or atmosphere of which the title is significant.

In the story Zenas, Jeremiah and Ben are three old retired sea captains. Zenas has been in love with Abbie for years. She, however, while returning his affection, presides over his household in a manner more "big sisterly" than anything else. She has little use for Jeremiah and Ben. A storm causes a shipwreck and the old salts rescue Mattie, who becomes a member of Zenas' household. A bad investment in a cranberry bog causes Zenas to lose his savings. To recoup he goes to sea again, during which time develops the romance between Mattie and Jimmy, who isn't held in high esteem by Zenas because he isn't Cape Cod folk. The boat on which Zenas is working runs into a tropical hurricane and the old sailor is again a hero as he rescues the crew. Returning to the Cape, he finds himself the man of the hour; also by some strange miracle Jimmy has worked a deal with the Government to take over Zenas' land at a high profit. After this the way is made easy for Mattie and Jimmy to marry.

For novel showmanship purposes much may be made of the fact that the picture marks the screen debut of James Barton, noted legitimate stage actor. Additionally, the locale and subject mater have not been used to any great extent in recent pictures. The main drive should be directed at the more mature patronage.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by John Robertson. From the novel by Sara Ware Basset. Screen play by Josephine Lovett. Photographed by Lucien Andriot. P. C. A. Certificate No. 590. ## After Office Hours

Romantic Drama

A newspaperman story, plus unique romance and comedy, a hard to crack murder mystery, and all the hysteria of get-the-news-no-matter-how, are the ingredients of which this is concocted. In addition to these entertainment assets, there is with Clark Gable a cast of more than ordinary value.

The picture moves fast. In most cases the dialogue is crisp and the action creates an atmosphere of bustle and to-do. The time is modern, the locale New York. In the story, Jim Branch is the typical screen editor. Scoops are his lifeblood and he knows and makes use of all the contacts with which to provide his readers with the latest. To him, women are just another medium through which the news may be procured. When Sharon Norwood, society girl, comes seeking a newspaper job, he uses her as a means of getting inside news on the carryings-on of the city's bluebloods and aristocrats, a stratum which ordinarily bars its doors to regular reporters. A divorce scandal, brewing among members of the upper crust, is a delectable dish for the editor. But when, through his investigation, it results in a murder mystery, it gives the hustling scribe not only opportunity to exonerate the innocent accused, but also puts the finger on the real killer. While the excitement is on, he also falls in love with his star feminine reporter.

The drama, romance and mystery are counterbalanced by the comedy of Mrs. Norwood; Hank Parr, a resourceful news cameraman, and the Italian restaurant owner with a yen for listening to the police car radio broadcasts.

The picture has much pep, with its more dramatic tensity amply balanced by comedy and romantic interest. Cast names, however, appear to be the most forceful asset.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Car 99

Melodrama

This is a modern cops and robbers yarn, told in a highly theatric manner, entailing lots of action and thrill, against an intriguing background that makes for popular entertainment and showmanship. Essentially it's a graphic illustration of the efficient workings of the Michigan State Police. But as it unfolds upon the screen, illustrating the crook-catching methods of this highly developed "crime doesn't pay" organization, it runs a full scale of romance, drama, comedy, action and thrill. There is entertainment and education in its technical phases, which recent publicity anent the workings of the Department of Justice agents has made familiar; likewise there is much to amuse and interest run-of-the-mill audiences in the accompanying story. It presents many new angles for exploitation.

The comedy-tinged opening gives an insight into the training and instruction of State Police recruits. Then the workings of the department's broadcasting station are graphically illustrated. The picture turns theatric when Officer Martin loses a prisoner, Professor Anthony. Suspended from the force, but urged by his sweetheart Mary not to lose hope of reinstatement, Martin is working in a garage. The Professor's gang, set for a local bank knockover, first make a monkey out of the hick small town sheriff, Arnot, and then raid and destroy the police broadcast station. Michigan, however, gets the Massachusetts police radio to broadcast information to its officers, but the crooks, equipped with a radio, are able to keep just a jump ahead of the hue and cry. Finally, Martin, inspired into the chase by Mary, leaps on a police radio-equipped motorcycle and in technique that is thrillingly reminiscent of wild west cowboy and bad-man theory, succeeds in making a singlehanded capture. He is reinstated and the way paved to marry Mary.

Not a big picture, particularly from a name value standpoint, the show nevertheless is interesting. It affords unusual opportunity for contacts, and tieups with modernized police departments, and because of the complete manner in which it demonstrates the workings of the Michigan unit, it is also a subject that can be linked with other state police units, that should garner plenty of newspaper publicity. Where public interest is keen and persons listen to short wave local or neighborhood police broadcast, there is splendid opportunity for cooperation with police departments.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Ruggles of Red Gap

(Paramount)

Comedy

Smart and clever comedy in action, dialogue and situations for the classes; slapstick buffoonery, similarly applied for the masses—such is this version of "Ruggles Of Red Gap." As previewed, with only easily eradicable exceptions, the picture is one continuous howl. It's that not only because the established comedians, Mary Boland, Charlie Ruggles, Zasu Pitts and Roland Young act up to expected standard, but also because, in a surprisingly effective fashion, Charles Laughton contributes a delightfully restrained, but none the less punchful portrayal of Harry Leon Wilson's lead character.

Essentially wholesome amusement, "Ruggles of Red Gap" is not only an attraction for exhibitors whose boast it is that they play to all-family trade, but it is also a piece of screen merchandise which meets the requirements of those maintaining that their theatres are reserved for those attractions which are big.

Rich humor embellishes each phase of the picture. There's fun in the opening, when the "gentleman's gentleman" learns that as a result of a card game he has been awarded to the rich but wild and wooly Americans, the Frouds. The ensuing situations—the clothes buying tour, the visit to the sidewalk cafe instead of the Louvre, the moments in the Frouds' apartment, are loaded with the same quality. The comedy pace slows up a bit in the early middle, but picks up with a bang, upon the arrival of the Froud melange in Red Gap.

In a smartly contrived fun situation, Ruggles—amazed at all that happens to him in a dignified manner—is announced to the populace as a retired British soldier. His career being hectic for one and all, it has a touch of pathos when the snobbish Mr. Belknap-Jackson, of Boston, fires him. His associations with Mrs. Judson having convinced him that love might also be for him, and his accomplished recital of Lincoln's Gettysburg address consolidating his belief that he is one of all the men who are created equal, he goes into trade as a restaurant proprietor. Though his action blasts Mrs. Froud's plans for a swanky party and chills the plans of the newly arrived Honorable Vane-Bassingwell, an elfish spirit who finds much in common with Froud, it's a triumph for Ruggles as he extracts a popular revenge upon the snooty Mr. Belknap-Jackson.

Full to the hilt with that quality of fun making that interests all who appreciate the value of a good laugh, all that the picture seems to need to develop it as an extraordinary amusement and commercial asset is an advance build-up that reflects the picture's character. In personality, story and production values, there is just about everything that anyone, either a big or little operator, needs with which to sell the show.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Mystery Man

(Monogram)

Comedy-Drama

There is lively entertainment of the ordinary variety in this sometimes melodramatic, sometimes comic and sometimes romantic yarn of the almost too smart newspaper reporter who gets himself tied into a knot with romantic and criminal strings attached. That he unties the knot, only to prepare to tie another finally, goes without saying, but en route there is considerable enertaining activity.

Robert Armstrong and Maxine Doyle constitute just about the full drawing power of the cast listing, the others including familiar but hardly marquee names. A gun, pawned by the reporter in a moment of financial embarrassment, has a figurative repercussion which comes very close to landing the reporter and the young girl he befriends in the jug for murder, and thereby forms an opportunity for the exhibitor to devise a selling maneuver or two to arouse interest in the surrounding events.

It is, in effect, the old newspaper reporter-girl-tough managing editor theme again, but with sufficient difference in a twist or two to take it out of the stereotyped plot classification. The title rather implies somewhat more of real mystery, and attendant atmosphere than is actually found in the story itself, making it perhaps advisable to put the sales concentration on the romantic (for the feminine contingent) and the melodramatic (for the masculine) elements. When Armstrong, star Chicago newspaper reporter, clears up a criminal case, is presented with a police revolver from the authorities and a bonus, he takes the bonus and his friends of the typewriter, and celebrates. The celebration includes telling the hard-boiled managing editor what he thinks of him. So Armstrong finds himself aboard a train and without a job or funds. He lands in St. Louis, accidentally meets and befriends Miss Doyle, penniless and homeless. They go to a hotel, take the best suite on Armstrong's bluff, and Armstrong is refused a job on a local paper, after his former boss has thrown him over by refusing to identify him via telephone.

The Eel, bandit who has been getting away with a good deal, pulls another job, and Armstrong decides his chance has arrived. Out of funds, he pawns the revolver, gets entangled by the eel in a night club holdup and discovers that he is under suspicion of murder for the job because his pawned revolver did the killing. Then the local city editor decides to take a chance, puts Doye on the payroll and talks the district attorney into a 24-hour suspension of arrest after the former boss has done the right thing. A fast few minutes in the pawnshop, during which Miss Doyle saves Armstrong's life when the Eel appears, ends in the expected fashion, and Miss Doyle decides definitely in Armstrong's favor.—Aaronson, New York.

The Dictator

(Gaumont-British)

Historical Drama

(Seen in Paris)

This is the first picture of the new British company of Ludovico Toeplitz, former partner of Alexander Korda at London Film when they produced "The Private Life of Henry VIII."

"The Dictator" is also a historical story, made the same way, quite as sophisticated but surely more serious and more dramatic. It is a very intelligent picture, with clever dialogue and deep study of the characters' mind. There is not much action, and if the picture is a real success on the artistic angle, there is considerable question on the commercial side.

"The Dictator" is a big picture, a prestige picture, entertainingly produced. High ranking personnel of European production have been chosen. Victor Saville, one of the best British directors, who made "Good Companions," "I Was A Spy," "Friday the 13th," "Even Song" and "The Iron Duke," directed it. The cameraman was the Austrian Franz Planer, who photographed "The Unfinished Symphony." The editor was a young German, Conrad von Molo, who had worked with the German director, Friz Lang.

All this technical work is splendid. Direction is very fine, and the photography marvellous. Every one of the frame pictures looks like a painting. Sets are big, some scenes made at the Royal Castle at Copenhagen. Big crowds were employed. The atmosphere of the Danish Court of the 18th Century is perfect.

The cast has been very cleverly chosen. Clive Brook, as the Dictator, has played one of the best roles of his career. It is his first talking picture made in England. Madeleine Carroll as the British born Queen is fine and very pretty. But I think that the real revelation is the 25-year-old British actor, Emlyn Williams, in the part of the King of Denmark. Williams is also a writer, under contract to Gaumont British.

The story is perhaps a little weak. There is not much action and it is more a portraiture of people's minds. It shows the arrival at the Danish court, in 1766, of the young sister of the English King George III, Princess Caroline Mathilde, who is married to King Christian VII of Denmark. This marriage is a failure and on his wedding night the King leaves on a pleasure trip to Hambourg. Dr. Frederick Struensee, court physician, has complete influence over the King and wins the love of the young Queen Caroline Mathilde. He wrests the government from the Dowager Queen

Juliano and brings about reforms. He is made a Count.

His enemies prove to the King that he is the Queen's lover. Struensee is arrested and put into prison. He is prepared to die on condition that Caroline will be saved. He insists she leave England. As the clock strikes the hour of Struensee's execution she leaves Denmark's shores forever.

Outstanding scenes are the party in the "pleasure house" in Hambourg, the arrival of Struensee at the Court, his arrest, and the last time he sees the Queen in his prison. There are some good comedy bits in the dialogue and action.

Unhappily the tempo is slow.

It should be sold as an exceptional picture. The big settings, the good cast with the names of Clive Brook and perhaps Madeleine Carroll, and the title of the picture, which may be paralleled with the present European dictatorships, are selling values.—PIERRE AUTRE, Paris.

Jack Ahoy

(GB Productions)

Comedy

Generally considered one of the ace comedians of the screen in England, Jack Hulbert is amusing, entertaining, yet his work does not appear to be of the caliber which will carry an American audience by storm. This picture, built entirely about him, and wholly for him, gives him an opportunity to sing, dance and generally act the comic. On the whole, however, it is but mildly entertaining comedy, its story largely a nonsense fabrication which would have improved the production if it had more weight.

Against a background of His Majesty's Navy the picture has been filmed, and there appears considerable and amusing justification for the screen foreword note to the effect that, although the British Admiralty assisted in the production, it is in no way responsible. To say that Mr. Hulbert took liberties with the dignity and conduct of His Majesty's Navy is to put it mildly.

Where there may be some exhibition value in selling the Hulbert name, the exhibitor may find it useful, but the rest of the cast is unknown to American audiences.

Jack, gob aboard H. M. S. Stupendous, despite his high admiralty ancestry, accidentally sees the admiral's daughter, attractive Nancy O'Neill, aboard ship, and proceeds to fall completely in love with her. Between his singing and clowning for the crew he pursues the admiral, seeking his permission to further pursue his daughter. The admiral is convinced the gob is entirely insane, an idea fully justified by Jack's actions.

In China it is learned that bandits have stolen a British submarine, and are demanding a ransome for it. The admiral refuses to bargain for the ship. Being fitted for a dress suit in order to attend a ball at which his light of love will be present, Jack learns of the plans of the bandits, but is put to sleep with drugged cigarets, along with his stupid-appearing companion. At the ball, as he pursues alternately admiral and daughter, both are kidnaped by the bandits, and Jack and his pal go in pursuit. In nonsensical fashion they free the prisoners, make their escape to the stolen submarine, although none of them knows how to operate the contraption. They are pursued by he bandits in a motor launch, and when they escape them, are targets for the British ships they meet. Eventually they all are saved, and Jack, an officer's rank assured, successfully may ask for the admiral's daughter, with her permission.

Generally entertaining, although not outstanding, the film is entirely devoid of any possible objectionable factors for any audience. What problem may rest in the English accent is for the exhibitor himself to determine, largely dependent upon his theatre.—AARONSON, New York.

Straight from the Heart

(Universal)

Drama

Not only is the entertainment value of this picture comparatively negligible, but the available showmanship with which to sell it is of the same category. While there may have been some merit to the premise the manner in which it is developed eliminates the essentials which most persons look for in their screen entertainment. By nature a moralistic story, and somewhat of a tear-jerker, it misses fire almost continually in directing sympathy into the proper channels. The plot being complicated and involving several situations difficult to understand in relation to the point it tries to make, the action is not only slow but makes possible easy anticipation of ensuing situations.

In the story, Marian gets a job in an orphan asylum through the influence of politician MacLean. Her work there brings her in contact with Maggie Haines, a foundling, whose work is the highlight of the show and through which the picture attains its most enjoyable moments.

MacLean becomes a mayorality candidate, with the hidden, but none the less avowed, determination to loot the treasury and particularly take it out on the orphans if he gets into office. Naturally the heart of civic righteousness is outraged, and in joining the reformers, Marian double-crosses her benefactor by asserting that he is the father of her particular charge. Follows the inevitable trail of scandal, but in the end MacLean recognizes the errors of his ways and also by some strange quirk the fact that the woman who has caused him so much trouble is the one he loves.

Little, aside from formula title and cast announcements, can be done with the picture. Its promise as an entertainment feature is meagre. —MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

There is amusement in the subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Hollywood Correspondent

COAST LIKES HERZBRUN, LUBITSCH
NEWS AND STILL MORE NEWS
RELIEF FUND AIDS TEN THOUSAND
12 FILMS START, 9 COMPLETED

THE production colony has a high regard for both Henry Herzbrun, new vice-president of Paramount Productions and general manager of the West Coast studio of Paramount, who will head the business and administrative functions, and Ernst Lubitsch, who has taken over the creative leadership.

Mr. Herzbrun, legal chief of the studio for many years and associated with Paramount for more than a decade, is assayed here as conservative, likeable,—a good business man and square.

Mr. Lubitsch, rated as one of the colony's best directors, making two or three pictures a year, is personally popular—hail fellow, with a fine story mind.

Knowing his own inclination toward subtlety and sophistication in pictures, Mr. Lubitsch assembled the directors and told them they could be given a freer rein, that what he didn't know about different kinds of pictures he wanted to learn from them. "This is the first time," he said, "that a studio head has been appointed who knows your problems and is sympathetic to them. I want to learn from you boys what I don't know."

The studio reacted calmly to the new appointments. A mass meeting of the entire force of 4,000 employees was held and assurances were given that "all jobs are safe."

Paramount's studio activity is at the year's peak.

Bankers and Product

Having noted the preponderant number of banking names on the new Paramount board, Hollywood has been wondering just how important a part banking influence plays in producing good pictures.

While the Hollywood tendency is to become unduly alarmed about bankers in industry, having the experience of Fox, Radio and Paramount as guide posts, more conservative opinion here seems to feel that the money-bag folk in no way affect the merits of product.

Pointed out was the fact that MGM, Warner and Columbia, without banker domination, run for and by picture persons, have weathered the worst of economic storms, are in favorable condition today, with less banking management on their boards than the companies that were in the hottest water.

Fund Helps 10,000 Individuals

A report covering operations of the Motion Picture Relief Fund for 1934 reveals that $150,000 was collected and disbursed in aiding motion picture folk who were ill, unemployed, and in distress.

Four thousands cases, representing more than 10,000 individuals, received aid. Two thousand weekly grocery orders, for 5,000 individuals, were issued; 1,000 received treatment from physicians, dentists, opticians and laboratories; 200 from hospitals and sanitariums. Private nursing was provided in 50 cases. Medical appliances were supplied to 60, and 1,000 received drugs. There were 43 deaths and through the courtesy of Pierce Bros. Morticians, 29 funerals were handled by them without charge.

The executive committee believes it will be necessary to raise approximately $250,000 to meet the needs for 1935.

Twelve Pictures Started

To maintain the total of approximately forty pictures actually shooting, twelve new ones started during the week, as nine finished.

Four new productions went into the work at Fox. Single units were added to the active schedules at MGM, Paramount, Columbia, 20th Century, Monogram, Liberty and Universal. With three, MGM is credited with the most pictures completed. Fox and Columbia each checked in a pair. Singletons, finished by Radio and Wanger Productions, complete the quota.

The new Fox quartet embraces a wide variety of entertainment. "It's a Small World" is a romantic drama. Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie, Raymond Walburn, Virginia Sale, Irving Bacon, Astrid Allwyn, Charles Sellon and Nick Foran are featured. With Edward Everett Horton and Karen Morley in the leads, the comedy "$10 Raise" presents Glen Boles, Rosena Lawrence, Richard Tucker, Berton Churchill, Raymond Walker, Alan Dinehart and Frank Melton. In "Heaven's Gate," a sentimental romantic drama, Shirley Temple is starred, the support featuring Joel McCrea, Lyle Talbot, Rosemary Ames and Herbert Mundin. Will Rogers' new picture, naturally, is a comedy. In the currently begun "Doubting Thomas," he will be seen with Billie Burke, Alison Skipworth, Sterling Holloway, Andrew Tomes, Gail Patrick, Johnny Arthur and Ruth Warren.

"China Seas" Shooting

Long in preparation, MGM finally put "China Seas" before the cameras. The cast teams three of its biggest names, Clark Gable, Jean Harlow and Wallace Beery, in the principal roles. Others included are Lewis Stone, Charles Butterworth and Dudley Digges.

Paramount's new activity, "People Will Talk," a comedy, again co-stars Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland. In the support, Leila Hyams, Dean Jagger and Ruthelma Stevens are featured.

A western, "Guns of the Law," went into work on both stages and location at Columbia. Tim McCoy is starred, with Geneva Mitchel, Ward Bond, Robert Allen, Cy Jenks, Otto Hoffman and Ed LeSainte in the cast.

First George Arliss picture on the New Twentieth Century program, "Cardinal Richelieu," got under way. Principals include Edward Arnold, Violet Kemble-Cooper, Maureen O'Sullivan, Francis Lister, Cesar Romero, Halliwell Hobbes, Murray Kinnell, Herbert Brunston, Douglas Dumbrille, and Lumsden Hare.

Monogram's contribution is "The Desert Trail." This western features John Wayne with Mary Kornman, Paul Fix, Anita Compello, Ed Chandler, Al Ferguson and Lafe McKee.

An old stage and popular literary classic, "The Old Homestead," was started at Liberty. Mary Carlisle, Laurence Gray, Dorothy Lee, Eddie Nugent, Williard Robertson and Lillian Miles are in the cast.

"Mr. Dynamite," at Universal, features Edward Lowe, supported by Jean Dixon, Verna Hillie, Esther Ralston, Victor Varconi, Minor Watson, James Thomas, Matt McHugh and Wade Boteler.

Musical, Mystery, Comedy

On the completed side of the book, MGM's trio includes a musical, a mystery and a comedy. The first, "Naughty Marietta," will present Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, Frank Morgan, Cecelia Parker, Mary Doran, Edward Brophy, Elsa Lancaster, Laurence Grant, Harold Huber, Joseph Cawthorn, Greta Meyer and Walter Kingsford. "The Casino Murder Case," a mystery, presents Paul Lukas in the role of Philo Vance. The support lists Rosalind Russell, Ted Healy as Sergeant Heath, Isabel Jewell, Leslie Fenton, Erik Blore, Louise Fazenda, Alison Skipworth, Arthur Byron, Charles Sellon, Edward Van Sloan and Louise Henry. The third feature, a comedy, "Public Enemy No. 2," will present Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, Nat Pendleton, Harvey Stephens, Eugene Pallette, Ruth Selwyn, Robert Livingstone and Wade Boteler.

Fox also checks in a musical, "George White's Scandals of 1936." Principal cast personalities include James Dunn, Alice Faye, Cliff Edwards and Lyda Roberti. The second picture to come under the wire, "Recipe for Murder," again teams Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen, supported by Rosemary Ames, Mary Carlisle, William Janney, Henry O'Neil, Charles Wilson, C. Henry Gordon, Madge Bellamy and Astrid Allwyn.

At Columbia "I Love You Always" was completed. In this, Nancy Carroll, George Murphy, Jean Dixon, Harry Beresford, Arthur Hohl and Robert Allen will be seen. Also transferred to the cutting rooms at this studio was "Gimpy" (tentative title). Jack Holt and Mona Barrie head the list of players, which includes Jackie Searl, Ralph Morgan, Bradley Page, Frankie Darro, Samuel McDaniel and Frank Orth.

"Laddie" was completed at Radio. The cast will present John Beal, Gloria Stuart, Gloria Shea, Charlotte Henry, Virginia Weidler, Donald Crisp, Willard Robertson, Jimmy Butler and Greta Meyer.

Wanger Productions, Paramount release, finished "Private Worlds." Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer have the leads.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

No. 106—RIGHTS OF EXHIBITORS AND UNION LABOR

QUESTION—Has a local union of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators the right to declare a theatre owner (not a theatre manager), "Unfair" because he runs his own projectors in order to keep open?

I understand the American Federation of Labor gives the owner the right to do his own work.

Is there any law or ruling by the courts protecting an owner doing his own work?—MONTANA.

ANSWER—The questions, of course, are entirely outside the code. But, regardless, there can be no doubt but that the theatre owner has the absolute right to operate his own projection machines and we do not know of any law of the land, union or otherwise, or a court that could prevent him.

Whether or not the union has the right to declare the theatre unfair under the circumstances is a matter which should be brought before the American Federation of Labor for determination. It is reasonable to assume that if the IATSE-local union, affiliated with the AFL, is proceeding contrary to AFL regulations, then the Federation would order the local to cease and desist.

It might be possible to secure an injunction from the local court to restrain the union from picketing the theatre as unfair under these circumstances.

No. 107—RIGHTS OF NON-ASSENTING EXHIBITORS TO PROTEST

QUESTION—On page 612 of the 1934-35 Motion Picture Almanac (in the department titled: "De-coding the Motion Picture Code"), appeared a statement that an exhibitor need not have signed the code in order to protest against unfair clearance on pictures. I am interested in checking this statement and would appreciate your advising me as to your authority for same, as it has created considerable discussion among some of the exhibitors here.—CONNECTICUT.

ANSWER—Article VI, Section 7 (a), page 252 of the motion picture code says:

"Any party aggrieved by the (clearance and zoning) schedules shall promptly, and not later than thirty (30) days after publication thereof, file a protest in writing with the (Local Clearance) Board issuing them. Thereupon such board shall promptly convene and give reasonable notice of hearing to all parties concerned or having an interest in the proceeding. . . ."

Upon checking with some legal authorities who are familiar with the code and its functions, we get the interpretation that the foregoing means that any exhibitor, whether he has signed an assent or not—the clause saying "any party aggrieved"—shall have the right to protest a zoning schedule after it has been drawn by the Local Clearance Board and made public for purposes of hearings on protests. However, in the absence of an actual schedule under the code, it is not believed that a non-assentor has the right to protest to the Local Clearance Board against any specific instance of "unfair clearance." The right, then, revolves around a schedule actually drawn and made public.

Too, such non-assentors are given the right to appeal to the Code Authority against any decision of the Local Clearance Board on those published schedules against which they are permitted to protest locally.

The statement in the inquirer's letter, to wit: "unfair clearance on pictures" is rather broad. It is advisable that the situation involved be outlined in more detail for a more definite answer.

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Films Pronounced Safe For Use on Shipboard

Motion pictures this week were given a clean bill of health by the National Bureau of Standards for use on shipboard, insofar as fire hazards are concerned. A report by the Bureau shows that since adoption of safety recommendations, more than a decade ago, no instance has been found of fire or jeopardy to life resulting from the showing of motion pictures aboard ships.

The Bureau pointed out that the exhibition of nitrocellulose films formerly was prohibited on ships of United States registry, but that the same range in subjects obtainable with slow-burning film and the difficulty of inspectors in distinguishing between the two types led to the adoption of safety measures 12 years ago.

Organize New Mexican Firm

Impulsora Cinematografica has been organized in Mexico City with a paid capital of 100,000 pesos. The company will produce pictures of Mexican life, the initial program calling for six features.

Takes Mayfair Product

Goodrow Attractions, New Orleans, has taken over Mayfair product, following the resignation of Bob Kelly and the decision of Mayfair to abandon its own sales force in the territory.

200 Letters Show Shirley Temple's Grip on Children

When 9-year-old Amelia Ungolo went to see the show at the Republic theatre in Brooklyn a few weeks ago, she wouldn't have believed that her letter of tribute to her favorite star would win for her a Christmas present of a life-size Shirley Temple doll.

With the cooperation of the John D. Wells junior high school of Brooklyn, Paul Birstock, manager of the Republic, sponsored a Shirley Temple doll contest to study the likings of his juvenile patrons. Each child was asked to write a letter telling why he or she would like to own a Shirley Temple doll.

Practically all entries dwelt more on why Shirley Temple was a favorite player than reasons for actually wanting the doll.

A committee of three teachers from the John D. Wells school authority in judging the entries, judged the 200 letters received and awarded dolls to four girls, two of whom were tied for second place.

Would Like to Be in Her Place

Analysis of the letter showed that Miss Temple has an almost fairy tale grip on the imaginations of her young admirers.

"She is the littlest girl that can do the biggest things in the movies," is the way one of the winning contestants described her. Another liked her hair; a third her speech, and a fourth her personality. All would like to be in her place.

Virtually each one of the contestants vividly imagined herself in the roles taken by Shirley, who is the first child star ranked among the Ten Biggest Money Making Stars, in MOTION PICTURE HERALD's annual poll of independent exhibitors.

Called "Big Little Star"

Amelia Ungolo, who won first place, submitted the following letter to Mr. Birstock:

"Dear Manager:

"I hope I could win a Shirley Temple doll. The reasons why I like her are as follows. First, I like her personality. Second, she has a face just like a doll. Third, she has beautiful hair.

"I like the way she acts in pictures. Shirley acts so as to make everyone in the audience dance, sing and laugh in his seat. Shirley Temple has a beautiful smile. When I see her smile I can't help but smile back at her.

"I really do hope I will win a Shirley Temple doll.

"Yours very truly,
"Amelia Ungolo."

Rebecca Schayowitz, who tied for second place with Muriel Posner, called Miss Temple "that big little star."

"Shirley's sweetness and cleverness," wrote Rebecca, who also has reached nine years, "has won her way into everyone's heart, including mine. When I am lonesome and have nothing to cheer me up, then, with my Shirley Temple doll I'll always find pleasure."

In view of the many urgent requests we have received for pre-release dates on "GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935," I agree with you that a general statement of our policy on this production will be helpful to all Warner accounts.

As you say, the original release date of this greatest Gold Diggers of all time must be withdrawn, for obviously a production of this magnitude cannot carry a general release date.

We should, however, entertain propositions for a few pre-release engagements.

Of course these houses will have to be chosen on the basis of proved ability to properly set up a show of this exceptional calibre.

ABOUT MY NEW BLUEBOOK

By F. H. RICHARDSON

For the reason that I believe my readers will all be interested, I shall devote the entire Bluebook School space this week to giving you some idea of what the coming sixth edition of the Bluebook will be. The Quigley Publishing Company, publishers of the Herald, Better Theatres, etc., have taken over all publication rights of this and all future editions. It is hoped the new book will be ready for delivery within thirty days, though it may be somewhat later than that. The entire manuscript and illustrations are finished.

In the 25 years past, I have tried very hard to supply books having real value. That I have succeeded is proven by the fact that though each edition, except the first, has run far into the thousands, up to date not one word of criticism or adverse comment has ever been received from any projectionist, whereas very many have been kind enough to express high commendation. Several have even declared the books to have been "worth their weight in gold" to them. And mark you well, every comment has come from a man who had bought and paid the full price for the book. Several hundred copies were sold in England, many in Australia and New Zealand and in other countries—even in China.

Three years ago when I took up the task of compiling the sixth edition, realizing that with all my other duties to attend to, the task would be both too heavy and consume too much time did I attempt it alone, after careful consideration I engaged Mr. Aaron Nadell to compile, under my guidance and editing, the material on Sound. In my opinion the sound material in the new book is far in advance of anything you have yet seen. It is written and organized to give projectionists a much better fundamental idea of sound than they may have had before, and to serve as a reliable guide.

Incidentally, the sound matter has been very carefully examined by both RCA and Erpi engineers, who aided substantially by providing some matter that is not ordinarily released by them, which act of courtesy I take as a compliment to myself and the Bluebook.

When compilation was first begun I realized the tremendous difficulty of the task confronting me. Three volumes would be too costly. And a too-thick, awkward, bunglesome book seemed to me very objectionable. I then was up against getting all the vast store of knowledge essentially necessary to projectionists into a single volume of not too many pages.

Some job, says you—and so say I. But after careful consideration I found the answer, as we always can if we seek long and hard enough. And now here is something I ask you to think over very carefully. A projection text book is necessarily a large volume and one in which changes cannot be too often made, and once you have bought one, changes and improvements made have no value to you. Meanwhile, as time passes, major and minor alterations and improvements are made in almost every kind of equipment used in projection, and such changes make operating instructions that were quite all right when written, either useless or worse than useless because they are misleading. The question then arises:

Should detailed operating instructions be included in text books. The answer is an emphatic no! Manufacturers of all worthwhile equipments now issue competent instruction pamphlets covering mechanical adjustment and operating methods for such equipments, which pamphlets are kept right up to date; also, they may be had by projectionists free of cost. Why then should such instructions be included in text books?

"Well, then," you may ask, "what does the new book contain?"

The new book is entirely rewritten. It is in no sense a re-write of any former edition, except that a number of the former illustrations have been used. The book is filled with what I term basic instruction. Instead of dealing with a great mass of individual makes of equipments, I deal with those elements that go to make up all equipments, regardless of who made them.

For example, consider the intermittent movement of a motion picture projector. An intermittent movement performs exactly the same identical function in exactly the same way (save for some differences in mechanical make-up) in all projectors. This being true, if one understands exactly what such a movement consists of, how it operates and what is the effect of its ratio of movement, etc., it makes absolutely no manner of difference what make of projector it is in. One can handle it and care for it just as well in one as in another, since the manufacturer's instruction pamphlet tells how to make all the necessary mechanical adjustments.

However, while excellent for its limited purpose, the manufacturer's instruction pamphlet or booklet does not supply basic knowledge of intermittent movement, ratio of speed of movement and its effect, etc. The knowledge it imparts is, of course, essential, but further knowledge is vitally necessary, and it is that knowledge which the Bluebook imparts.

Each part of every equipment used in projection work, both pictorial and sound, is dealt with, explained and adequate information concerning it and its functions provided. However, I have gone much further in this new book by providing a means by which users may locate any desired bit of information easily and quickly.

There is a general index in which is listed all the chief elements, such as, for example, Motion Picture Projector, Amplifiers, Screens, Loud Speakers and so on through the entire list. Preceding each such subject is a subject index, consisting in a list of questions referring to the text, with the number of the page whereon each question is answered.

Suppose one desires to know, for example, something about lubrication of intermittent movements. It is of course a question having to do with the motion picture projector, so we locate that subject in the general index. Throughout the subject index, in bold face letters, are indicated the various important projector items, as supporting base, lamphouse, etc. Glancing down through the subject index we see intermittent movement, with page number indicated. It is listed, let us assume, on page 345. Under it we find lubrication,* listed, say, as Question No. 72. Turning to page 345 we note one or more numbers in parentheses, in consecutive order of course, one of which is (72), following which we will find exactly what we want.

I believe you will like this method very well indeed. In my judgment and the judgment of others who have examined the plan, it has the effect of converting a mass of text into a real handbook, for the reason that one is not compelled to search through a mass of matter to find exactly what one wants.

I am sure the new book is distinctly better than anything I have heretofore done, in which opinion I am quite certain you will all agree.

I have already had many requests that I autograph copies. I have decided to autograph the first 200 copies ordered.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Pt. Isabelle, Texas

Dear Herald:

Pt. Isabelle is a mighty nice place to live, provided you don't mind sand dunes, fishing shacks, Mexicans and burros. Outside of that we'd sooner be in Harry Huffman's town of Denver. But down here you can get all you want of red fish, trout, mullet (but you won't want any mullet), crabs, oysters (in season), shark, tarpon and mud-turtles. Down here here when they ask you where you are from and you say from Nebraska, they say, "Oh, is that so? Do you know a man up there by the name of Jones?" Lord Harry, we know 642 men by the name of Jones.

We like Pt. Isabelle for two reasons. Here is where the Government is going to put in docks for the large vessels to come and get the produce from this valley. And then we like the smell of salt water, for you know Pt. Isabelle is right on the bay that opens out into the Gulf of Mexico and the Government has built a turning basin so the big boats can come in to the dock, and say, when that is completed it is going to make this railroad ask the Interstate Commerce Commission for privilege to lower their freight rates on citrus fruit, but they are not going to do that until it is completed. We never could see any good reason why the railroads had to ask anybody for privilege to lower their freight rates, but maybe that's why we are so dumb. And then again, we never could see any good reason why the producers should ask for the privileges of lowering the price of one of their pictures 50 per cent, and there being no good reason is probably why they don't.

Everybody "Ashamed"

But speaking of Pt. Isabelle reminds us of a picture we saw recently down at the Palace theatre at McAllen. Mr. L. J. Mason, who operates both the Palace and the Queen, invited us to come down and see Shirley Temple in "Bright Eyes" and to bring our gang with us (he didn't know we had a gang) and he sent us eight passes (which was doggone nice of him), and so we took our gang and went down to see Shirley and say, Abner, if you never saw Shirley in "Bright Eyes" you haint never saw nuthin' yet. One of our gang was rather hard-boiled and we are no jellyfish ourself, but when Jimmy Dunn took Shirley up in an airplane and told her that they were going up to Heaven to see her mother (who had just been killed by an auto) we'll just be doggoned if the salt water didn't run down the noses of both of us. This hardboiled guy was ashamed of himself, and he said he was ashamed of us, too, and we said "so are we."

Yes, sir, if they never make 'em any better than "Bright Eyes" and if Shirley never makes a better picture it will be all right with the world, and us, too.

And then after we had planned to go down to Red Fish bay or Pt. Isabelle next week to catch a few sharks, we get an invitation from Mr. Mason to bring "the gang" down to the Palace to see Will Rogers in "The County Chairman," and anybody who would go fishing and miss seeing Will in a picture like that has certainly lost several wheels out of his gourd. We are not going to miss it, sharks or no sharks.

TIPS ON THE TALKIES

—By the Projector

I will not dabble in politics.

I shall never offend any religious sect or favor any denomination.

Advertising will never creep into my entertainment.

I shall never show crime without a swift punishment therefor. Lapses of morality will not be exhibited except where there is no alternative and, when shown, the folly of sin shall be clearly expounded.

I will aid clean thinking and education by presenting more literary classics the coming year than I have previously offered in all the years of my existence.

If this policy proves a financial loss, I alone will suffer it.

I shall not apologize for my existence or my great popularity.

Tolerance will realize I am neither a church nor a school; that my mission in life is entertainment. Intolerance will continue to find fault with me.

I am the motion picture of 1935!

—FRED HINDS,
Strand Theatre, Whitewater, Wis.

We are expecting Will gives an awfully good performance in "The County Chairman," for that's his type of character, but if he don't look out, Shirley is going to push him clear off the top round of the ladder, and when he pushes her off the rest of 'em had just as well go for the barn.

No, Nary an Alligator

We asked Mr. Mason if they had any alligators in Texas and he said there were none that he knew of, and we said there must be because we left the doors and windows open the night before when we went to bed and we woke up about midnight and that there was a six-foot alligator in bed with us, and he said, "Well, it is funny how this climate affects people. I dreamed the other night that I was eating ice cream with a lady friend of mine when my wife dug me in the ribs and woke me up," and we said, "O-O-O, some people are always taking the joy out of life."

We are not just sure how we would get along down here if it weren't for Mr. Plath, who operates the San Juan theatre at San Juan. He lets us take his HERALD every week so we can read it and that keeps us from doing something a whole lot worse. The fact is we have to have something to do down here or we will be idle.

We agree most heartily with Mr. Walter H. Golding of the Capitol theatre at Saint John, N. B., in his contention that Louise Beavers should receive more attention in the billing of pictures in which she plays than is generally given her. You know, our father used to have a band of sheep, all of them white, but one, and this one was colored, but we noticed that when the bunch came up to the feed trough for their evening meal this colored one got as much of the oats as any of them, and Dad said he couldn't see why it shouldn't, and we never could, either. Miss Beavers is a good actress regardless of where she was born, and should receive proper attention.

We see by the press that the President is opposed to the Townsend Old Age Pension plan of $200 a month but does favor a pension of $15 a month. Shucks, $15 wouldn't keep many of us kids in chewing tobacco, but then some of us don't chew. If they could find some way of getting the money to pay $200 a month without taxing the public for it, we might be in favor of it, but it kinda seems to us that the most of the boys are paying enough tax already.

The terrific wind we had recently, which was followed by a drop in the temperature to 19 above, which froze all kinds of fruit and vegetables, has thrown a crimp into the fruit and vegetable grower down here. About all the vegetables were killed, or badly damaged, and most of the grape fruit was blown off the trees and had to be gathered and buried in compliance with some rule or law, but ought to have been consumed, and would have been if distribution methods were as they should be. A grape fruit blown off the tree is just as good as one hanging on it and yet they were required to gather tons upon tons of it and bury it.

In spite of these discouraging conditions, business at the theatres seems to be on the increase. Must be pictures are getting better or else they are trying to forget their troubles. We have received programs from the boys from all up and down this valley and judging from these programs we would surmise that they don't make 'em any too good for these folks down here.

We believe that the fellow who conceived that "Shelterbelt" idea to "bring rain" is the same chap we heard crooning a love song over the radio a few nights ago. When it comes to brains we have got to hand it to the sheepherders of this country.

If we don't give you a shark story next week you can charge it up to Mr. Mason for inviting us down to his theatre to see Will Rogers in the "County Chairman." Gee whiz, we won't miss that picture.

THANKS...

FORMIDABLE and weird are the stories of the motion picture business that reach the outside. These tales of incredible tycoons, mysterious geniuses and fabulous sums caused the Editors of THE MARCH OF TIME to view their venture into this new field with trepidation.

The Editors knew that TIME and FORTUNE and THE MARCH OF TIME on the air had valuable and loyal followings. But before these people could see THE MARCH OF TIME on theatre screens nation-wide, they knew that "the trade" must approve and cooperate. THE MARCH OF TIME's Editors worked industriously at their picture, wondering if the men wise in the selling and exploiting of screen entertainment would catch THE MARCH OF TIME's enthusiasm for real life drama from the world's news.

A week has passed since the première of THE MARCH OF TIME. The first release has been well received by the public, critics and trade press. But even more encouraging than the praise has been the friendly, interested criticism.

To famed showmen—Dave Loew, Charles Moskowitz, Nick Schenck, Joe Vogel, Eugene Picker of Loew's; to Barney Balaban, Walter Immerman, Abe Kaufman of B. and K.; Jules Rubin of Publix Great States; Jack Sullivan and Charles Skouras of Fox West Coast—go THE MARCH OF TIME's sincere thanks for continued support and encouragement. Also to Ralph Branton, A. H. Blank of Tri-State Theatres; Al Boyd in Philadelphia; Chris Buckley of Albany; Dave Idzal in Detroit; Wm. Smalley, Smalley's Up-State Circuit; Bob O'Donnell of Inter-State in Texas; Al Steffes in Minnesota and N. L. Nathanson in Canada.

In the fields of exploitation and publicity, the Editors thank Oscar Doob, New York; Bill Hollander, Chicago; Carter Barron of Washington; William Saxton and Herb Morgan of Baltimore; Milt Harris, Cleveland; Reves Espey on the West Coast; Frederic Schrader, Detroit; Harry Freeman, Philadelphia; Everett Cumings, Omaha; Stanley Brown, Des Moines; for starting THE MARCH OF TIME onto the screen with one of the most successful campaigns ever given any picture.

THE MARCH OF TIME's Editors realize that they must be worthy of the industry's support, that their film is yet far from perfect. It is their determination to make each release a more complete, a more skillful issue.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown, Sally Blane—I set this in cold without any advance advertising and took a lot better than average for last three days of week. It is just one of those pictures that is a natural draw and when you get 'em in they will like it. We had more folks stop at the window to tell us this is a good show than anything in for a long while. —W. H. Brennen, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown, Sally Blane—Good program picture. Fast moving and not a dull moment in it. Why don't we see more of John Mack Brown? Everybody likes him and his acting. Supporting cast good. Played on a dime night and did good business. Not a big picture, but one that will satisfy the ordinary fan. Build it up with a good musical short and cartoon. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 9-10.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A sweet picture that any of the major companies could be proud of. Did not hear of any adverse criticism on it. People said that the race scene was the best they had ever seen. A long picture but not a dull moment in it and good and clean. Anyone can play this picture in their best spot and will build up on second day. Did not do above average business as the weather was too cold. Explain title of the picture when advertising it and play up the horse race. Running time, 100 minutes. Played January 20-21-22. —Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and country patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—One of the most entertaining pictures we have played this season. Good story and well acted. All said great entertainment. Could not help it with these two stars and an extra good cast. Played January 20-21. —Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Victor McLaglen, Wynne Gibson, John Gilbert, Fred Keating —Ran this picture on Bargain Nights and did not please our customers. Had no plot and story was too loosely connected. Having so many stars there was no one for the story to center around. Running time, 102 minutes. Played January 15-16.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: Victor McLaglen, John Gilbert, Wynne Gibson, Walter Connolly, Helen Vinson, Fred Keating—To me a very out-of-the-ordinary picture that pleased the majority of patrons. However, didn't draw as expected. Still, it was a pleasure to run it to see the expressions of disgust on Walter Connolly's face. Business below normal. Running time, 103 minutes. Played December 9-10.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

DEFENSE RESTS, THE: Jack Holt, Jean Arthur —Here's one that went over with our Friday-Saturday crowd in a big way. A very good lawyer film and it has a real tieup with the present Hauptmann trial. The latter half of this picture is very similar to today's ace front-page story, so go to it and use this angle—we didn't know it beforehand, but it helped business the second day of our run. Running time, 7 reels. Played January 25-26.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

DESERT VENGEANCE: Buck Jones—This is only fair entertainment of the western type. This is not as good as most of the Jones pictures, but will please the average western fans. There is a bit of action, fighting and romance, but not as much action as a good western should have. This is a reissue and if you haven't played it, then don't. We played on Saturday to only fair business. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GIRL IN DANGER: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey —Played on a double bill and they said it was good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt—Good program picture, quite a little comedy and action. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—This is an extra good program picture. Satisfied them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll—Had plenty of kicks on this and mostly on account of the very peculiar ending. The show isn't big enough to rate your best nights. If you never play it you won't be missing anything.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson —This is not "just another picture show," but a distinct special, and it is May Robson's work that makes it so. It would appear that the film was created for her, she is so very well cast in it. I think her work in this is nearly if not quite as good as anything Marie Dressler ever did. Running time, 85 minutes.—Played February 1-2.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Walter Connolly, Carole Lombard, May Robson, Roger Pryor—Very good picture. Similar type of role as "Lady for a Day," but, of course, not quite up to that standard, but still excellent entertainment. Clean as can be and should be a good bet in any small town. Running time, 8 reels. Played January 20-22.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MAN TRAILER: Buck Jones—Played this with temperature nearly 30 below zero so, of course, did no business. Jones' are nearly all well received in small towns. This is one of his best. I will bring it back later.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MAN HUNTER, THE: Buck Jones—Just another western, but that is not intended as an adverse criticism, as we find that we have to have one of these pictures now and then to satisfy the kids, and to satisfy a lot of older people. I doubt whether we have ever played a western that did not more than pay expenses. Running time, 57 minutes. Played January 25-26.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming patronage.

MEN OF THE NIGHT: Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen —Played this with another fine picture from Columbia. —Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Fay Wray, Victor Jory—Another average picture, but nothing to get excited about. It is a capital-labor dispute with labor winning out through May Robson's unselfishness, despite a spoiled family. Personal estimate: not so hot, but it will get by. Played February 3-4.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

NAME THE WOMAN: Richard Cromwell, Arline Judge—Played this with another fine picture from Columbia.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati, Lyle Talbot—Excellent entertainment of its type, but did not click at our box office. This is a great picture, expertly directed and the acting is wonderful. The musical score is of the classical operatic type and therefore did not appeal to our patrons. This brought out the high class of patrons, but the regular customers did not come out. No business in small towns. Business only fair. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 28-29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PARTY'S OVER, THE: Stuart Erwin, Ann Sothern, Patsy Kelly, William Bakewell—I see some exhibitors panned this one, but I rate it as above average for suiting our cash customers.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

PRESCOTT KID: Tim McCoy—Pretty good. Not much at the box office. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SHADOWS OF SING SING: Mary Brian, Bruce Cabot—Very ordinary picture that pleased the Bargain Night patrons but didn't do any business. No draw whatever. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 22.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN: Elissa Landi, Frank Morgan, Joseph Schildkraut—From some reports was scared of this one. However, a nice little story that will have a direct appeal to women and they brought their dates along, too. My patrons said it was a special in comparison to "20th Century." Played January 17.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Wayne, Ala. Small town patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Tim McCoy, Marian Shilling —A very interesting western picture. Better than the average.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenvill, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—A fine picture minus the usual young love romance element. Fine story and superb acting, but not enough draw to make the exhibitor particularly happy.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—A few of our patrons did not like this picture, but most of them appreciated the splendid acting of Walter Connolly. Many stopped at the box office to express their appreciation. Business less than normal. Played January 26.—Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Robert Young, Doris Kenyon—A very good dramatic picture that was well produced and pleased. Business average. Running time, 71 minutes. Played January 10-11.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—A bad flop.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN: Joe E. Brown, Patricia Ellis—Very good. I think the best that Joe has done. It is helped, of course, by the circus shots, the trapeze work and comedy. Late in playing, due to protection, and not being able to get my new picture that I have bought, another headache from the code. Patricia Ellis is a clever little actress, has a nice part in this one. Here's hoping we see more of Patricia.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

DRAGON MURDER CASE, THE: Warren William, Lyle Talbot, Margaret Lindsay—Very ordinary mystery picture. With Powell no longer playing the part of "Philo Vance," these pictures are just ordinary. Business below normal. Worst cold in 40 years hurt business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played December 11-12.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler —Good musical to satisfactory business. West Point stuff finely directed. Best the screen has seen. The U. S. Government is working with its partner, Warner Brothers, this year. The $50,000 wasn't wasted.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien, Ross Alexander—Grandly produced picture that pleased 100 per cent. However, did not come up to expectations at the box office. Business slightly above average. Running time, 97 minutes. Played January 28-29.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General-small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir, Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak—We played this picture on a dime night and some people said that it was better than our ordinary night programs. The younger people will like this picture better than the older patrons. Will please in any spot and is right up to standard for a program picture. Deals with the younger generation and their problems when they face the world upon completion of their education. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 23-24.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and country patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—We showed this picture on Bank Night and had a very large crowd. This is one picture that will please your patrons. I believe this is one of Powell's best pictures. Running time, 85 minutes. Played January 17.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

LOST LADY, A: Barbara Stanwyck, Lyle Talbot—A very, very good little picture, good cast, good plot and lots of human interest. That Stanwyck is certainly good here—but who in Oklahoma, Texas or

South America could put over such a title? I think there should be a law against such a good picture going to waste with a bum title. Everybody that saw it liked it, but the bottom fell out of the box office that night.—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak, Helen Chandler, Helen Lowell—A picture that will really please all that you can get to come see it. It tickles your heart, holds your interest, but how are you gonna get 'em to come see it with such a title?—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—Pretty good picture that did all right.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—This is a very good picture that pleased all who saw it. There is plenty of action, mystery and romance and this will please the average fan. The story deals with a pilot on one of the air lines and most of the story is filmed in the air or on the flying field. The trailer will sell the picture for you and you take in the money. Played one day to good business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played January 26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—Good Saturday programmer. Will please the younger people, as there is lots of action and all kinds of thrills. Some swell auto race shots and crashes. Nice little story, although not new. Build up with good shorts and will satisfy. Average business. Good family picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 29-30.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

SIDE STREETS: Aline MacMahon, Paul Kelly, Ann Dvorak—Story of married man in love with a younger woman than his wife. Has a novel finish. Alice MacMahon steals the show. Good entertainment. Played January 10.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown—This one sure got the laughs, and lots of them, but no money and we advertised it heavy, too. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 12-14.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

Fox

BACHELOR OF ARTS: Tom Brown, Anita Louise—No kicks on this one. A dandy little picture. It has plenty of comedy, romance, and stuff that it takes to please the small towns. This one sure gets my OK. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 9-10.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—I am infatuated with this little elf. This picture left me helpless in a new kind of love. I am wild to be my best girl's father. Something James Barrie perhaps can understand but a terrible amour for an old gent like me. I should pay to run these Temple pictures but instead this one paid me like anything. Let us all join Fox in thanking Heaven for Shirley.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Ihaho. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—Best show we have had in some time. Pleased everybody and will make a lot of new Temple fans. Will build up the second night from word-of-mouth advertising. Step on this one, as there is something to sell and it is a good clean picture. Has a fine ending that makes everyone go out laughing. Little better than average business but it was 20 below zero. Will stand a second run in any town. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 13-14-15.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—This is just what the exhibitors are looking for. A real box-office attraction. This picture broke all house records for two-day showings. It is a comedy drama and offers excellent entertainment for the whole family. This is a great picture and you should clean up on it. Boost it to the skies; you can't go wrong. Played two days to best business ever. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 21-22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. Country patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—Can't help but feel that this is the best picture yet with Shirley. Our audience seemed to think the same thing. And there's nobody on the screen that can be Shirley's "Daddy" like James Dunn. A great big handful of bouquets to producer, Director Butler, and the cast for just about as sweet an evening's entertainment as anyone could wish for. Jimmy Dunn, you're a real trouper. Nice work, sir. Running time, 9 reels. Played January 13-14.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes—Entirely too long. Plenty of fine music but too much crowd scenes. Fox muffed a chance to have had a fine picture in "Caravan.' Of course, exhibitors can't tell producers anything. Anyway, this picture is clean. Running time, 100 minutes. Played January 13.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

THREE STATES GIVE NEW CONTRIBUTORS

Oklahoma, Montana and Florida present the latest additions to the reporting army of "What the Picture Did for Me". They are:

LAMAR GUTHRIE, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Oklahoma.

REX FLINT, Lake Theatre, Baker, Montana.

REUBEN MOORE, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Florida.

Read the reports of these showmen.

CARAVAN: Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker, Phillips Holmes—Should be played for the music it has. All music original and takes you away from phonograph records and radio canned music, found in most all other pictures.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—This program gave satisfaction, although it did not draw extra business.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Circuit, McIntosh, S. D. General patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Some say it isn't Rogers' best, but I enjoyed it and can't find a thing to criticize. Business less than on most Rogers lately but the picture had The Happy Chappies of KN X in opposition.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Just about the best western the talking screen has yet had. It pleased everyone, made a record at the box office, and showed what a few brains can do when they are applied to turning out an entertaining bit of action. George O'Brien fine as always, Miss Hervey very attractive, but the main thing is that this show is 100 per cent clean, funny, beautifully photographed entertainment. Good luck, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Lesser. Running time, 7 reels. Played January 11-12.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: If you get behind this and are not afraid of it, as I know most of you are, this will do well. Better than average business. Play it and advertise it.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: My adult patrons complimented this war picture highly. As usual on a picture of this kind you have to explain to your patrons in a small town that the films were made before the sound era—hence, no dialogue except ghost voice. Above average business. Played January 4.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING: George M. Cohan—If the people do not know the star and appreciate his acting, put this one on the shelf. Fair plot and story, but too slow and too many walkouts. Poorest business we have had in some time and no house at all second night. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 16-17.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—A blizzard the first night and 20 below zero the second evening. Business was naturally only about a third of normal, but I can honestly say that it received more praise than "David Harum." This picture will come about as close to pleasing all classes as any prdouced for years. Any exhibitor that hasn't used this and can get it shouldn't lose a minute in giving it his most preferred playing time, even though it is old.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers, Peggy Wood—A picture that pleased 100 per cent. Just what we need for small towns.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Circuit, McIntosh, S. D. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—Very good. The older Will gets the better he gets in pictures. It seems as if every one that saw this picture liked it. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Better entertainment than we expected from what we'd heard about it. Made a good week-end show, plenty of comedy and it is certainly that "something different" that we like to see once in a while. Played January 18-19.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Maxter, Conchita Montenegro—An ordinary program picture that will please the kids and will do fair business. Old war stuff. Not much new in plot or story. Some fair comedy relief to keep it moving. Will stand up all right for Saturday. Good acting and some good air shots. Average business. Runnning time, 80 minutes. Played January 11-12.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Nice little picture that pleased our people and drew fairly well. Played September 5.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newel, S. D. Small town patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Very good film fare. With the weather here registering 27 below zero, we did not have to turn anyone away from the theatre, however. Played January 26-27.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Tom Brown, Anita Louise—This picture is beyond a doubt the best picture Will has ever made or proved so because our patrons were more pleased with it than with any of his others. They went in smiling and came out smiling. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 27-28.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian—Good picture if you can yet them in after telling them the title of the picture. Some nice shots of the canal and power house. Fast moving plot and plausible story. New star well liked by people that saw her. Did about average business and held up well. Spencer Tracy well liked. Timely picture with all the war scares going around. Running time, 87 minutes. Played January 6-7-8.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian—This is only fair entertainment and entirely too long drawn out. It is a romantic drama, with a bit of mystery that does not connect well. This is not a very good picture for a new star, but Miss Gallian plays her part well. Stepin Fetchit and Ned Sparks add the necessary comedy. This is just program entertainment. Played on late Saturday night show to poor business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played January 26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—Below average programmer. Some people especially liked it, but the ordinary run of the people thought it was just another picture. Did not seem to like Swanson, as they said that she was too old and all washed up. Nice performance put on by supporting players and some nice singing, but the outdoor scenes were all faked and everybody could see it. Below average business. Bad weather. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 1-2-3.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—Very good program picture but it did not draw at the box office. Janet Gaynor don't mean a thing any more. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Lew Ayres, Alice Faye—I played this in several towns and our customers were pleased. So far this year all I have to do is advertise the show is a Fox, as every Fox picture has been OK.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Circuit, McIntosh, S. D. General patronage.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS: Alice Faye Lew Ayres—Very good comedy full of laughs. Running time, 76 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Fine piece of entertainment. Dunn always popular here.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—Small town men must drop everything and put this over. Marvelous word of mouth praise. Will merit all effort. Will do surprising business. Lasky delivered with both barrels at last. Now let him keep it up and quit being European and arty. Give us more human pictures of the American scene. Train your own writers. The modern writers are decadents, separated from life and humanity.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Majestic

NIGHT ALARM: Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen, H. B. Warner—Played this a part of a double bill on Bargain Nights and barely drew film rental. And they sold it to me as a special. The only thing special about it was the rental. A fairly good action picture but have seen a lot better for less money. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 10-11.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

TROUBLE BUSTERS: Jack Hoxie, Lane Chandler—Good western; fair photography and sound. Played January 12.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evelyn Knapp—A surefire western for the small towns. Plenty of hard riding, fighting and shooting. Good story and a well produced picture. If you are in a spot where they like westerns give this one your preferred playing time and then stand back and watch them roll in. Did the biggest Sunday gross on this since I played "Roman Scandals." Why, oh why, don't some company produce more westerns like this one and give us small town exhibitors something to make money on. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 3-4.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines, Judith Allen—Not the big musical Mascot led us to think it was. Not in the class of other pictures costing some money here. Just a good program, with some music. No draw second night. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 22-23.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

MGM

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET, THE: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Charles Laughton—Terrible name to tell the dry farmers when they call up and ask what's on. They said "Huh?" When it was repeated they asked what was on at the other theatre. A splendid picture. Great. A better name would not have hurt in the cities and would have helped in the country. Producers should visualize the enormously differentiated audiences they cater to and name for the whole world and all classes.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—Some liked it and others didn't. Comedy predominates, in a picture with practically no action. I would call it average with an appeal more for the mentally inclined than the action fans. Played February 1-2.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery, Edward Everett Horton, Una Merkel, Edward Arnold—An extremely clever but rather sophisticated picture which received good audience response. It is a comedy and has few serious moments, being replete with amusing situations and saucy lines.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND: Robert Young, Madge Evans, Nat Pendleton, Ted Healy, Paul Kelly—A swell baseball mystery picture that pleased. Continued cold cut down attendance. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 13-14.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—Excellent picture that pleased 100 per cent. Business average. Not the picture that "The Thin Man" was, however. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 20-21.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn, Stuart Erwin, Una Merkel—As sweet a picture as any exhibitor would care to play. Pleased 100 per cent and drew average business. You won't go wrong with this in a mid-week position. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 3-4.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is a very good picture of the comedy type and will please all who like good, clean comedy. There is plenty of action, laughs and romance. "Spanky" McFarland practically steals the whole show. This will make excellent family entertainment and should please everyone. Played on a late Saturday night show to good business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Although this is one of Metro's biggest pictures of 1934, it didn't please our customers as well as some other pictures we have shown. The acting was grand as far as Chevalier and MacDonald are concerned, but being a more or less operetta style it wasn't enjoyed as much as I hoped it would be. Running time, 100 minutes. Played January 13-14.—Sheman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Played this Sunday and Monday before Christmas, which most every exhibitor will agree is a tough spot for any film. Got above average business and pleased. Personally, I believed it a swell show and most of the customers agreed. You can't beat the combination of Lubitsch, MacDonald and Chevalier for this type of picture. Properly sold, it will do business anywhere. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 23-24.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF MR. X: Robert Montgomery, Elizabeth Allan—Very entertaining mystery show, but may not please all as the locale is England.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Laurel & Hardy—An old picture that I traded a poor new one for and was thankful. It drew a crowd and every one enjoyed it. Played June 23.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—The picture is well staged and produced with a good story, but there are apparently many that do not like Garbo, for business was down. It is heavy drama as are all of her pictures. There is no comedy relief. I can see where the picture would go over in the larger situations, but pictures of this type draw a certain class as did "Barretts." But this is not enough to much more than pay the running expenses. At that the rank and file liked it better than the "Barretts." Slight business the second night of the run.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—Although we didn't have the crowd I expected, all were pleased who came to see it. Garbo is still a grand actress and Marshall and Brent are good at any role which they play. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 20-21.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

PARIS INTERLUDE: Otto Kruger, Robert Young, Madge Evans, Una Merkel—This picture is a direct slap at decent people and decent ideals. The only character in the picture that tried to be decent was held up to ridicule. All the rest of the characters spend three-fourths of their time drinking; in fact, that seems to be the theme and aim of the picture—to make heroes and heroines out of drunken sots. I couldn't help wondering if maybe the breweries had something to do with the writing of the story, and the directing of the picture; if not the breweries, then some one half under the influence of their delectable products. Metro sent us a drinking two-reel to go with this mess, "Apples to You," and I am afraid it will be months before we can get any one but drunks to enter our theatre again. Played January 27.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall—Outcast is right. One that should never have been left on the exhibitor's doorstep. Overacted, affected Constance Bennett was an acute pain to most of our audience. Not worth running if you expect to keep your patrons coming, which shows that Metro is no smarter than a lot of others. The clucks you pay for and when they get something that is worth running it's percentage. The code is all wrong on this cancellation business. It ought to be not less than 20 per cent and outright cancellation.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Hugh Williams—A splendidly produced picture that flopped at the box office. No appeal whatever for our class of trade. Business below average. Running time, 79 minutes. Played December 20-21.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Hugh Williams—A mighty good picture. Story entertaining. Fine acting by star and all the cast, but did not draw film rentals. Played on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—Played just before Christmas and business was terrible. Was well pleased with the show and plan to bring it back after the roads open up.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

VIVA VILLA: Wallace Beery—I consider this one of the biggest and finest pictures ever produced. Any theatre can be proud to present it.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Monogram

BEGGARS IN ERMINE: Lionel Atwill, H. B. Walthall, Betty Furness—An excellent story of the steel mills. Good shots of mill interior, as well as a good human interest background. Rain and cold kept the people at home. Good any day. Played January 7-8.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST, A: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—This kind of a picture helps pay for the losses on some of the big shot pictures. The big boys sure hate to admit that the independents can make good pictures like this one. Best draw since showing "Cabbage Patch." Thanks, Monogram. Played January 27-29.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Hats off to Monogram for one of the best pictures of the year. If Monogram keeps this up, they will produce better pictures than most of the major companies. This is a drama, based on the book of the same name, and should be a box office natural. The acting is splendid and also the direction, but we failed to do any business, due to bad weather. Pleased all who saw it. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 24-25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan, Louise Dresser—A wholesome picture which offers genuine entertainment to every member of the family. The audience response was splendid.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—A better than average program picture from Monogram. Pleased the Bargain Night crowd. Business average. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Decem-

WE DON'T DOUBT YOU, MR. STROMBERG!

Comes a telegram from Mr. Hunt Stromberg, producer at the M-G-M Studios.

Mr. Stromberg calmly announces the GREATEST MUSICAL SINCE TALKIES BEGAN!

Those are big words, but we're inclined to believe Mr. S. because he gave us the advance tip-off on such others of his pictures as "Thin Man", "Penthouse", "Chained", "Hideout", "Treasure Island", etc.

Here are his exact words:

> "NAUGHTY MARIETTA, STARRING JEANETTE MACDONALD AND NELSON EDDY IS IN THE BAG. REALLY GREAT PICTURE. IN MY ESTIMATION AND OTHERS WHO PRIVATELY SAW ROUGH CUT TODAY MOST SENSATIONAL MUSICAL SINCE PICTURES BEGAN. SHOOT THE WORKS. THE SKY'S THE LIMIT."

We've been so excited about "David Copperfield"; "Sequoia"; Wallace Beery's "West Point of the Air"; Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery in "Vanessa—Her Love Story"; Clark Gable, Connie Bennett in "After Office Hours"; Jean Harlow, Bill Powell in "Reckless" that we hesitated to talk about "Naughty Marietta".

But now we've done it. You've heard what Mr. S. thinks about it. You can check us up if we're wrong, because we're going to check up on Mr. S. ber 18-19.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

HAPPY LANDING: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—This action program picture pleased our patrons and was deserving of its praise, as it is well made and has capable leads.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

KING KELLY OF THE U. S. A.: Guy Robertson, Irene Ware—A very light program picture. Too light for our Saturday crowd. Mythical kingdom stuff is out here. Running time, 66 minutes. Played January 19.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

MOONSTONE, THE: David Manners, Phyllis Barry—A very mediocre mystery picture that did not please. Business below average. Running time, 62 minutes. Played January 8-9.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

REDHEAD: Bruce Cabot, Grace Bradley—A nice program picture. Cabot doesn't talk clear, though the girl, Redhead, talks very plain. We cut the price and let all redheads in free, as the paper was weak on it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 29.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

REDHEAD: Bruce Cabot, Grace Bradley, Regis Toomey—A picture that is a very poor draw and will not please. Too slow and drags in too many spots. Had picture been properly directed and tempoed, might have proved more satisfactory. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 1-2.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Verna Hillie—Monogram westerns are okay—good sound. photography and plenty of action. Running time, 59 minutes. Played January 19.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Katherine De Mille, Duke Ellington and his Orchestra—I cannot say that I see anything wrong with this one. My opinion is that Mae West is the greatest show girl of them all. However, I showed this picture four days first part of week to just average business and not a single one of my customers ventured to tell me it is a good picture. Some did tell me they were disappointed. I hope Paramount will make an uncensored picture with Mae West and make it big so that the new picture will live down the results of this one. Mae West is entitled to a break and I hope she gets it.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon, Joseph Schildkraut, Gertrude Michael—Very well made and should be a credit to the industry, but not appreciated. Business only fair.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—Nice picture and everybody that saw it seemed to like it. Did not have much of a crowd as the weather was too cold. Young people will go for this one in a big way. Swell dance number in the department store scene by two youngsters. About average business. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 25-26.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and country patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—Went over very good. Lots of laughs and action, plenty of suspense.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneso, Ill. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Roos, Helen Mack, Jack Oakie—A lot of them came to see Penner. The picture has a fair story and some spectacular chorus sequences, but this Penner is a one-line comedian, and while a few liked him, the most of our audience didn't go for him on the screen at least. He is not versatile enough in my opinion to make a screen comedian. He may be all right if you don't see his actions, but the general opinion of our adult audience was that they would not care to see him again. Curiosity brought them, evidently.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Hack, Mary Brian—A swell musical show that did above average business and pleased the crowd. It is a natural. Moves at a fast pace with plenty of good music and laughs. Worth the best spot on any program. Running time, 78 minutes. Played January 13-14.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN: Cary Grant, Frances Drake, Edward Everett Horton, Charles Ray—While it had laughs, still the patrons did not seem to care for it. Not enough change of scenery. Have played lots worse pictures.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID, THE: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy—A very good program picture that pleased those who saw it. It did not draw, however. Evidently Tracy is through. Business slightly below average. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 15-16.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

LITTLE MISS MARKER: Shirley Temple, Adolphe Menjou—We had a chance to date this before it was released, but passed it up as we thought the title didn't mean anything. After it came out we couldn't get a week-end date until December. This Temple person has something that is more than a gift. This little tot makes this picture Paramount's best show for last season.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—A picture that pleased all classes and got not only the regulars into the theatre, but also those people who seldom attend. Excellent work by Miss Lord, together with perfect direction, made this a picture that will be long remembered by the theatre-going public. Business above average. Running time, 73 minutes. Played December 16-17.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—Will agree with all the other exhibitors' favorable reports on this splendid production. Clean. Splendid acting by entire cast. Extra good tonic for box office. Nothing but praise on this one. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 6-8.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—Very good picture of the "Classic" variety. Business ordinary, no draw.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts, Kent Taylor, Evelyn Venable—A real, honest-to-goodness small town wow. A down-to-earth story, superlatively cast, directed and played. Highbrow and roughneck, grown-ups and kids all went for it in a big way, and listen, brothers, it will pull them in a bit more than you expect. Thanks, Paramount, for a topnotcher. Running time, 9 reels.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Caroline Lambord, Shirley Temple—This picture should gross the exhibitor plenty of money and will if advertised right. The acting was marvelous and Shirley Temple proved to be a drawing card for the children. Cooper and Lombard make a good team. This picture will more than please the public. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 20-21.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Shirley Temple, Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard—Although we played this one late, it did satisfactory business and pleased. Business above average. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 6-7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields,—The lowest weekend gross in seven years due entirely to weather condition. The show isn't quite as good as the other Fields we have run. Perhaps we say this because we got so lonesome watching the show.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper, Fay Wray—Only a fair program picture. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—A delightful picture that pleased about 85 per cent. Picture did average business. The only drawback to this one was its setting and costumes. Gave it extra advertising, but failed to build the business to what I expected. Played December 30-31.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—Set for last June we postponed it several times and finally played in December. This pleased more than any of the numerous musicals Paramount produced last season.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

THIRTY DAY PRINCESS: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—Nice little program picture. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston, "Buster" Crabbe, Shirley Temple—An old one, but we hadn't played it A good western.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randalph Scott, Gail Patrick—This picture gave splendid satisfaction and drew much extra business. This picture will please those who do not usually care for westerns. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 25-26.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—An excellent Zane Grey western that pleased the holiday crowd. Too short, but it pleased most of the patrons and got the business. Business above average. Running time, 60 minutes. Played December 25-26.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Helen Morgan, David Holt—A picture that, although we gave it extra advertising, didn't draw. Cold hurt some, but did not account for all the lack of business. David Holt nothing like the sensation he was supposed to be. Business below normal. Running time, 66 minutes. Played December 6-7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ADVENTURE GIRL: Joan Lowell—I thought RKO went the limit when they turned out "Down to Their Last Yacht," but this one is worse. No characters talk. Some woman dialogues it, newsreel style, while the scenes flicker by. We didn't hide when they came out, as I have used up all the hiding places since signing RKO contract. Don't play it if your customers like talking pictures. This one is not. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 31.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: John Boles, Irene Dunne—Rather a hard one to report on. Undoubtedly a good show as far as your better class is concerned and suitable for a Sunday date. Much more entertaining to lady patrons than to the men and children that prefer thrills and action. If your patronage is made up mostly of country folk I would advise passing it up.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: Irene Dunn, John Boles—Excellent picture of its type. However, setting of major part of the film caused adverse comment. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 18.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General and small town patronage.

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: Irene Dunne, John Boles—This is a very good picture of its type, but did not click at the box office. It is a typical John Boles show and the story is based on the novel of the same name. It is a drama and strictly a woman's picture. It is adult entertainment and is sure to please the ladies. Played one day to poor business. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—Showed to four days good business first part of week. This is a perfect picture and the characters seem to step right out of the book. This is classed as one of the best this year and rightfully so.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A wonderfully fine picture that should really please every one. The only persons who might not appreciate it are the young fellows, whose opinion doesn't matter anyway. A distinct film achievement in its simplicity, a story so well told, most excellent photography. Can't see where it could possibly miss. Running time, 8 reels. Played January 6-7.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A pip of a picture. In my opinion, better than "Little Women." The best picture from RKO this year.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

BACHELOR BAIT: Pert Kelton, Stuart Erwin—Double billed it, but it's plenty good enough to run as a single feature.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Drew almost expenses against a heavy snowstorm. We didn't expect to get enough to pay the express charges. A costume picture that was well received. W. and W. may be slipping, but they are a long ways from being washed up here. We always can count on these boys to bring us business that is more than satisfactory.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Thelma Todd, Dorothy Lee, Noah Beery—Another bit of Wheeler-Woolsey nonsense that drew well the first day, then went into a grand tailspin. What is the matter with Wheeler and Dot Lee? They don't seem to have that sweet something that makes you like to have them ga ga at each other any more. It would have been the same to me had the boar eaten both of them. Running time, too much.—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—A good picture of its kind. Too much dancing for about 50 per cent of the ordinary people. Did not do so good at the box office. Not near the picture "Flying Down to Rio" was. Running time, 107 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—I was out of town, but the operator said the picture pleased. Running time, 64 minutes.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Circuit, McIntosh, S. D. General patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness, Grant Mitchell—Average program picture that pleased. Business average. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 26.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—A good football story and the work of the star very good. Satisfied them we got in to see it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE: Ricardo Cortez, Barbara Robbins, John Beal—A well-produced mystery picture that drew average business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played December 27-28.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE: Richard Dix—Basketball, President's ball, and most car roads closed gave us an awful beating on this. The picture drew several nice comments and Dix's voice records better in this than in his previous shows.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey, "Spanky" McFarland—"Spanky" takes the cake. Our audiences always go for the little fellows and this time was no exception. Business was normal and the patrons well satisfied with the offering. Played February 2.—Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—One of the best Wheeler and Woolsey have made and it is not full of smut and dirty talk. That goes to show that they can make pictures clean and just as entertaining. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—The best picture this team has ever produced. It kept the audience in laughter from beginning to end. A clean picture. The dirty cracks from Woolsey are missing in this one. Drew little better than average Sunday and Monday business, but I think this was due to the fact that their last few pictures haven't been so good. A few more like this should bring them back. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 27-28.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray—Our only real criticism of this picture is that there was some unnecessary drinking, even for a sophisticated picture such as this was. Not a Saturday night picture, still we had normal business and the patrons seemed well pleased. Played January 19.—Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD: Miriam Hopkins, Fay Wray, Joel McCrea, Reginald Denny—Another one of those mushy, lovey dovey, love chatter. Silly, no action, no comedy, sophisticated. No good for small town pictures. Lost plenty on it. Absolute flop the second night. Running time, 76 minutes. Played January 23-24.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—One of the best entertaining pictures we ever played. The star great and all the cast good. We did not do the business the picture deserved to do. Churches, schools and lodges all in the show business. Beno games and anything to queer the theatres, and they are doing it. Played January 27-28-29.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—A whiz bang for action and it certainly has box office plenty. Suitable for last part of week position on your program and you need not be afraid of it as it is well done.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—Here is a picture that gave complete satisfaction to my audience, to myself, to my box office and all concerned.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Different from the former pictures from this pair. Good entertainment and did average business at the box office. But did not draw any extra patronage as I thought it would. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 20-21.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

TWO ALONE: Jean Parker, Tom Brown—Here is one I paid for last summer and used this winter, and if ever a program picture was made for the small town this is it. Small town exhibitors, take my advice and grab this one. It is entertaining every foot of the way, and I was heaped with praises after the showing and for days afterwards. The kind of picture the simple folks love and the critics hate.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—Well done, RKO! Not as much action as the average western picture, but a good show that seemed to please. Drew extra business. Running time, 7 reels. Played February 1-2.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

State Rights

DEATH PARADE, THE: Colonel Albert L. Rule—Booked this picture on the strength of the review in February 3, 1934, Herald issue and am glad I did, as it is a splendid picture. It is produced by the same man who made "The Big Drive," but I believe it is a much better picture. Had it booked for two days; business was so good we held it an additional day. Book it. They will come in and see it, all classes, and the mouth-to-mouth advertising will surprise you. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 29-30-31.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

FIGHTING THROUGH: Reb Russell—A good western. Where westerns are liked, if there is such a place, use it. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 24.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

United Artists

BORN TO BE BAD: Loretta Young, Cary Grant—One of the reasons they kick at the "Movies" and also why they stay home sometimes. No excuse for this, and from a company that can do what 20th Century has proved it can do, it's all the more inexcusable. A nasty, senseless, inane production. All concerned should have known better—and they tell us we don't have to play a thing like this, but try and get out of it. Just another black mark for the producer and the theatre. Running time, 8 reels. Played January 2-3.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Very fine business on a very fine picture that will get money anywhere in the civilized world. Donat is a great actor and one of the few foreigners that will make good on the American screen. Understand he is to be "Anthony Adverse." Best possible choice in two continents for that role. Terrible press book, mats execrable, no mention of "world is mine," no big scenes in mat. Name "Dumas" all but suppressed.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson, Janet Beecher—Here is a mighty fine picture. A real evening's entertainment. Wallace Beery is good, except in the banquet scene. No person, either living or dead, could possibly be as dumb as he, but barring this ridiculous scene, it is very good and will please above the average. Virginia Bruce is wonderful in the part of Jenny Lind. Her song, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," is the best ever recorded on film. She has a wonderful voice and some smart producer will make a great star out of her some day. Buy the picture at a fair price and it will give satisfaction all around.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson, Janet Beecher—I can't say too much about this picture in entertaining value. I call it 100 per cent picture in entertainment. It has everything in it to entertain the mass of people. No actor could have done more with the character of Barnum than Beery did and the whole cast was fine. Direction extra. If you ain't booked it, buy it and it will satisfy all the old folks, anyway. Played February 3-4.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Tom Keene, Karen Morley—A flop. Keene wooden in the leading role. Directors should not be social propagandists. Press book bad. Press department tried to make this a gangster picture. They know two kinds of pictures, gangster and sex. All human activity must be billed as one or the other. Broadway and Hollywood have the same sleazy rented dinner clothes attitude toward life.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Universal

BLACK CAT, THE: Boris Karloff, Bela Lugosi, David Manners, Jacqueline Wells—Here is a thriller for all ages, that will go good especially in places where something spooky and chilly is liked. Excelent for weekend showing. Matinee draw about average, even with a stage show for the night. Played January 9.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

CHEATING CHEATERS: Fay Wray, Cesar Romero—Only a fair program picture, that meant nothing at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CHEATING CHEATERS: Cesar Romero, Fay Wray—A very good crook story. Played on a double bill and satisfied.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS: Chester Morris,

It performs two services: (1) It is a complete text on the proper way to keep your theatre accounts of expenses and receipts and (2) it contains enough pages for a full year's bookkeeping. Because it is so practical, time-saving and accurately simple, thousands of exhibitors have already exchanged their old, cumbersome and expensive methods for this easy, self-operating system. Its use is becoming more widespread each day.

Marian Nixon, Walter Woolf—A riot of laughter throughout. Morris as the practical joker turns in a grand performance, ably supported by Marian Nixon. Good Friday serial day attraction. Played January 18.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

LET'S BE RITZY: Lew Ayres, Patricia Ellis—This is a clean, wholesome picture that will please every one. Our patrons were pleased and told us so. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 15-16.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones—Although the business was not as good as might have been expected, the fair crowd liked this western better than most of the Buck Jones pictures because the necessary comedy enlivened it. Jones added to his following by this picture. It was also the first night of the Jones' serial, "The Red Rider." Played January 12.—Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel—A nice little show that was put in the highest price allocation. No particular draw so we had nothing left paying expenses. The best we can say is that it is a good little program show.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN: Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Victor Moore, Esther Ralston—Boys, here is a dandy picture. It sure has about everything to make a good evening's entertainment. It's a little old, but what of it? My people came to see it and liked it.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. General patronage.

RUSTLERS' ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—Good all-around western entertainment and I believe Tom's last show. Mix should make some more; he is still a great draw for the small tanks.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Elizabeth Young, Lois Wilson, Binnie Barnes—One of the best Universal program pictures we have played. Nothing big, but pleasing.—L. Gordon Evanson, Lyric Circuit, McIntosh, S. D. General patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Frank Morgan, Lois Wilson, Binnie Barnes—Dad gets the break in this one after the family realizes that he is the head of the family. Running time, 87 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Binnie Barnes, Frank Morgan, Lois Wilson, Elizabeth Young—I consider this one of the finest program pictures produced during the past year. It has a human, down-to-earth story whose simplicity makes it all the more dramatic. Binnie Barnes, the British importation, seems wholly American and has a likable personality. This film is suitable for the entire family.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon, Patricia Ellis, Phillip Reed—We showed this on Bank Night and I can truthfully say that this picture is 60 minutes of laughs from start to finish. Kibbee is excellent in his role and there isn't a dull moment in the picture. Running time, 60 minutes.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis, Margaret Lindsay—A fine picture. Pleased all that saw it and built up second day. Muni especially good and in a sympathetic role helped out. Setting good and looked like the real thing around the bordertowns like Tia Juana. Fine performance from Bette Davis. Starts out slow, but after it gets to moving, keeps their interest. If your fans like the players, you can't go wrong on this one. Running time, 90 minutes. Played December 30-31.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—A good mystery picture. Running time, 72 minutes. Played January 22-23.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—We played this picture on Bargain Nights and was a surprise to all. Our patrons expected to see a draw-and-draw-out detective story. Instead they were greatly pleased and it held their attention every moment. Warren William is going fine as a lawyer and detective. Running time, 75 minutes. Played January 22-23.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

DAMES: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell —Now here is one that will please all who see it; and if they don't, or didn't see it, well, it's just the exhibitor's fault. Not too much music, not too much dancing and back-stage nothing. There is comedy, a story and everything that goes for good entertainment. Punch this one; it will stand it.—Lamar Guthrie, Rogue Theatre No. 3, Tipton, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

DESIRABLE: Jean Muir, George Brent—An extra good program picture. Fine story and splendid acting by the whole cast. Played January 24-25.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FIREBIRD, THE: Verree Teasdale, Ricardo Cortez—A very good program picture. Played on a double bill and satisfied.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—A good western. Something different from the usual western. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 5.—Reuben Moore, Royal Theatre, Wauchula, Fla. Small town patronage.

I AM A THIEF: Ricardo Cortez, Mary Astor—This one is a dandy mystery melodrama. It has plenty of adventure. It is a very interesting picture, and will rate as good entertainment. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 30-31.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Glenda Farrell, Joan Blondell—I thought only a fair picture, but it seemed to please the above average attendance, so maybe it is better than fair. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 16-17.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Robert Armstrong, Osgood Perkins—A very funny program picture. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MADAME DU BARRY: Dolores Del Rio, Victor Jory—Can't say much for this one. Not much interest in it. And while it has gorgeous costumes of the period type, also sets that are to be marveled at, still it is what the folks stay away from. No draw whatever.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

MADAME DU BARRY: Dolores Del Rio, Reginald Owen, Victor Jory, Osgood Perkins, Verree Teasdale, Anita Louise—Grandly produced picture that failed to draw. Not a small town picture. Business below average. Running time, 77 minutes. Played January 23-24.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General—small town patronage.

MADAME DU BARRY: Dolores Del Rio, Victor Jory—No good for theatres in United States. Should go good in Europe.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Warren William—A very good picture, that pleased. It is interesting drama which includes romance. Warren William good. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 23-24.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID: James Cagney—OK entertainment. Would have chalked up a nice gross if the storm hadn't hit on the second day of the run. This one should satisfy any audience. Played January 19-20.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods—A flop due in part to the terrible mats in the press book. Press department evidently doesn't know that Irene Dunne is not a Warner star as they must have thought it was their sole task to sell her. No big scenes in mats or cuts. Terrible lobby photos. Irene Dunne is no box office. "Sweet Adeline" good name. Always in weak script in cuts and on photos when it should have been played up. Why does the press department think they named it "Sweet Adeline"?—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods—Good picture, though men did not seem to care for it. Fine swing scene and new faces in the chorus. Good comedy shots help to keep the picture moving. Title misled the majority of people as they thought it concerned the song of that name. Did not do above average business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 27-28-29.—Rex Flint, Lake Theatre, Baker, Mont. Small town and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

MICKEY'S MEDICINE MAN: Mickey McGuire Comedy—Kept the house in uproar of laughter. Plenty good, especially the little boy who does the Hula dance. Should advertise. Running time, 20 minutes.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

PUNCH DRUNKS: 3 Stooges—Here's one that really broke records for good old "belly laffs." These mugs are just plain goofy, but the laffs are there and how our weekend crowd enjoyed them. Running time, 2 reels.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: No. 2—Pretty good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SHOEMAKER AND THE ELVES, THE: Color Rhapsodies—One of the best cartoons we have ever had. The color work is very good and the subject matter pleasing to young and old. Running time, 8 minutes.—G. A. VanFradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming patronage.

Educational

AGGRAVATING PAPA: Plenty of good laughs in this comedy, also the Andy Clyde comedies. Running time, 19 minutes.—Garnett Stancil, Opera House, Fort Payne, Ala. Small town patronage.

GOLD GHOST, THE: Buster Keaton—I've often thought that a really funny two-reel comedy was a thing of the past. Here's one that has the laughs. Smartly handled all the way through and plenty of belly laffs for the customers. Honestly, this is a wow for a weekend show, particularly. Run it—they'll like it. Running time, 2 reels.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

HOUSE WHERE I WAS BORN, THE: Song Hit Stories Series—This offers only fair entertainment, featuring Sylvia Froos and Frank Luther singing several old-time selections. Not as good as the last one, but will pass for one day. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JUST A CROWN: Terry-Toons—A very clever little cartoon. We are always delighted with Terry-Toons.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MOUNTAIN MELODY: Song Hit Stories—Very good singing. A good short subject. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NIFTY NURSES: Musical Comedies—At last a really good two-reeler from Educational. Running time, 20 minutes.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

PALOOKA FROM PADUCAH: Buster Keaton—Another really funny two-reel comedy from Buster Keaton. The wrestling stuff will get them, and what I mean, it's a good 2-reel laff-getter. More power to you, Buster. Haven't had you on our screen for some time, but this one and "The Gold Ghost" made a hit with our folks. Running time, 2 reels.—H. Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

PARDON MY PUPS: Shirley Temple—Here is a wonderful little short subject that is a drawing card in itself. It is good enough to bolster up any kind of a poor picture. Our audiences were delighted and so were we.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

First Division

THRONE OF THE GODS: Lowell Thomas—A long-drawn-out travelogue about the same thing from beginning to end. Why they produce such things I can't understand. Pay for it and forget about it. Running time, 30 minutes.—M. S. Porter, Orpheum Theatre, Nelsonville, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

MAGIC CARPET SERIES: We are putting in one of these travelogues each week and consider them interesting and educational.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

NAVIES OF THE WORLD: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—This is a honey. It is both interesting and entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—Harold Haubein, Cozy Theatre, Lockwood, Mo. Small town patronage.

MGM

APPLES TO YOU: Musical Comedy Series—I sat through 20 minutes in disgust, and felt like going home and cancelling every one of our Metro shorts. Nothing but drinking and idiocy, and not even a laugh, or a single good thought. Running time, 20 minutes.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

BENNY FROM PANAMA: Musical Comedies—Very good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BUM VOYAGE: Todd-Kelly—Very good Todd-Kelly comedy with plenty of amusing situations.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FIRST ROUND-UP, THE: Our Gang—This is a very good comedy from Our Gang that seemed to please both young and old. This is just the type of material for Our Gang and please give them more like this. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: These are just fair. Seems to hold interest, and are at times realy amusing.—I. Raeburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HONKY-DONKEY: Our Gang—Very funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

I'LL BE SUING YOU: Todd-Kelly—This is about average entertainment from this comedy team. A few laughs and that is about all. Metro should secure

AND HATS OFF TO AMERICA'S SHOWMEN!

FROM SCREENLAND MAGAZINE, APRIL ISSUE.

Editorials are being written about it. Critics are pouring out their hearts in praise of it.

We reprint on this page the high honor which has been bestowed upon it by Miss Delight Evans, editor of Screenland Magazine. It is one of many similar honors and Leo happily extends his thanks to all.

He takes this opportunity to express his deepest appreciation to his exhibitor friends for their brilliant presentation of his beloved picture to the public. Not in years has there been so thorough and so successful an exploitation of a motion picture. The record of extended runs is greater than on any previous M-G-M picture.

Happily indeed a great motion picture wins its true reward in patronage at the box-office!

All Honor to All Those who Made "David Copperfield" the Miracle Motion Picture! Thanks to the Courageous Producer, the Brilliant Director, and the Distinguished Cast who Captured the True Spirit of Charles Dickens' Masterpiece!

IT IS easy for us, watching "David Copperfield" on the screen today, to admire and marvel at its perfection. But stop to think for just a moment of the terrific two years' work, energy and devotion that went into its production! First, the courage of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in undertaking it. Second, the painstaking adaptation. Third, the flawless casting. And through it all the genius of director George Cukor, who has taken his fine material and woven it into an immortal motion picture. Cukor has contributed more than polished technique, more than clever craftsmanship; he has expressed a rare sensitiveness and understanding and humanity worthy of Dickens himself. Indeed, if D. W. Griffith may be called the first great director for giving the screen most of the dramatic devices still in use today: the close-up, the struggle, the chase—then surely George Cukor is the second great director—who, achieving technical perfection effortlessly, goes many steps further and re-creates the inner beauty that is always hiding in the hearts and souls of men, waiting for the great artists to reveal it. Hail Cukor!

better story material for their shorts. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE DAY: Charley Chase—And it is funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MIDSUMMER MUSH: Charley Chase—This is about average entertainment from Charley Chase. There are plenty of laughs, but entirely too much repetition of comedy situations. However, it will please the average fan. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MOTORCYCLE COSSACKS: Oddities Series—Mexican cops do trick stuff on their motorcycles. Pete Smith announces. It helps balance the program. —John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SPEAKING OF RELATIONS: Irvin S. Cobb—This is one of the best Metro shorts we have played in some time. Cobb is very good and this is a bit different from the usual run of slapstick shorts. Let's have more like this. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SPITE FLIGHT: Willie Whopper—This is a fairly good cartoon comedy that pleased. These cartoons are not as good as some of the others, but as a whole they offer good entertainment and please. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TOYLAND BROADCAST: Happy Harmonies Series—Colored cartoon. Very fine one-reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SOCIETY NOTES: Headliners—Terrible or worse. Would like to crown the director like the "dook" was crowned in the fadeout of picture. Would suggest Hollywood provide nice round padded cells for directors that produce such silly contraptions. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. A. Klink, Primghar Theatre, Primghar, Iowa. Small town and rural patronage.

WATER RODEO: Grantland Rice Sportlight Series —A good one of motor boat thrills.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WE AIM TO PLEASE: Popeye the Sailor—Okay Popeye.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

One of the tieups is with the "Black Mask," mystery magazine, involving local Clue Clubs, a miniature mystery contest based on the month's film and a full page advertisement in "Ranch Romances," affiliated magazine. Two vacation cruises to Bermuda will be the exhibitor prizes. The films include "White Cockatoo," "Case of the Curious Bride," "While the Patient Slept," "Florentine Dagger," "Case of the Lucky Legs," "Patient in Room 18," "Murder by an Aristocrat," "Case of the Velvet Claws" and "Green Cat."

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE VICE PRESIDENT HONORS US

Vice President John Nance Garner has graciously consented to personally present at his Washington offices the 1934 Quigley Grand Awards to Managers Bill Hendricks and Morris Rosenthal. The presentation will be made Friday in Washington.

The honor that Mr. Garner confers does not necessarily mark an unusual accomplishment of Motion Picture Herald to signalize the ever-widening importance of the Competitions in the sphere of the motion picture. We feel rather that in so doing the Vice President takes this opportunity to indicate his approval of the ceaseless battle against the forces of depression waged by theatremen of this country who by encouraging merchants in other lines to cooperate on mutually profitable exploitations are aiding national business to a speedy and healthy recovery.

REASON TO BRAG

As has been observed, the relations of a manager with his local press—his standing in community affairs, usually determine the prestige of his theatre. And further substantiation of this now comes to us from ad chief Charley Winchell, of Minnesota Amusement, who forwards tear sheets from Huron, S. D., and Duluth, Minn., which have to do with showmen of that circuit.

The first devotes a half column lamenting the departure of Byron McElligott and recites that manager's accomplishments at the State in Huron which brought him a well deserved promotion. The Duluth tear sheet carries a picture and recounts the election of Manager Harry Billings to the chamber of commerce presidency in the nearby city of Virginia.

Of McElligott's newspaper send-off, Minnesota Amusement's head man John J. Friedl stated the article indicated the importance of managers establishing themselves in their localities. To Billings, Friedl wrote congratulations, offered assistance.

Says Winchell: "We have always bragged about our manpower in this Division—thus we pass these stories on to you with pride." Which is probably the reason why Minnesota Amusement has that kind of manpower.

THE RICHARDSON BOOK

Theatremen will greet with anticipation the announcement of the forthcoming sixth edition of the inimitable F. H. Richardson's "Hand Book of Projection," with a complete sound section written by Aaron Nadel. "Rich" of course needs no introduction to our readers. He has been around for many fruitful years and his writings in Motion Picture Herald and Better Theatres are a constant source of practical and authoritative information for showmen as well as projectionists. Nadel is also established as an important figure in the field of sound and an author of no small repute.

Managers today who do not possess at least a working knowledge of their projection equipment are obviously handicapped and for those who aim to know more, the Richardson book is highly recommended.

VIEWING IT PRACTICALLY

There is food for thought in Gene Curtis' statement with which on a following page he precedes the first of three articles from his pen on the usages of radio in theatre advertising. Says the able sales promotion chief of Famous Players-Canadian:

" . . . Although we realize that it is our own worst competition, yet we must recognize the position of radio as an advertising and entertainment force and utilize this opposition . . . by turning it to our advantage in selling theatre tickets."

While we do not look with favor upon studio and theatre cooperation that makes possible any further inroads of radio entertainment upon box office receipts, there is no denying that this medium may be employed to some extent for profit. Gene's viewpoint may not be entirely palatable, but it is nonetheless practical.

The ticket stub indicated she had been in the house about an hour, says Warren Slee, telling of the matron who wanted a refund because she had seen the picture. Queried as to why the request had not been made sooner, the patron gave the unique excuse that she was wearing her reading glasses and thus it had taken her all that time to recognize the familiar feature.

"If You Can't Beat 'Em, Then Jine 'Em"

When Tom Simmons, Dunlap Theatre, Clarksville, Ark., learned that the Ford dealers were contemplating running industrial shorts in a local community hall in direct opposition to his show, he called on the agency and sold them the idea of using the short in conjunction with theatre's regular program. Not only did the auto people fall in line, but paid for a quarter page ad.

Newspaper-Radio Vote Contest Clicks for Gross

Mickey Gross managed to stir up a lot of what it takes with a radio contest on "One Night of Love" at the Orpheum, Sioux City, Iowa, in which entrants sang one chorus of song hit from the picture. Slant was tied in with local paper by means of entries run in advance and stories to build up interest. Stunt was put on night before opening and next day paper also ran a coupon good for 100 votes, readers being asked to fill these in for those they favored on the contest program. Cash prizes were given and winners appeared on stage opening night.

Stores were tied in with coop ads on Grace Moore, and others ran windows, one plugging the display in heralds distributed house to house. Walgren's, the drug chain, gave autographed photos of the star, carrying publicity on this in stores, windows, ads, and radio program.

Mickey obtained cooperation from principals by receiving permission for distribution of literature at schools, and superintendent's recommendation of the picture was announced over school program.

Manager A. Esberg and publicist Jack Chalman, at the Aztec, San Antonio, Texas, tied up with toy manufacturer for the "Barnum" date and promoted miniature auto, driven by midget who toured principal streets and school neighborhoods, distributing "lucky bucks." Each fake bill contained number and opening day holder of lucky number won the auto.

Feldman Broadcasts Airplane Screening

Reported to be a first time is the stunt put over by Joe Feldman, ad head of Harry Kalmine's Warner Theatres Pittsburgh division, whereby a combination broadcast and screening of "Devil Dogs" was held during the run of a regular passenger air-liner between Washington and Pittsburgh. The flight was arranged as an advance tie-up on the openings of the picture in both spots, Frank La Falce taking care of affairs from the Capital, with Mort Blumenstock supervising.

General McDougal, Senator Guffey and Gene Vidal, were some of the celebrities who took part, their comments and some of the dialog broadcast while the screening took place at 5,000 feet. Newspapers in both cities gave the stunt generous coverage.

Harman Makes Up "Lily" Style Layout

A five-column layout and story was netted by Manager Homer H. Harman on the angle he thought up of planting a feature on Claudette Colbert's measurements in conjunction with his date on "Gilded Lily" at the Shubert-Rialto, in St. Louis.

Homer sold the idea to one of the dailies on the thought that the star's measurements would be of interest to women readers, especially since Claudette rates so high in that territory. Bill Pine, at the Paramount studios obtained the necessary figures and these were included in a still of Colbert in gym costume on weighing scale.

This shot was planted in the center of the layout and flanked on each side by photos of the star in costumes she wears in the picture, the styles described at length in the accompanying story, which of course included the title and other pertinent information which had to do with the perfection of the star's physical proportions and highlights of the picture.

All in all, it was an excellent piece of work, and Homer passes it along for duplication in other spots.

Star Attends Theatre Party

Frankie Darro, star of Mascot's "Little Men," made personal appearances recently in Los Angeles, distributing candy and stamp albums, the latter in a tieup to stimulate interest in the stamp clubs, named after him, being organized throughout the country. ## Diapers Identify Jones' "Quint" Date

Well, there's all ways of doing it, and Manager Johnny Jones, Southern-Columbus, Ohio, forwards his campaign on the Dionne Quintuplets short to show how he utilized a "must not" that probably got him more than if he had been free to do as he wished on the showing.

Due to contractual restrictions, exhibitors were not allowed to use any stills or photographs of the quintuplets in their advertising. However, one of the Columbus papers had the exclusive on the photos, and the editors were willing to listen to reason.

So Johnny rounded up five diapers and hung them on a line from his marque, which of course tied in perfectly with his newspaper copy. And to make sure that the town would know about the gag, the paper ran a three-column head and story, with shot of the stunt.

Jones states further that as there are to be additional reels of the famed youngsters, the same tieup can be arranged, especially where a local paper has the exclusive on the Dionne photos.

Solomon Plants Toy Quints In Infants' Wear Window

Speaking of the Dionne youngsters, Dick Wright, Warner Theatres Ohio district manager, reports a window that attracted in Massillon, where five-and-ten tied in with Irv Solomon, of the Lincoln, in that spot.

Toy bed was set up and in it were planted five "quint" dolls. Copy at head and foot tied in the date at the theatre reading: "We carry a full line of infants' wear, for one or five." Rest of display was given over to baby clothes.

Uses Egyptian Statues To Exploit "Cleopatra"

Over in Spain where those theatremen manage to inject a whale of a lot of unusual color into their exploitations, there was quite a campaign put on for "Cleopatra" at the Coliseum, in Barcelona, by M. T. Messeri, Paramount manager in Spain.

For instance, the unusual display out front (see photo) that included reproductions of statues of Egyptian kings and decorations of the picture's period. Egyptian friezes and hieroglyphics rounded out an out-of-the-ordinary effect. Same idea was carried out in foyer and for street bally, Messeri put out three brilliantly painted chariots.

CRULL, DEARTH SHARE HONORS FOR JANUARY

New York Theatreman Awarded Quigley Silver; Bronze Goes to British Columbia Entrant

by A-MIKE VOGEL

The expanse of a continent separates the two winners of the Quigley plaques for the first month of the 1935 Competitions. The State of New York joins the Dominion of Canada, both for the second time since the inception of the Award project, in taking down the Big Prizes.

Manager Harry W. Crull, Valencia Theatre, Jamaica, Long Island, is awarded the Quigley Silver for his campaign on "Flirtation Walk." Manager J. Lloyd Dearth, Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, British Columbia, is designated for the Quigley Bronze for his campaign on "Kid Millions."

That's how they finished by the decision of the judges for January: W. G. Van Schmus, managing director, Radio City Music Hall; Harry H. Thomas, president, First Division Pictures, and John Dowd, director of advertising and publicity, RKO Theatres. The majority vote established Crull at the top, but only by a slight margin, Dearth breaking the tape just a step behind. Their campaigns as usual will be reported in our next issue.

The Race Was Close

On the whole, the competition for January was very keen, with not too much to choose from all down the line. For instance, the two First Mention winners for the month were always in hailing distance. They menaced the top men right along, and were dangerous to the very finale.

Manager Harry Black, now with the New England Poli Theatres, scored a First for his entry on "County Chairman," put on while he was at the Rialto, Glens Falls, N. Y. Manager Roscoe Drissel, who has been clicking consistently in the Competitions, was also rated a First for his campaign on "David Copperfield," at Loew's, Wilmington, Del.

The January Honorable Mention list for January is headed by Louis Charninsky, of Dallas, Texas; Sam Gilman, of Harrisburg, Pa.; and Dwight Van Meter, also of Wilmington, Del. Seven other Honorables are also on the list, the full listing of all those finishing in honor rank being detailed in column to left.

As has been told, two monthly plaques are being awarded in 1935, a silver for first, and a bronze for second. This was decided upon due to the great number of neck-and-neck finishes during 1934, and the above ratings in January immediately justifies this move.

Sheepskin certificates in diploma form for the Firsts and Honorables are also a 1935 innovation, and these imposing documents are now going forward to the winners.

The February drive is now in full swing. Entries are already being received. Who'll cop the two plaques this month?

Argentinians Exploit Spanish Picture

Spanish language pictures are plentifully exploited down in the Argentine, according to Al Deane, of Paramount, who tells us of a citywide campaign put on in Buenos Aires for "Cuesta Abajo," playing day-and-date in 10 local houses. Accompanying photo shows street car bally carrying loudspeaker which played the hit numbers from the picture sung by the Spanish star, Carlos Gardel.

Same picture received a lot of buildup in Mendoza, another Argentine city, where Senor J. Cetram, of the Gran Theatro Avenida, staged a street parade with boys displaying theatre banners. Special front was also used on the date in this spot.

Deering Ties In "Belle" On Paper Photo Stunt

Crowds gathered at Manager Francis Deering's State, Memphis, were camera'd by leading daily on opening night of "Belle of Nineties," shots being published following day. Individual heads were circled in white and to those who identified themselves, two dollar prizes were given.

Accompanying photo shows "chair warmer" firmly and patiently ensconsed in his seat at curb three days before, waiting for picture to open. ## Gates Engineers "Whoduz" Contest

Arnold Gates, Park, Cleveland, Ohio, for his "Student Tour" date tied in with bus company and schools for sightseeking trip around Cleveland as prizes on a "Whoduz" contest. Ten questions were listed in newspapers such as "whoduz sell hand-made linen pillow cases at, etc., etc.," and winners were entitled to bus trip and tickets to show, answers found in ads scattered throughout paper.

Contest among tap dancing pupils was arranged with tickets to children turning in greatest number of names and addresses of those to whom they had spoken of the engagement at the Park. Neat way of swelling mailing list, incidentally.

Tacoma Joins Stevenson To Greet "Goo Goo"

Following the "College Rhythm" press book suggestion, Rex Stevenson, Blue Mouse Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., arranged for Penner's duck to be shipped from Hollywood. Wire acquainting him of its arrival was blown up and used in lobby. Miss Tacoma, together with local personalities and newspaper photogs, met "Goo Goo" at the station. Pictures and stories broke dailies.

Rex also tied in with bakers' association who declared a Tacoma Bread Week and every baker in town carried theatre plug (see photo). Man on street led duck around and handed out promoted duck soup candy bars. Youngsters on corners with toy ducks distributed gratis life savers in imprinted envelopes yelling "Wanna buy a duck?"

"I Talked with WALTER DE WITT"

There Is No Prescription Which May Be Followed In Operation of Theatre, Lionel H. Keene Is Told

by WALTER DE WITT,
City Manager, Loew's, Evansville, Ind.

Now, then, take a fellow such as myself way out here in the sticks; and in this case, that means where your friends can't enjoy a bowl of tripe or hot biscuits without taking some to the neighbors. I have to be a sociable fellow whether I like it or not, but if you don't like it, the sticks are no place for you. Being a "big shot" just isn't in the cards. If Mrs. Fane's Baby is Stolen, you have to cry on every one's shoulder and by this same token, if Bob Suits is going to marry little Eva Tinkleberry, then you have to rejoice with the rest of the populace. Every one must be able to tell you how to run your theatre and you have to be able to tell them that they are 100 per cent right no matter what the suggestion may be. This is not diplomacy, it's just darn good reasoning—for the customer is always right, at least the first and second time.

Is Against First Person Attitude

Being nurse maid or caretaker of a half million dollars worth more or less of theatrical property is not just a cinch, but neither is it any harder than one chooses to make it. I can't answer for any one but "yours truly" and I have always considered it an all important duty first, last and always to be 100 per cent loyal to the company I happen to be serving. There are numerous instances arising daily which require sound business judgment, and it is up to the manager to decide just what is best. Usually decisions are made and carried out without thought of anything other than a routine job. The manager feels and knows his responsibility to his firm, and as a rule there are few hardships, trying and unpleasant undertakings which the manager will not attempt, if he feels that his company will profit by his actions.

I have never favored a first person attitude of "blow your own horn" complex. It has been always my ambition to serve well those who have confidence in my executing the charge of duties. Criticism never hurt any one, providing it was of a constructive nature; but I have known the "oil" to be spread too thick and to cause that portion of the anatomy located midway between the ears to spread beyond a healthy state. In my opinion, it is not entirely unjust to sing a man's praise, but too much may prove fatal. To me the greatest praise is that which remains unheralded and unsung.

Stresses Consideration of Staff

Consideration for those about you, with whom you work and with whom you deal, is perhaps the common sense method of operating any business. There is perhaps no prescription which may be followed in the operation of a theatre. It is the one business different from any other. Each new show is a new piece of merchandise, and how that merchandise is sold is largely up to the manager. Common sense exploitation should be paramount in every instance. I am inclined to believe that in the majority of cases shows are over exploited. A great deal of money is wasted in this fashion because managers are over-anxious to make a showing. Heralds, for instance, unless they are of an unusual novelty type, are wasted money and energy. I have seen the streets in the vicinity of theatres (not only the one where I am located) simply littered with printed pieces which patrons have had pushed upon them only to be dropped one moment later in the gutter. House-to-house distribution has its good points, but I doubt seriously whether the business derived from such a method of exploitation warrants the cost.

I am constantly bombarded with questions concerning such and such a picture, which strains to the utmost my memory of what I have read in a meager way in trade papers. This is often something that has to do with a picture that is being considered for production. Generally the person asking the question can tell who the stars are, and the nature of the story. So what? Simply this: persons making such inquiries derive their information from fan magazines which the manager does not see or with which he has no time to familiarize himself. An argument to that is that the manager should know what it is all about. I disagree with that point in that if the manager is deeply enough interested in what he has at hand for the purpose of selling his wares at the present time, his attention is not wandering to something so remote as a contemplated picture which has not even reached the production stage and will not be released for some time to come.

Blasts Fan Mag. "Hooey"

I can never bring myself down to a movie fan magazine follow-upper, for the reason that I do not think it is necessary to the well being and operation of the theatre. Questions put to the manager regarding coming production should be well enough fixed in the manager's mind to answer intelligently certain facts pertaining to the picture or pictures in question; but to go into detail about "who is married to who and do they have any children" is pure "hooey." It may be well remembered that the general show going public or prospective customers as it were, are well enough informed on whether the picture or show you have for sale will be found to their liking. You can't fool them with a lot of fancy exploitation and press matter. The principle of such exploitation is to let Mr. and Mrs. Public know when and where the picture is playing—how this is done is largely the individual manager's problem; but I'll lay a wager that those or at least the majority of patrons who turn out for the show will know plenty as to whether they will like it or not before their mind is made up to see the performance.

"Kid Millions" Stunts From Round Tablers

Bob Suits, Colonial Theatre, Reading, erected an attractive banner and 25 foot by 14 foot head of Cantor over his marquee (see photo). Eyes were animated and could be seen from great distance. Cashiers' chairs in restaurants carried small cards with copy "we recommend today, etc., etc."

In Columbus, Ohio

The press book Turkey Talk Contest was staged with leading market by Russell Bovim at Loew's United Artists, Columbus, Ohio. Store used picture of Cantor holding turkey in all their ads. Montgomery Ward free kiddie show put on in store auditorium and Russ immediately stepped forward with "Kid Millions" hats for each child attending. Bovim also staged parade to theatre, kids carrying banners and chanting "we want Cantor."

Columbus Auditorium in conjunction with radio station gives a square dance every Saturday night, so Russ offered loving cup from Eddie Cantor for winning couple which was awarded from stage of theatre.

And in Bridgeport, Conn.

Matt Saunders, at the Poli, arranged orphan show with ice cream company distributing window streamers to dealers in Bridgeport and vicinity and tickets to all children attending show entitling them to cream at dealers. Delivery trucks carried banners. Dolls were given in coloring contest, as were Cantor "phoney" money to all school children. Door hangers placed on all stores on Sunday with "closed" copy.

To Baltimore, Md.

With Herb Morgan, publicist at the Century, where Mayor Jackson proclaimed "ice cream week." Booth was erected in lobby to distribute gratis cones to all kids attending during the week. Fake Cantor money was given to cashiers at busy counters in downtown area who passed out the "phonies" with change. Sound bally consisted of bannered ice cream company's float of huge cream brick and carton with recording amplifier playing tunes.

Ending at Houston, Texas

With W. V. Taylor at the State, tying up local banks with window display copy and heralds reading "You too can 'Kid Millions' if you have a savings account with us." Five and ten's used two song pluggers singing hits and stores were decorated with special three sheets.

THEATRE RADIO ADVERTISING

In First Article of His Series Canadian Publicist Discusses: 'What Type of Program Is Best?'

by GENE CURTIS,
Sales Promotion Director
Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd.

Today radio is recognized as a very effective medium to supplement newspaper advertising for theatres. Although we realize that it is our own worst competition, yet we must recognize the position of radio as an advertising and entertainment force and utilize this opposition which is going to exist anyway, by turning it to our own advantage in selling theatre tickets.

When considering the use of radio the first question is "What Type of Program Is Best?" These can be grouped in six general classes including Spot Announcements, Musical Programs, Hollywood Gossip, Dramatizations, Electrical Transcriptions and Exploitation Tie-ups.

Spot Announcements

Most theatres using "spots" favor regular straight announcements at a certain time every day. These are best with other items of local importance such as a news broadcast, farm reports to reach rural patrons, or on a regular program of shopping news for women. When paying for "spots" insist that they come on at exactly the same time every day.

Another use of "spots" is to have maybe 10 of them throughout the day to advertise an outstanding attraction, something of particular interest to radio listeners, to quickly publicize a new booking or something of that sort. These are best if you use short announcements sandwiched in with the station identification between popular programs.

Spot announcements are on and off so quickly that they must be scheduled at a time when they will be heard. Haphazard isolated announcements are wasteful.

Music and Announcements

A wider scope is given on longer programs using music, together with theatre announcements. Many theatres having organs make very good use of them for radio. Other programs originate from studios using a studio organ, piano, orchestra, other local talent or phonograph records. This type includes more entertainment and is over a longer period of time, giving more than one opportunity of having the advertising message heard. Naturally numbers from coming pictures would be used if the features include any music.

Broadcasting direct from the stage of a theatre which has live talent, is often a dangerous practice, for although listeners will hear the applause and laughter of the audience, it has the distinct disadvantage that material as presented on the stage is not usually good radio entertainment. The pickup is apt to be bad and what appeals only to the eyes on the stage is entirely lost on radio. It is always advisable to arrange a test before actually going on the air with a stage broadcast, but the best plan is to pick the most suitable talent from the stage show and have them work from a studio.

The Hollywood program is also popular as it permits the presentation of advertising in a newsy manner. Many managers use the "News of Studio and Screen" publicity sent from the various film studios, together with news items from trade papers and material from press sheets on current attractions. Keep the material clean and when giving gossip about stars, leave out reference to divorces and other troubles into which our stars sometimes get themselves.

Some managers do this broadcasting themselves, which is a good way to establish a personal contact between himself as manager of the theatre and the public. But whether the manager does it himself, or has some one else do it, it is vital that the voice be pleasing and able to hold interest among those listening in.

Dramatizations of Radio Scripts

This type of program has certain obvious advantages, but on the other hand has certain disadvantages. Scripts are not available on all pictures. It is advisable to study the script to make sure that it will help the picture rather than harm it, as might happen if the script is poorly prepared or if it tells too much of the story. The best radio dramatizations are those which present a highlight from the picture, but leave the listeners guessing so as to make them come into the theatre to get the rest of the story. If the prepared script is too long, or tells too much of the story, it is best to cut out the unnecessary portions.

Electrical Transcriptions

On some of the bigger pictures, particularly musicals, electrical transcription recordings are available which usually make very good programs, plus the advantage that recordings are made with the actual voices of the stars themselves and with the orchestras that worked in the picture. They can also be used on theatre loudspeakers, and in phonograph record stores.

The subject of "Exploitation Tie-ups" will be treated separately. In the next issue we will try to answer such questions as "Should I Use Radio," and if so what type of program, length of program, best hours, and checking results.

The Elks cooperated by plugging Garbo styles, in fashion show put on by lodge, and oriental shop loaned Chinese pieces for attractive lobby display.

Mayer Ties In Radio With "Little Minister"

Through the cooperation of local broadcasting company, Louis E. Mayer, Mainstreet Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., for his "Little Minister" date ran a contest in which ten questions were asked over the air regarding incidents and personalities in the story. Answers were mailed to station and first two hundred answering correctly were rewarded with Hepburn photographs.

To stimulate the competitive spirit of his kid patronage, Joe Salmon, Riverside Theatre, New York City, in connection with "County Chairman," put on an Abraham Lincoln contest, awarding engraved photos of Lincoln and tickets to first 25 children correctly answering list of questions pertaining to the emancipator's career. Here are the questions: 1. Where was Abraham Lincoln born? What day and year? 2. How did he receive his education? 3. What did he originally study to be? 4. What was he noted for? 5. What was his nick-name? 6. What was the greatest document ever issued in 1862? 7. What was his wife's name? 8. What was the name of the theatre where he was assissinated? 9. By whom was he assassinated? 10. How many presidents preceded him? Name them. 11. What famous speech did Abraham Lincoln make?

Last question was "What is playing at the Riverside." Entry blanks were available from cashier or any member of staff. This same stunt might be worked for Washington's Birthday, or others.

Journal Mails Photos Of Crawford for Rotsky

George Rotsky, Palace, Montreal, Quebec, Canada, tied in with shopping journal which ran picture on front cover of Joan Crawford as she appeared in "Chained" and invited Crawford fans to write to theatre for autographed pictures of the star. First hundred received the photos and their names were listed in the following week's issue of the journal, and undoubtedly added to George's mailing list. Paper also paid for multigraphing, addressing and mailing of pictures.

Ciggie manufacturer used radio dramatization on their program, notice appearing on radio page. Theatre gave photos of Crawford to department store for distribution with all cosmetic purchases.

On "What Every Woman Knows," George sent letters to all Scottish organizations, and in addition, Scottish night was arranged with choir of 50 singing native ballads.

Exhibitors and operators alike are watching with interest the trend of affairs in the local operators union following the slaying of Tom Maloy and the subsequent announcement by George E. Browne, president of the IATSE, that the parent organization will run the local offices for the time being. Browne's statement left little unsaid, indicating a general house cleaning in the local's affairs and some new deal policies docketed for the future.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 118, No. 8 February 23, 1935

NEW TUNE

OFFICIAL Washington has heard and said a lot about the motion picture industry, including babies' salaries in Hollywood, block booking, sin and shame, ad lib., all complaints and plaints, always something wrong.

But last week Motion Picture Herald's ebullient A-Mike Vogel, of the Managers' Round Table section, led an expedition to Washington for the presentation of the Quigley Grand Awards for showmanship by the Vice-President of these United States, before an array of the nation's first rank statesmen.

Perchance in some degree such events can be expected to convey to official Washington a suggestion that the motion picture is an industry entitled to serious consideration for other purposes than taxation and publicity-seeking legislation.

WE AGREE

THE other day, February 13, to be precise, as we usually are, we picked up the day's issue of our versatile contemporary, The Film Daily, and in a column of comment by Mr. Don Carle Gillette we read:

> The unprejudiced, unfettered and clear-eyed motion picture critics of the country will always constitute the best court of standards for judgment of films, acting, direction and the cinema in general.

That reminded us of something, and sent us into a Film Daily file, until we came eventually to a column entitled "Critics" signed by Mr. Jack Alicoate, under date of January 29, in which he remarked:

> In the first place, nothing can be done about critics. In general they are like poor relations. We shall constantly have them with us, for, like Tennyson's brook, they run on forever. Sometimes to cheer us, sometimes to irritate us. There are perhaps some 50 motion picture critics in the country worthy of the name. The rest, hundreds of 'em, are either going or coming.

Anyway, they get polled, annually.

REPORTS from Chicago indicate that the Dionnes, parents of Canada's world famed quintuplets, have not proved a draw on the stage of the Oriental, the big Loop theatre. Any good script writer can explain; the answer is that there are five reasons why there is no suspense.

ABOUT CHAINS

NOT so long ago there was a big word in this industry—"decentralization"—with its bearing entirely on the circuit theatre situation. A number of things have been done about it, but the state of public good-will with reference to circuit operations will still bear attention.

In that connection it is of interest to read certain utterances from Mr. Isroy Norr of Ames & Norr, public relations counsel. Incidentally Mr. Norr is public relations counsel to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. He has published a pamphlet entitled "Public Confidence and How to Lose It." Curiously there is no reference to the motion picture, but anent our subject he says:

> Many chain store executives are aware that the picture created in the public mind, with reference to such institutions, is of a huge hybrid creature, sprawling over the nation, its head in Wall Street, and its claws in every city, town and hamlet. . . .
> Thoughtful leaders in the field must replace the vision of a national octopus with the reality of a series of local institutions, closely integrated in local life and intimately responsive to local opinion, which pass on the benefit of national organization to the locality in which they operate, in terms of economy, enlightened employe relations and genuine social service. . . .

"Closely integrated in local life" and "intimately responsive to local opinion" are phrases descriptive of the best and really successful theatre operations of today. They apply interestingly to the operations of those outstanding showmen who have currently won the honors of the Quigley awards, sponsored by Motion Picture Herald through the Managers' Round Table.

And this all pertains to those indispensable elements of showmanship which can not be put in the can with the film.

ADD inventory of gadgets: A Chicago inventor announces a device to measure audience reactions. The "Photopolygraph" is said to record "the exact quantity of emotion" felt by the person under test. There ought to be one in Mr. Joseph Breen's office.

Mr. George Bernard Shaw in a London interview demands sex in pictures and says: "I am old and I know what I am talking about."

Mr. Shaw is wrong. He is old and he knows what he is remembering about.

DROP PURCHASE PLAN

ANTI-TRUST ACTIONS

Anti-trust suits brought in Chicago by Jack Rubin of Public Theatres and James Roden of the Astor, against major distributors and circuits were continued to this weekend in federal court. Defendant answers have been filed to the charge of preventing 10-cent double featuring. The cases are to be tried together because of their similarity. . . .

EVEREST FILMED

As a three-reel special, Educational will release pictures of the air dash of the Houston-Mount Everest flight over the peak. A group of English fliers, sponsored by Lady Houston, achieved the hazardous goal in two flights, with S. R. Bennett at the camera. For the first time the average man may look down, via the screen, upon the towering 29,000-foot peak. The film is called "Wings Over Everest." . . .

MARTIN RESIGNS

Resigning as business manager, former secretary-treasurer Lester F. Martin of Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska will enter private business in Des Moines and Nevada. ## ROXY EPISODE

Another episode in the theatrical adventures of Roxy (Samuel Lionel Rothafel) will come to an end about the close of this month, when the Warner Mastbaum, which reopened under the Roxy direction on last Christmas Day with considerable fanfare and many trumpets, will close. In New York were reports the maestro will begin a new chapter as director of the Center in Radio City, stage spectacles the policy, or as CBS program director. . . .

THE LOST $12,000

Fifteen years ago Max Stearn, operating the Southern theatre, Columbus, took a lease on the present Neil Hotel site, later assigning it to Archibald S. White, who agreed to build a theatre, lease it to Mr. Stearn for 20 years. A subsequent clause stated Mr. Stearn was to receive $12,000 annually in lieu of the theatre. Such payments were maintained to July, 1933, when the hotel company filed suit. The court ruled the agreement did not constitute a charge on the hotel company. . . .

SUNDAY FILMS

Portland, Me., finally has achieved Sunday motion pictures, although the rest of the state still prohibits films, as well as most other amusements, on the Sabbath. . . .

MARTIN vs. KOPLAR

Monday, in New York, trial will begin of the $25,000 damage suit brought by Thomas J. Martin, Warner auditor and former treasurer of the Skouras Enterprises in St. Louis, against Harry Koplar, former Skouras associate, for false arrest. Martin's arrest for contempt of court is alleged to have followed Mr. Koplar's complaint that Mr. Martin had ignored a court order. The Missouri supreme court absolved Mr. Martin. . . .

CARTOONS

This week the cartoon film emerged victorious from the United States supreme court, which decided that "Betty Boop" dolls cannot be manufactured except under copyright provisions, and that the cartoon character had been infringed. The ruling was on appeal brought by Ralph A. Freundlich, Inc., New York, and sustained the earlier decision in favor of the Fleischer Studio, Inc. . . .

FACTORY SHOWS

Four Detroit exhibitors have been asked to join local exchanges in a legal effort to halt film showings by the Industrial Mutual Association. Collection of damages is to be attempted on the ground the films were obtained in violation of exclusive exchange distribution rights. Flint automobile workers attend the shows at nominal admission.

BETTER BUSINESS

A substantial increase in business was recorded by the theatres of Mississippi during 1934, the improvement running 58 per cent better than in 1933. # SOVIET PICTURES SHOWING IN 152 THEATRES IN U. S.

Less Than One Per Cent of American Houses Display Red Films and Only Fifteen Features in a Single Year

One-Half of One Per Cent in Screen Time Audience Hours; Appear Regularly in Forty-five American Cities

Because of the very considerable attention given to the productions of the Russian state controlled and propaganda laden motion pictures by certain and various critics of the magazines and metropolitan newspapers of the United States, it has been deemed of interest to discover the scope of the screen activities concerned. It is thereby discovered that the pictures made and presented in behalf of the Soviet and the Third Internationale acquire an enthusiastic attention from the motion picture writers vastly out of proportion to the attention they get in the public eye. In screen time audience hours the red Russian product would appear to rate in the vicinity of one half of one per cent. This would tend to the conclusion that the paeans of praise of Russian screen technique poured out by the pink critics must pertain to qualities that have little indeed to do with audience appeal. The article herewith presented is the first exhaustive examination into the subject.

—TERRY RAMSAYE

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The Soviet motion picture exhibition structure in America — controlled indirectly from Moscow — today embraces 152 independently owned theatres, less than one per cent of the country's total, playing to a national weekly audience of 920,000 persons and marketing each year as entertainment about 15 feature motion pictures produced in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics by the government controlled industry.

Ninety-four of these theatres — representing 63 per cent of the entire Soviet film market in this country—are in six eastern states: Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and in the nation's capital at Washington. In 34 states there are no theatres in which this product is played with any consistency.

The Stalin government of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics exercises absolute control over Russian production, distribution and exhibition, through Soyuzkino (All-Union Motion Picture Trust), headed by M. Shumiatsky, General Director of Cinema Industries, who, with a Council of the People's Commissars, sets down policies for production and exhibition.

Intorgkino, a subsidiary of Soyuzkino, and headed by V. A. Usievitch, controls the sale of Soviet pictures abroad and purchases foreign product and equipment. Intorgkino deals directly with Amkino Corporation in New York, in placing product here, and does not contact Amtorg Trading Corporation, as is generally believed. Amtorg is the official Soviet agency in the United States for importing all other Soviet products, and exports American goods to the Soviet. Located at 261 Fifth Avenue, New York, and at 260 California Street, San Francisco, Amtorg has a nationwide web of branches.

Amkino Corporation has its headquarters at 723 Seventh Avenue, New York, and is in charge of V. Verlinsky, president, and N. Napoli, his assistant.

16 Production Units in Russia

There are 16 production units in Russia, allocated to state districts, all producing for immediate showing in the Soviet and for possible export. These companies and available dates of their formation, together with their state locations, are as follows:

Armenkino, of Armenia; Erivan; 1924.
Azgoskino, Moscow.
Azzoskino, Baku.
Belgoskino, of White Russia; Minsk; 1925.
Goskinprom, of Georgia; Tiffis; 1923.
Rossfilm, Moscow.
Mezrabpomfilm, Moscow; 1923.
Sibkino, Novosibirsk.
Soyuzfilm, Moscow.
Soyuzkinoexport, Moscow; 1933.
Tshuvashkino, 1927, Moscow.
Turkmenfilm, of Turkmenistan; Ashabad; 1927.
Ukrainfilm, Kiev.
Uzbekogoskino, of Uzbekistan; Tashkent; 1927.
Vostokkino, Moscow.
Vufku, Moscow.

Amkino has been distributing Russian pictures here as a controlled agency of the USSR since 1928. Previously the Soviet made single-picture deals with state right distributors.

Amkino's officials said last week they have operated profitably every year, except in 1933, when there was a slight loss. He would not divulge the extent of earnings. Regardless, the non-existence of a currency exchange between the two countries makes it advisable for Amkino to keep on deposit in this country whatever profits are realized from rentals.

While Amkino is the official agency for all of the Soviet industry, it handles product imported under the 16 individual brand names.

Theatres are serviced in the United States through the home office in New York and a sub-office in Los Angeles, which is in charge of Mark Aberson. Prints are shipped directly. There are no other distribution facilities, although new Amkino representatives shortly will be installed in Chicago and Cleveland.

In Canada, Amkino distributes, on a percentage basis, through Guaranteed Pictures, which has offices at Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg.

Only recently has Amkino made any progress in distributing in Mexico, where A. Martine, Mexico City, brought into that country the Soviet "Road to Life," getting a few scattered bookings.

Average rental for a Soviet feature here is $25 for a single day's booking at a subsequent run. First-runs and principal second-runs play product on a percentage. Amkino's share at the foremost first runs—such as the Cameo in New York—reaches as high as $5,000 on outstanding pictures for a week's run, whereas average top percentage paid to Amkino for the same period at the largest second-run approximates $1,000.

"Chapayev," newest Amkino importation, is now in its sixth week at the Cameo in New York, and indications are that it will continue for at least a fortnight.

Ten prints are used at one time on the average Soviet film to service theatres here. The largest number ever used was for "Potemkin," about to be reissued for the third time, having first been shown in December, 1926. Amkino headquarters would not reveal the number of runs played by "Potemkin," its most famous of the old silent pictures. However, the average Soviet film now plays some 150 theatres.

In One Per Cent of U. S. Theatres

Significant of Soviet film audience limitations in this country is the fact that the average maximum market for the usual importation has not exceeded 152 theatres at any time since 1931, representing about one per cent of the 14,000 in operation.

Unavailability of theatres of suitable size in desirable downtown locations has lessened Amkino's opportunities to attempt to develop larger audiences among prospective Soviet sympathizers. Soviet films are shown steadily in 45 cities.

Few small cities and towns could support a theatre with either an all-foreign or straight-Soviet film policy, and even in large cities there is not sufficient Soviet product available to keep a theatre in operation uninterruptedly without other foreign features. French and German films are used for the most part in this connection, French having the preference over both Russian and German product.

Mr. Napoli, assistant to Mr. Verlinsky, said Amkino does not have any financial interest in American theatres, nor does it contemplate any such investments.

Amkino's foremost accounts include:

| CITY | THEATRE | CAPACITY |
|---|---|---|
| Baltimore | Auditorium | 1,580 |
| Boston | Fine Arts | 750 |
| Boston | Majestic | 1,550 |
| Chicago | Castle | 300 |
| Chicago | Great Northern | .... |
| Chicago | World Playhouse | 400 |
| Cleveland | Penn Square | 600 |

The exhibition "pillar" of the Soviet film in this country is the so called "Little Theatre,"

ONE HOUSE TO 829,000 INHABITANTS

or "Art House," the largest group of which is controlled in the east by Levrad Amusement Corporation, owned by Charles F. Levin and Matty Radin, both New Yorkers. Mr. Radin is a Tammany Hall Democrat of the old school. Levrad's Cameo at Times Square is the first spot in America where Soviet pictures are shown. Another is the Acme at Union Square —soapbox meeting ground for the Reds.

Building Cross-Country Circuit

The Radin-Levin interests are now building a cross-country circuit, having already acquired the Auditorium, Baltimore; Majestic, Boston; Belasco, Washington, and Great Northern, Chicago, all former stage theatres. They will immediately invade Cleveland, Detroit and Philadelphia.

Mr. Radin opened his latest acquisitions with "Chapayev," following with French releases. His idea in acquiring legitimate theatres is to have available stages upon which he hopes to present Russian players and ballet dancers.

Popular prices comparable to the average scales of downtown second run theatres are the rule for Soviet film showings.

The average maximum of 152 theatres showing Soviet films regularly are located as follows:

| CALIFORNIA | THEATRES |
|---|---|
| Los Angeles | 5 |
| San Francisco | 2 |
| DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA | 1 |
| COLORADO | 2 |
| ILLINOIS | |
| Chicago | 12 |

| TOTAL | 152 |

While only the foregoing theatres are consistently playing Amkino product, there are others in the field which play an occasional Soviet feature, presumably the important ones.

Other theatres which lean to foreign film policies include: 18 houses already mentioned: Europa, Baltimore; Cinema, Chicago; Europa, Cincinnati; Little, Newark; Art Cinema, New Haven; Miracle, New York (Bronx); Fifth Avenue Playhouse, New York; Europa, Philadelphia; Avenue Cinema, Pittsburgh; Little, Rochester; Laurier, Woonsocket, R. I.

"SOVIET JUBILEE" IN UNITED STATES

"Commemorating," in the words of its program, "the fifteenth anniversary of the Soviet motion picture industry," Matty Radin's Acme theatre on 14th Street in New York—heart of the soap-box proletariat stamping ground—this week is devoting its programs to "outstanding Soviet films." On a split-week the Acme is featuring "Life Is Beautiful" and "Twenty-six Commissars," old pictures which are labeled, respectively, a "masterpiece" and a "brilliant saga." The first is called "Soviet's greatest artistic triumph."

This, the Acme declares, is "Soviet Jubilee Week."

Six out of 14 states in which Amkino does most of its business are in the East, two are on the Coast and six in the Midwest. They have no theatre clients consistently buying product in the South or Southeast.

Ninety-four of the 152 theatres in the six eastern states constitute 63 per cent of the Soviet film market in this country. The remaining 37 per cent is widely scattered over California, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Montana, Ohio.

Amkino would not admit of any non-theatrical distribution. It had been understood that educational institutions show an occasional Soviet film.

There is only one theatre steadily showing Soviet product for every 829,000 inhabitants in this country and one seat for each 1,360 persons, whereas regular motion picture theatres provide a seat for each 13 inhabitants and there is one theatre for every 8,590 persons.

Seating Capacity 92,720

The 152 theatres consistently showing Soviet product have a combined seating capacity of 92,720. This is less than one per cent of the 9,719,537 available seats in the United States.

Amkino's officials declared they have no idea of the extent of the Soviet film audience in this country, but a private investigation indicated that some 920,000 persons attend weekly.

Mr. Napoli estimated average attendance in New York City at the 20 and odd theatres at from 100,000 to 125,000 per picture. Only one person out of every 75 of the city's 7,470,000 total population, therefore, ever see a Soviet film—and New York with its extensive foreign population, is the strongest Soviet film market in the country. Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles are next, in order.

The Soviet distribution philosophy practiced by Amkino, as expressed by Hollywood Representative Mark Aberson, is to concentrate on "intellectuals" in America for patronage.

Direct-mail and limited newspaper advertising are the principal media. used.

Part of the backbone of the Soviet film audience here are the 26,000 enrolled members of the Communist Party, and some 40,000 enrolled Socialists, with their 500,000 "sympathizers" and half a dozen rival sects. Half of these prospective customers are in New York.

The record shows little or no opposition, official or otherwise, to the presentation of Soviet motion pictures. They are subject to the same investigation by United States customs officers as other importations, and to the same inspection by censor boards as all productions.

Amkino product, however, has had difficulty with authorities at Ontario, Canada, where, with censors keeping hands off, municipal and police officials have been at odds with the Workers' Sport Association for sponsoring local exhibition of "Ten Days That Shook the World."

The film was shown early in the month without censor approval, that body maintaining it has no jurisdiction since the film was of sub-standard width (16 mm.). In such cases Canadian municipalities set up their own censorship.

Censorship Ordered

Without waiting for the opening of the Ontario legislature this week, the Provincial Government passed an order-in-council requiring regular censorship of the picture before it again is exhibited. As a result, the legislature is expected to rule that all sub-standard prints hereafter will have to be passed by the Provincial board of censors.

Amkino explained that selection of films in Russia for export to America rests, first, with Intorgkino, foreign department of the Soviet film trust which, through its head, V. A. Usievitch, decides "on the basis of technique and entertainment value." But the final decision is made by Amkino on inspection of prints sent here.

Admits Propaganda

Amkino admits to propaganda in the films, but, insists such propaganda is intended only to picture accurately what the Soviet has been trying to do in the way of industrial and cultural development.

Duplicate prints are made in New York when it is believed that the production has fair possibilities of returning distribution and laboratory costs. Virtually all the older product is silent, with English titles, while the talkers, all in the foreign tongue, have English translations printed on the scenes.

More Entertainment Decreed

As if spoken in admission of the commercial, social and political limitations of importations to date, the Soviet has let it be known that henceforth its films will contain more entertainment and less "educational" preachments, supplanting the men-and-machine theme with stories of life's lighter sides.

The new policy, inaugurated at the turn of the year, veers to such subjects as music, dancing, fashions, sports, comedy and light drama, with particular attention paid to the eliding of much of the "propaganda."

Reports indicate that the Russian populace itself is "fed up" with the heavy propaganda sent out through press, radio and motion picture—all these media being under strict control of the government.

Reflecting the trends, productions sent here during the first "Five Year" cycle were concentrated on the Red Revolution and the events which led up to it. These films were principally of the newsreel variety—photographed political messages designed to "educate" the peasant masses in Russia and to familiarize sympathizers elsewhere with the plans in mind.

The second cycle dealt largely with industrialism, with the last "Five Year" period being devoted to an exposition of advances claimed for raising standards of the citizenry.

omic Review of the Soviet Union," declared that "the cinema is regarded in the USSR as a vital factor in raising the cultural level of the population. Its role in the social and cultural life of the nation was stressed by Lenin, who considered it 'the most important of the arts for us.'"

47 Features in Three Years

Apparently the Soviet does not expect to break into this market with any more than a dozen features annually, having shipped to these shores in three years only 31 sound and 16 silent productions and a few short subjects. Not until the turn of the year was recognition given to the fact that silent pictures are passé here. Soviet film imports by Amkino since 1932 follow:

| YEAR | SOUND | SILENT | TOTAL |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1932 | 12 | 6 | 18 |
| 1933 | 8 | 8 | 16 |
| 1934 | 11 | 2 | 13 |
| 1935 | 15* | .. | 15* |
| | — | — | — |
| TOTALS | 46 | 16 | 62 |

(*) Tentative; if the Soviet later decides to send over a few silents these will be synchronized.

Soviet features run the usual American feature length, averaging 70 to 80 minutes. There is no definite release schedule. Pictures are marketed as they are made ready, depending upon the progress of the preceding release. Titles and descriptions of features released since 1932, together with available production credits, follow:

"AND THE PIG GOT UP AND WALKED AWAY"

The Soviet cinema industry has enlarged its audience to include the very youngest members of society. "The Dirtiest of Them All," first of a series of films for children, tells the story of little Vania, who refused to wash.

Very dirty Vania is dragged by her parents to the bathtub, but he is no sooner lodged therein when the water spouts up in a mud-brown geyser, floods the apartment and cascades downstairs. Amazed tenants decide to bathe Vania in the river, but that water rebels, turns black, and the dismayed laundresses pull out their shirts and towels coal-black. Boys swimming in the river emerge as chimney-sweeps.

Vania, noticing the weariness of his self-appointed "scrubbers," escapes and comes to a collective farm, where the indignant cat, dog and geese chase him into a pig pen. Amazed at the cleanliness of the sow and her shoats in their white-tiled home, Vania decides that he, too, wants to be clean.

"The Dirtiest of Them All" comes at a time when the Soviet is trying to induce its adult citizenry to shave, wear clean collars and wash their hands before sitting down to eat. There is a bit of praise for Soviet hog raising thrown in.

1934—SOUND (11)

Broken Shoes, the workers' struggles and their effect upon children.

Marionettes, starring L. Leonidoff; satirical musical, farce-comedy of politics dictated by a munitions manufacturer.

In the Land of the Soviets, Russia at work and at play.

House of Greed, starring V. Gardin; based on the decadence of the landlord class in Russia in the 1860's.

Soviets Greet New Turkey, news-film of the celebration of the 10th anniversary of the Turkish Republic.

Petersburg Nights, starring B. Dobron Ravov and A. Gorunov; directed by Gregory Roshal and V. Stroyeva; produced by Soyusfilm; based on Dostoyevsky novels about the death of talent and genius in old Russia under the Czars.

Thunderstorm, starring A. K. Tarasova and V. O. Massalitinova; directed by Vladimir Petrov; produced by Soyuzfilm; folk drama by A. N. Ostrovsky, about the manner in which the Russian of yesterday, in the realm of the Czar, was forced to exist as a peasant.

Three Songs About Lenin, directed by Dzega Vertov; produced by Mejrabponfilm.

Czar Wants to Sleep, starring M. Yanshin and B. Goringorianinov; directed by Alexander Feinzimmer; produced by Belgoskino; musical comedy of the "mad" Czar, Paul I.

The silent productions released during this three-year period included:

Afghanistan
Al Yemen
An Hour With Chekhov
Born Anew
Forest People of Ude
Krassin
Last Ataman
Law of the Siberian Taiga
Life Is Beautiful
Mechanics of the Brain
Pamir
Problem of Fatigue
Problem of Nutrition
Rivals
South in Tambov
Three Thieves
Woman's World
Twenty-six Commissioners.

Production plans for 1935 include 15 features with the American market in view. There will be few silent importations. An idea of the new movement toward the lighter sides of life may be gathered from the title of a recently completed subject, "Jazz Comedy," or, "Moscow Laughs," produced at Moscow by Alexandrov.

Currently in America, first 1935 release, is "Chapayev," produced by Lenfilm, Leningrad, based on material of D. A. Furmanov and A. N. Furmanov, with music by G. Popov, and starring Boris Babochkin, Boris Blinov and Barbara Miasnikov. The story, of the Revolution, recounts the leadership of one Chapayev. The Soviet considers this one of its finest creations.

Now in production for 1935 release is the Soviet's first full-length color picture, tentatively titled "Nightingale," (Ekk). Also in mind is "Soviet Russia," for which much is promised, the cast including Dictator Josef Stalin, President Michael Kalinin, Premier Viacheslav Molotov, Commissar of Defense Voroshiloff, and Lazare Kaganovitch, secretary of the All Union Council of Trade Unions.

A number of experimental films (Russian Art Films) in which some of the Moscow Art Players participated, preceded the filming, in 1926, of "Potemkin" (Sergei Eisenstein) and "Mother" (Pudovkin). Later came such silents as "End of St. Petersburg," "Ten Days That Shook the World," "Soil" and "Arsenal" (Dovzhenko) and "Storm Over Asia."

Reconstruction Period

The years 1930-1932 marked a reconstruction period for the Soviet industry, its adaptation to sound, some four years after the first American talker.

After a series of preparatory sound films appeared "Road to Life" (Ekk), which brings the Soviets up to their present experiments with what is for them a new form of motion picture art—the musical comedy.

Motion picture reviewers writing critical opinions of first-run features usually accord Soviet importations the same recognition as domestic productions, but rarely do they refrain from weighing propaganda contents.

A typical piece, by Philip K. Scheuer, critic, in the Los Angeles Times, occasioned by the premiere of "Petersburg Nights" at the Filmarte theatre, held the observation that the Soviets' efforts to spread their doctrines through screen stories which delve abstractly into the past is resulting in "heavy, bedraggled and distinctly second-rate motion pictures."

"Petersburg Nights," is like nothing so much as what one might have expected from a perusal of countless Russian novels and a viewing of numberless Russian plays," explained Mr. Scheuer. "As propagandists," he added, "the Soviets were on surer ground when dealing with men and machines."

On the other hand, some of America's leading newspaper critics of the film have been quick to acclaim the Soviet products. Andre Sennwald, New York Times, and Richard Watts, Jr., New York Herald-Tribune, have oft been quoted in this connection.

Hollywood producers, directors and a sprinkling of stars attend the Filmarte theatre there whenever a Russian picture is shown. No political significance is evidenced; their attendance is to study Soviet film construction.

Harry Rapf and David Selznick, Metro production executives; Ernst Lubitsch, new production head at Paramount; and Lewis Milestone, director, are but a few who have had special studio showings of Soviet films, arranged by Amkino.

At the California premiere of "Chapayev," the other evening at the Filmarte, several Hollywood stars and directors attended, on the invitation of Amkino, including Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Edward Robinson, Lewis Milestone, Edward Cline.

In immediate prospect is the Soviet Kinema Festival, which opens at Moscow this week-end, lasting until March 5. Producers, distributors, critics and students of the drama throughout the world were invited by the Soviet to attend to review the Soviet industry and its products.

Producing companies were invited to submit pictures of their own make and selection for showing.

Foreign heads of American companies independently selected the following productions for the festival: Columbia, "One Night of Love"; Radio, "Gay Divorcee" and "Little Women"; Paramount, "Cleopatra"; United Artists, "Our Daily Bread," and, Universal, "Invisible Man." Not heard from were Fox, Metro and Warner.

When H. M. Idashkin, then acting head of Amkino, predicted in 1933 an improvement in motion picture relations between America and Russia, American executives expressed doubt that the Soviet market would open up any appreciable channels for Hollywood product. They still hold the same opinion.

Rouben Mamoulian, now directing Miriam Hopkins in Pioneer's Technicolor production of "Becky Sharp" for RKO release, and Sylvia Sidney, Paramount star, are two of many in Hollywood to receive invitations from the Soviet to attend the festival. Miss Sidney declined because of work at the Paramount studio, but Mr. Mamoulian accepted, on condition "Becky Sharp" is finished on schedule.

The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Will H. Hays, president, which has extensive foreign representation on the Continent in the interests of member companies, is not officially participating in the festival.

Outstanding stars in the Soviet today are V. Gardin, K. Tarasova, L. Orlova, L. Utesov, B. Babockkin, B. Dobronravov, Alexis Fenin, Illya Doronin and Batalov. Russian players have little caste status and receive a smaller salary than craftsmen and workers in other fields.

Eisenstein is the leader of the Moscow Institute. Surrounding him in the rank of directors are Dovzhenko, Pudovkin, Ekk, Petrov, Alexandrov, Protozanov, George and Sergei Vasiliev, B. Vertoff, A. Dovjenko, Roshal, Stroyeva.

MOSCOW HAS ITS TROUBLES, TOO

There was a touch of Broadway to a theatre ticket-speculation conspiracy unearthed by the Soviet police the other evening at Sverdlovskaya Ploshad, Moscow's Times Square, when two "hawkers" of theatre tickets were given long prison terms at hard labor, and theatre employees from whom they illegitimately acquired tickets were discharged from their jobs.

Cable dispatches to New York told how speculators had approached prospective buyers even in theatre lobbies —a practice unheard of in the Soviet.

Among the sources of the speculators' tickets have been complimentary passes and reduced-price or free tickets issued to "shock workers" as part of their recompense for faithful work. Some of the workers sold their tickets.

The other night a foreign consul who had bought a ticket from a speculator found himself in the front row between two ambassadors, one of whom had given away an extra seat. The consul was so embarrassed that he exchanged his seat at the end of the first act with an elderly working woman in a rear row, who was entirely unabashed by her exalted ambassadorial neighbors.

The two Vasiliev brothers have received the Order of Lenin for their achievements, as have Pudovkin and Dovjenko. Vertoff has been honored with the Order of the Red Star, second only to the Lenin Order. Eisenstein also has been so honored, and in his present position as head of the Moscow Institute he is teaching and training students of the art.

Sergei Eisenstein has not been heard from in this country since he departed for Moscow in 1933 in the midst of the controversy created by "Thunder Over Mexico," which took him three years to make and 200,000 feet of negative. Upton Sinclair was the producer, at a reputed cost of $100,000. The subject of controversy, propaganda and more than slightly "pink" haranguing brought to the film and to Mr. Sinclair vast stretches of newspaper type.

The "intelligentsia" of the ultra-liberals had accused Mr. Sinclair not only of "butchering a great work of art," but also of double-crossing Eisenstein, duping the Mexican people and wreaking "carnage" in general upon the Russian director's work.

This year the industry in Russia celebrates its 15th anniversary. The cinema in the USSR in its present structure is entirely a product of the post-revolutionary period. In Czarist Russia the production of motion pictures was almost unknown—the few theatres which existed featured for the most part foreign films, and utilized projection and other apparatus imported from abroad. The establishment of the Soviet motion picture industry dates from December, 1919. During the period up to 1931 the government invested 15,400,000 rubles in the construction of studios. In 1931 to 1933 a sum of 49,300,000 rubles was expended, while in 1934 alone capital investments totaled 30,000,000 rubles, a total of 114,700,000 rubles on production facilities alone. As a result of these outlays the Soviet cinema industry now combines 25 new or completely reconstructed film enterprises.

By 1932 the industry was producing 2,000 reels of film, of which 20 per cent consisted of full-length pictures. In 1933 production fell off somewhat, about 1,850 reels being turned out; the proportion of dramatic presentations rose, however, to 30 per cent. At the same time the number of sound films almost trebled; of the total feature pictures produced in 1932 about 25 per cent were sound films; in 1933 the ratio of sound films to the total had risen to 56 per cent.

32,800,000 Meters of Film

In 1932 Soviet industry produced 25,500,000 meters of film; in 1933 this was increased to 32,800,000 meters, a gain of 28 per cent, and the 1934 production program scheduled an output double that of the preceding year.

Output of motion picture cameras and projectors, the manufacture of which was unknown in Czarist Russia, was expected to total 8,500 during 1934.

In 1925 there were 2,000 projection installations; by 1929 the number totaled 9,800 and in 1933—29,200, a 14-fold increase in eight years.

There has been a corresponding increase in the number of patrons. In 1932, attendance at motion picture showings reached 667,000,000 as compared with 240,000,000 in 1928. The growth is even more striking in rural districts—from 7,000,000 in 1928 to 189,00,000 in 1932.

On January 1, 1933, there were 1,053 titles in the possession of Soyuzkino (All-Union Motion Picture Trust) and an average number of 37 prints of each film.

A recent decree of the Council of People's Commissars authorized construction of 900 sound film theatres by July 1, 1935, and a decree of the Ukranian government provides for the building of 150 additional stationary film theatres in the villages of the Ukraine.

In 1935, in addition to many short subjects and newsreels, the Soviet film industry is scheduled to produce 150 full length pictures.

14,500 Wired by 1937

In 1932 sound installations existed only in the largest cities—in only 1.1 per cent of the motion picture theatres (288). By 1937, 14,500 motion picture theatres (more than 20 per cent of all cinema installations) will be wired for sound. Average attendance at motion pictures is expected to increase from 7.1 visits per year in 1932 to 31 visits in 1937, per active member of the population.

Newsreels are produced by a special organization, Soyuzfilmnews, which issues each month three silent and three sound newsreels of general interest. The organization also participates in scientific expeditions. Scientific films are produced by Soyuztechfilm. In 1933 the organization issued 107 silent and three sound short subjects; during the first nine months of 1934, 177 silent and 24 sound shorts were produced.

As early as 1923 film studios were established in Ukraine, Georgia and Armenia. In 1925 the White Russian state film trust was organized, and there are film studios located in Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and Tadzhikistan, as well as a special film organization devoted to producing pictures of the Eastern peoples of the USSR, Vostokino.

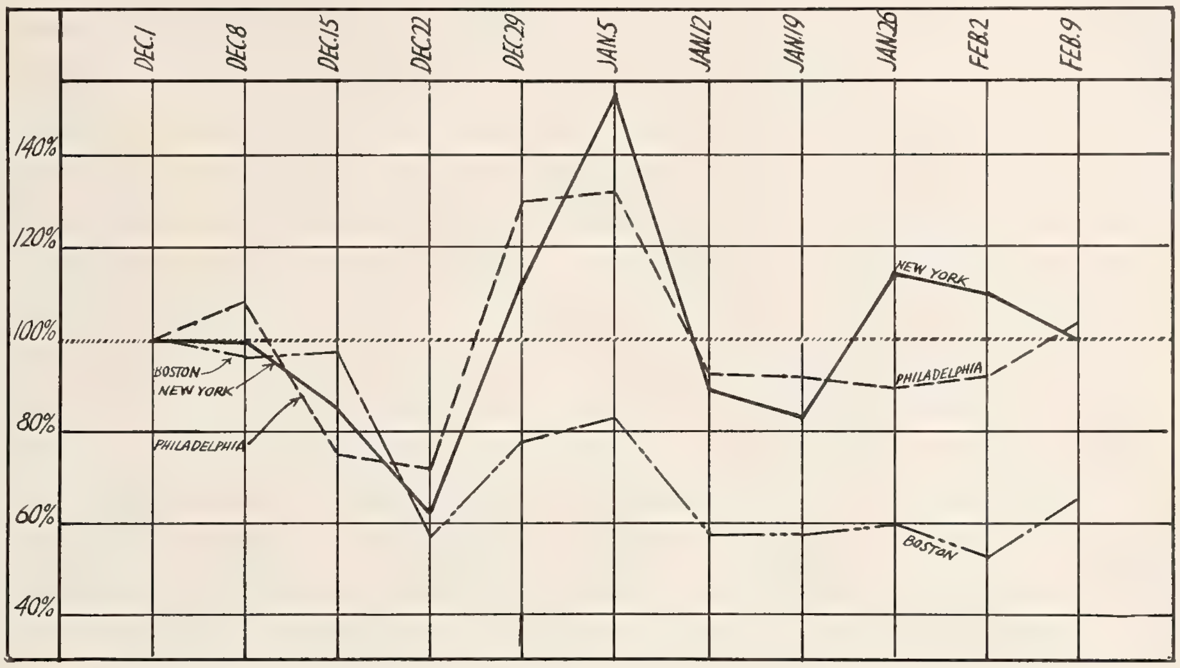
Sound pictures are made in ten principal languages.

NEWSREELS ADOPT NEW STANDARD REPRODUCTION TO IMPROVE SOUND

Apply New Procedure After Erpi Study in 1,500 Theatres; Level of Volume Is Reduced; Effective in March 4 Issues

The five newsreels of the motion picture this week consummated a most important change in recording practice and procedure with the aim to effect uniformity of sound reproduction in theatres. The newsreel is the last branch of production to adjust itself completely to acceptable sound quality.

Agreement by all the newsreels—Fox Movietone, Truman H. Talley; Hearst Metrotone, Edgar B. Hatrick; Paramount News, A. J. Richardson; Pathe News, Courtland Smith, and Universal News, Charles E. Ford—to standardize the recording volume level to approximate that of feature recording will be the first step taken to effect a better and more uniform reproduction in theatres. Releases dated March 4th will be the first shown under the new plan, and film containers will be labeled with a notice warning projectionists of the new standard of reduced volume.



This chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the business done in each of three Eastern key cities during the eleven weeks period from October 1, 1934, to February 9, 1935. For each city the gross for the first week of this period is taken as 100 per cent.

1,500 Theatres Surveyed

After complaints of extremely poor quality of newsreel sound reproduction and the carelessness of newsreel sound men in recording, Electrical Research Products, Inc., studied the results of newsreel showings in 1,500 theatres. They learned that in virtually all cases projectionists automatically turned down the faders of the reproducing system without having any knowledge of the proper volume required, whenever a newsreel was about to be reproduced. This habit had been formed in projection by the consistently loud and distorted quality of sound recording. And even more seriously affected was the reproduction of the remainder of the program when operators neglected to readjust the fader to the proper volume level after the newsreel was shown.

Erpi presented the facts to the newsreel managements and acted as mediator in the ensuing arguments. The newsreels, faced with the problems of competition in coverage, and with the normal handicaps of sound uncertainties while filming the news events, had paid little or no attention to recording quality.

Pathe News is participating in the arrangement engineered by Erpi, even though it is a licensee of RCA Photophone, Erpi competitor.

Heretofore, according to M. D. Clofine, editor of Hearst Metrotone News, newsreels have recorded on an average of from two to six decibels higher than the recording level of feature film recording.

Audience Complaints Noted

Erpi's investigation revealed that audiences have been quick to notice the distorted sound of the newsreels.

It has been the practice of newsreels to rerecord in their own studios much of the original natural sound track, especially when the voice of a news commentator and dubbed effects are synchronized with the recording print.

The sound man operating with the newsreel cameraman in the field has been compelled to adjust his monitor panel to meet the particular conditions of each story and sometimes his level has to be very high to get an understandable recording of the subject. In doing this he brings in extraneous noises.

The function of the recording studios in part is to eliminate as much outside noise as the scientific equipment will permit. This can be accomplished only when the pitch of the subject noise is high and the outside noise is low, or vice versa. But if both subject noise and outside noise are of corresponding pitch little or nothing can be done on the monitor panel.

It appears, then, that the only method for effecting a standard volume level to avoid wide variations is the maintenance of a single standard among the monitor men operating newsreel recorders licensed by both RCA and Western Electric.

Another phase of sound in newsreels that must be standardized, according to newsreel authorities, is in laboratory treatment. Printing density instructions to the laboratory constitute an important factor in maintenance of sound volume level. If recording studios set up a standard for exposure, a standard for development and the same for printing, all newsreels, it is held, will have an even more uniform sound level.

Cleveland Dual Bill Injunction Dismissed

The temporary injunction restraining the Grand Central theatre in Cleveland from playing double bills, obtained by the competitive Fountain theatre, has been dismissed following the signing by Mrs. Max Kaplan, new lessee of the Grand Central, of the citywide exhibitor double feature prohibition. The theatre was bound to single bills by signature of Max Kaplan. He turned the theatre back to the landlord, who in turn leased it to Mrs. Kaplan, who thus sought to evade the agreement.

Elimination of double features, closing of all-night shows, ejection of unaccompanied minor children after 9 p.m., were among recommendations of a Detroit committee headed by Deputy Police Commissioner Eleanore Hutzel. These practices were defended by various industry representatives.

Academy Meets Awards Critics

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences decided this week to throw the final ballot on nominations wide open for members to pencil in their selections in a move to meet criticism of this year's nominees for the annual Awards of Merit. The action, unprecedented in the history of the awards, was taken as a result of an expression from several nominees, including Frank Capra, Robert Riskin, Norma Shearer, William Powell and Norman Krasna, in which they approved the change.

Howard Estabrook, acting president of the Academy, said that criticisms of the nominations had been so uniform in content that they raised a question whether they were based on genuine opinion or propaganda.

The Academy has selected the Biltmore Hotel ballroom in Hollywood for the banquet at which the awards will be announced next Wednesday. Reservations have been limited to 800. The organization also announced that Irvin S. Cobb will act as master of ceremonies, with Major Nathan Levinson presiding in the absence of President Frank Lloyd and Lionel Barrymore representing former award winners.

Colling with RCA

Ernest S. Colling, for the past two years with the National Broadcasting Company, has been transferred to the department of information of the Radio Corporation of America, working under the supervision of Frank Mullen.

Vice-President John Nance Garner officiated at the presentation of the Quigley Grand Awards last Friday in his offices in the Capitol in Washington. Bill Hendricks, manager of Warner theatre in Memphis, Tenn., and Morris Rosenthal, of the Loew-Majestic in Bridgeport, Conn., received the plaques for outstanding showmanship from the Vice-President of the United States, in the presence of Senators Nathan Lynn Bachman and Kenneth McKellar, of Tennessee; Joseph W. Byrns, Speaker of the House; Representative William Citron, of Connecticut; David Wilson, special assistant to Attorney General Homer S. Cummings; Bishop Thomas F. Gailor, of Memphis, and A-Mike Vogel, chairman of the Managers' Round Table of Motion Picture Herald. For other pictures and the story of the presentation see the Round Table department of this issue.

REVISED PARAMOUNT PLAN IS APPROVED

Judge Orders Certificates Altered to Permit Depositors to Withdraw Without Assessment

Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe, following a hearing in New York on Thursday, signed an order giving preliminary approval of the court to the Paramount Publix Corporation's plan of reorganization. He announced he would approve the form of deposit certificates used by the Paramount bondholders' and stockholders' committees, on the condition they are altered to permit depositors to withdraw without payment of an assessment.

The Paramount plan of reorganization to which Judge Coxe gave preliminary approval last week contained changes from the original plan recommended by Judge Coxe at a previous hearing. These included a reduction of the bank interest from 6 to 5 per cent on the company's new-money debt, and changes in the management provisions stipulating that the first board of directors will have a tenure of three years and cumulative voting for board members to be permitted thereafter. The plan named the 16 directors previously announced.

Judge Coxe issued an order, returnable April 4, to show cause why the plan should not be confirmed and placed in effect. No objections will be given hearing prior to that date, he ruled.

George Z. Medalie, counsel for a combined creditor group with claims aggregating $14,000,000, asked assurance from the court that the 16 directors named would constitute the inital board, that the membership would not be raised at the outset to 18, as permitted in the by-laws, and that a definite guarantee of "good management" be given by specifying the tenure of individual members during the first three-year period. Judge Coxe replied that these matters should be worked out among the reorganization groups themselves.

During the proceedings it was brought out that for the purposes of voting on the plan the Paramount trustees are allowing without question $25,500,000 of debenture claims and $1,500,000 of other claims, and are making a provisional allowance of 50 or 60 other claims amounting to $23,000,000 so their holders may vote with that amount of representation.

On Tuesday the reorganization plan for Allied Owners, large Paramount creditor, was given preliminary approval in a report submitted to federal court in Brooklyn by Special Master Oscar Lewis. Major provisions call for reduction in interest from 6 to 4 per cent on $9,127,000 bonds outstanding, and a reduction from 6 to 3 per cent interest on $1,747,000 of Allied debentures, reductions continuing to January, 1938, after which interest on the bonds is increased to 5 per cent and on the debentures to 4 per cent. The plan also proposes cancellation of Allied's $498,400 debt to New York Investors, Inc., parent company.

Mr. Joyce gave Samuel Spring two weeks in which to file briefs in support of the $265,498 claim of Sam Katz against Paramount for the unexpired portion of his contract.

A knockout, a honey AND a wow! It's the musical you meant to save all those adjectives for and one for which you try to think up new ones. Freddie Astaire's dancing feet and nimble comedy have never been seen to better advantage and he scores another triumph. Irene Dunne comes into her own again as the heroine. Bill Seiter proves himself a master musical maker. Kern crashes through with two new hits besides the well known "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." And there's a fashion show for the ladies that will make them swoon with the clothes worn by the kind of girls that make men stay. It's the best guarantee of how to get money in the bank that an exhibitor will get this year.

If you think that opening paragraph exhausts the rave possibilities, you stopped reading too soon. Sam Mintz and Jane Murfin have taken what was a pretty dull book originally and, using the bare outline of the story, have hung a flock of laughs on it with great lightness and gayety without neglecting the love story. The bare outline is about a football player who inherits a dressmaking establishment in Paris. A Russian princess becomes his business partner and, after a few minor musical comedy complications, becomes his partner for life.

Freddie Astaire . . . . there's so much to say about him it's hard to start and worse to stop. His utter ease and casualness of delivery. His superb dancing and the superb dance routines . . . entirely the product of Astaire ingenuity. Maybe it's better to say just Fred Astaire and then we've said everything. Ginger Rogers doing an Indiana gal gone Polish Countess is grand and improving with every new dance step. Irene Dunne, beautifully photographed, her voice beautifully recorded and speaking lines as though she meant them, steps up another peg. Helen Westley as Aunt Minnie, thoroughly delightful. Randy Scott, given his chance to get out of westerns and turning that chance to such good account that you wonder what's kept him away from feature pictures all this time. Claire Dodd as the other girl is attractive enough and just about adequate. The rest of the cast is fine, with "Candy" doing his singing act, just for a laugh.

Pandro S. Berman has brought forth another winner in the production line and given it everything, including a new fashion designer for pictures, Bernard Newman, who has done some very lovely things. Bill Seiter misses nothing in his direction and nothing slackens his pace. It's a musical without a single time-taking chorus number. Cronjager's photography is beautiful and Max Steiner's musical scoring a joy, particularly in "I Won't Dance" and the arrangement of "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" for a dance routine

Fred Astaire dances, Ginger Rogers and Astaire dance, Astaire sings, Miss Rogers sings, Irene Dunne sings, beautiful gowns that draw nothing but ah's and oh's, in fact some creations that drew applause, Astaire dances, Rogers and Astaire dance, and you have the wow you want—"Roberta." Add some beautiful music, especially "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes" sung by Irene Dunne some clever comedy, and, oh yes, the story—well, you don't need much, but there is enough to furnish a pleasing background for the singing, dancing, clothes and comedy. The rest of the cast was well chosen especially Randolph Scott as the unwilling heir to the gown shop, and Helen Westley as his aunt who leaves it to him. William Seiter's direction carried the story along at an even keel, the comedy situations being outstanding. Bernard Newman designed the gowns and, from the female sighs, they must be it. Coming shortly after "The Gay Divorcee," "Roberta" has some mark to hit. The pictures are very different but neither can be oversold. "Roberta's" cast, dancing, music, and clothes gives you plenty to work with.

"Roberta"

(Radio)

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 12.—In as fine and entertaining a musical show as has graced the screen in this or any other season, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne and Randolph Scott scintillate and gayly cavort, ringing the gong with high point box-office entertainment.

Handsomely mounted and expertly directed, this outstanding production attains rhythmic fluidity that takes songs, dances, comedy and plot in its graceful stride.

Translated from the stage, the screen play, in retaining all the personality and flavor of the former, adds the glamour and lustre of the camera's advantages to the latter. The story is of an American jazz band stranded in Paris. While the leader (Astaire) thinks, Scott remembers his Aunt Roberta (Helen Westley) is a famous dressmaker, calls and meets her assistant, Miss Dunne. When Roberta dies, Scott, the former football player, inherits the fashion shop with Miss Dunne. Astaire, at the shop, meets Miss Rogers, a former Pittsburgh flame incognito as a Polish princess. A misunderstanding inspired by Claire Dodd's gown separates Miss Dunne and Scott, but their reunion occurs in a combined fashion show entertainment and cocktail party.

Seldom have personalities attuned their roles for such harmonious effect as here achieved. Miss Dunne acquits herself most favorably in singing and acting. Astaire, who can say more with his feet than most people with their eyes and mouth, stops the show with his dancing and comedy. Miss Rogers, lissome, matches Astaire's agility with easy competence. Together they are what Vernon and Irene Castle were at their tops.

Scott turns in his finest performance, being both poised and confident and earning a new niche away from westerns. Miss Westley is choice. Victor Varconi and Miss Dodd support splendidly.

To William Seiter's direction a statuette, likewise Pandro Berman's production. The photography and sound are excellent, featuring Max Steiner's musical direction.

This entertainment leaves the screen richer and should do likewise for showmen. It's Radio's wow.

MPTOA CONVENTION WILL DISCUSS NEW NRA PLANS

Rosenblatt to Address Session on Code; Convention to Plan Support of Government Suit Against ASCAP Music Tax

Wide Variety of Exhibitor Problems to Be Taken Up; Theatre Operation Featured; Plan Lavish Entertainment

Exhibitor leaders planning to attend the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which starts in New Orleans on Monday, February 25, this week displayed considerable interest in the fact that in all probability they will be able to consider and discuss the definite provisions of the new National Recovery Act during the convention. In a message to Congress Wednesday, President Roosevelt asked for continuance of the act for two years, with full application of the antitrust law, tightened administration and enforcement, and elimination of jail sentences.

Sol A. Rosenblatt, who is NRA compliance director and deputy administrator for amusements, accepted an invitation to address the convention. Mr. Rosenblatt indicated he will participate in exhibitor code discussions.

MPTOA officials this week stressed the fact that such discussions in New Orleans are matters directly affecting every exhibitor inasmuch as whatever improvements are possible in the code will have to be passed in the new legislation.

Lewen Pizor of Philadelphia, chairman of the convention committee on the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers music tax, spent several days in New York this week gathering data for the conferences and discussions of his committee at the convention. Definite plans for support of the music tax legislation and to advance the government suit against ASCAP will be developed at the convention, Mr. Pizor announced.

Arrangements Completed

While there are no business sessions on Monday, the opening day, MPTOA visitors on arrival Monday morning will register for the convention and at hotels. For the benefit of visitors who are unfamiliar with New Orleans arrangements have been made for an extensive tour of the city on Monday.

On Monday afternoon the MPTOA will hold a golf tournament at the Metairie Country Club. Arthur Higginbotham of Baton Rouge is chairman of the golf tournament committee. For those who do not play golf there will be a bridge party at the club. Arrangements have been completed for a special MPTOA day at the Fair Grounds.

On Monday evening the annual meeting of the MPTOA board of directors will be held.

First Business Session Tuesday

Tuesday the first business session of the convention will be held in the Gold Room on the mezzanine floor of the Roosevelt Hotel. Reports of the various organization committees, the annual report of the president and of the secretary will feature this session.

Special committees have been established on Credentials and Rules, Resolutions, Music Tax, Trade Practices, Labor Problems, Non-Theatrical Competition, Legislation and Taxes, Public Relations and Community Affairs.

Wednesday forenoon the business session will feature concise talks and discussions, several of them illustrated, on the following subjects: "Design and Operation of a Modern Theatre From an Engineering Point of View," Homer G. Tasker, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers; "Modern Trends in Motion Picture Architecture," Robert Boller of the American Institute of Architects; "New Values in Theatre Lighting," W. C. Brown, chief illuminating engineer of the General Electric Co.; "Mechanical Features of the Modern Theatre," J. T. Knight, Jr., Paramount.

To Discuss Advertising

Wednesday afternoon the business session will feature talks on motion picture theatre advertising, selling and merchandising modern motion picture entertainment.

Thursday forenoon the business session will feature addresses by John C. Flinn, executive secretary of the Code Authority; Hon. Sol A. Rosenblatt, Deputy Administrator of the National Recovery Administration; Hon. Frank C. Walker of New York, and Mr. Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film.

The afternoon business session on Thursday will be devoted to the reports and recommendations of the special convention committees. The convention will adjourn officially sine die at the end of this business session.

Thursday evening is the annual convention banquet.

On Friday begins the Mardi Gras. Several special affairs are being arranged to which all those who attend the convention will be invited.

NEWSREELS FIRST WITH HAUPTMANN VERDICT

Alternate Films Sent Theatres for Telegraphic Release; Paramount Records His Words

Despite the carefully prepared machinery for rushing the story of the Hauptmann jury verdict to press, the newspapers were "scooped" by the newsreels last Wednesday night when, scarcely five minutes after the jury foreman had delivered his verdict in the little courthouse at Flemington, N. J., the news was flashed on the screens of nearly all first-runs in the East. In each of the 107 Loew houses in the eastern sector patrons had seen the news in film before the first newspapers had slid out from the presses.

Applying the well-tried "flash" newspaper technic, Pathe News and Hearst Metrotone had prepared alternate reels well in advance, one announcing a verdict of "guilty", the other "not guilty". Paramount News had ready a third reel to be used in the event the jury found Hauptmann guilty with a recommendation of mercy.

The Hearst organization, under the direction of M. D. Clofine, editor-in-chief and former newspaper man, had in the New York vaults of Hearst Metrotone several thousand feet of film taken during the Hauptmann trial, being held, as per agreement, for exhibition purposes after completion of the trial. The film, highly graphic and dramatic, had been made for showing immediately after termination of the trial, but it had been done this time in duplicate, one reel announcing conviction and the other reporting Hauptmann's acquittal. In each instance the context of the film threw considerable light on the steps leading up to the ultimate verdict. To make it more dramatic, Edwin C. Hill, the Hearst Metrotone Globe Trotter, had summarized the highlights of the trial.

These reels were printed and shipped by plane to all Loew theatres in 15 cities, each accompanied by an order that they were not to be shown before the end of the trial. When the verdict was handed down, managers of all the theatres received a telegraphic flash release for the film.

HITS JURY'S STAGE APPEARANCE OFFER

The American Federation of Actors has recorded opposition to the appearance on the stage of anyone connected with the Hauptmann trial at Flemington. When word was received that members of the jury had been offered vaudeville engagements, the Federation declared officially:

"We believe that the stage should be kept clear of people whose names have gained public attention through association with criminal trials, as their stage appearances do the theatre more harm than good."

The same procedure was followed by Pathe and Paramount, both of which had provided exchanges with advance prints.

Fox Movietone did not go to such lengths, nor, apparently, did Universal. Fox pieced together 150 feet of film containing highlights of the trial and of scenes about the courthouse when the verdict was given.

Supplementary Reel by Paramount

Paramount had prepared a supplementary reel for general release, with exclusive interviews with defense counsel Edward J. Reilly, in which Mr. Reilly announced his intention to appeal the verdict, also an exclusive interview with Mrs. Hauptmann and her son, Mannfried.

A new repercussion to the move of the reels on February 1 in releasing scenes showing actual testimony of witnesses and cross-examination of the defendant, was heard when it was announced in Baltimore that state legislation shortly will be introduced the outlaw the making of sound pictures at a court session during trial and to prohibit Maryland showings of such pictures made in any other state. The bill is to be introduced by Miss Mary E. W. Risteau, Democratic senator from Harford County. Her action, she explained, was determined after she had witnessed the trial scenes in question.

"Making a circus out of a procedure in which the life of a human being is at stake shall never happen in Maryland if I can prevent it," Miss Risteau said.

Newsreel officials said they had not yet decided what disposition to make of the thousands of feet of film of the trial.

Independent Radio "Scoop"

In the radio field, Transradio Press Service—an independent news broadcasting organization not bound by the restrictions imposed on broadcasters by the newspaper publishers through the Press Radio Bureau—put its full short-wave facilities at the disposal of every foreign broadcasting station. It also notified ships at sea that they were free to give the full news to passengers and crews. The short-wave transmission, including 6,000 words on the trial, ran for 12 hours direct from the courtroom, finally ending when the verdict had been brought in and sentence pronounced.

An incorrect radio flash, announcing conviction with a recommendation for mercy, given to the large networks by the Press Radio Bureau, came from the Associated Press, which attributed it to a "wrong short-wave code signal."

Monogram Films in Australia

Norton V. Ritchey, president of Ritchey International Corporation, has closed a deal for release in Australia of 25 Monogram pictures this year, with Max Ehrenreich, managing director of Film Distributors, Ltd., Sydney.

THEATREGOERS this week are hearing through Paramount News the words of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, now in the death house at Trenton, N. J., sentenced to the chair for the kidnaping and death of the Lindbergh baby, spoken to the camera as he leans against the bars of his cell. Paramount is keeping secret the scene of the taking of the picture and the dialogue, to avoid possible complications.

Hauptmann looks and speaks directly into the Paramount camera and here are his words as the audience hears them, recorded from his own lips:

"My conviction was a great surprise. I want to tell the people of America that I am absolutely innocent of the crime and the murder. I never saw the Lindbergh baby and I never was in Hopewell or near Hopewell and I never received any money from Dr. Condon. I want to appeal to all people everywhere to write me at this time as funds must be raised to carry my appeal to the higher court. Before God, I am absolutely innocent. I have told all I know about the crime. If my appeal to friends fails, and because of lack of money I can't have my case heard in upper court, I shall go to death as an innocent man."

Release of the newsreel began Wednesday.

Form Metropolis Company To Show Foreign Pictures

The Metropolis Pictures Corporation has been organized, with offices in New York, to present outstanding European films in this country. Martin J. Lewis, for six years connected with the 55th Street Playhouse in New York, heads the company. The first film, to be shown on Broadway in the near future, is the French film "La Maternelle," to be called "Loving Hands" in this country, and presented in association with John S. Tapernoux, American representative of French producers. Superimposed English titles will be used.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Had "Devil Dogs of the Air" been in production last week Warners would have caught for that picture, just released, one of the most dramatic and thrilling rescues in military aviation annals. For the purpose of the battle scenes in the film the Navy Department placed at Warners' disposal a large part of the Pacific fleet, several thousand marines and sailors and the aerial fighting force of the leatherneck Marines. A vivid portion of the production (Hearst-Cosmopolitan) portrays the last battle maneuvers of the ill-fated giant dirigible Macon, which collapsed in the air and plunged to destruction into the same Pacific waters where "Devil Dogs" scenes had been taken only a short time before, and where a half dozen cruisers and destroyers a few days ago effected the rescue of all but two of the 80 officers and crew, snatching them from death in the heavy sea upon which flames from burning Macon oil were fast spreading to the struggling Navy men.

Without batting an eyelash Columbia this week told the press that "uncanny circumstances" prompted their writing and production staff in Hollywood to anticipate in their feature, "Above the Clouds," the wreck of a giant airship at sea under almost identical conditions that cost the Navy its air queen. The film was made and released in the fall of 1933. Such clairvoyance should not go unnoticed.

William Rosenfeldt, independent exchange man in Denver, is a conscientious chap. Personally inspecting a print of "Painted Faces," old Joe E. The exhibitor insisted upon delivery, causing a further inspection which revealed on a screen that the scratches were really thin rope lines in a circus tent running the length of a reel.

We pass along Polly White's tip to cashiers —theatre box-office change-makers and ticket sellers included: Watch all coins, there may be a fortune in them. Lincoln head pennies bring up to $2 each if over ten years old. Indian head pennies may be worth up to $51 each. Nickels issued in 1913 are worth $50; an 1894 "S" mint dime sells for $100; a single copper cent with General Washington printed on it and bearing the face of the Cherry Tree Chopper-Down is worth $200; 1838 half dollars with mint mark "O" bring $500.

Historical among coin dealers is the case of Mrs. Frank Adams, ticket-seller at a movie theatre in Georgia, who last March accepted a silver dollar from an unidentified patron, gave him the change and threw it into the till without looking a it. When she checked the receipts at the end of the day she noticed that the dollar was unusual looking, had been minted in 1804. She wired a Fort Worth dealer and received a telegram the next day offering her $1,250 for the dollar coin.

Some people don't know when they're well off. For instance take George Ferry, of the town of Warner in New Hampshire, who sued the Crancell Engineering Company, of Boston, for damages because of an accident while working for them on a construction job. Mr. Ferry said he had completely and absolutely lost the use of his right arm. But the defendants introduced as evidence motion pictures showing the plaintiff hunting and fishing after the accident. The pictures caused him to lose the case and cost him $40 to boot, the New Hampshire Fish and Game Department causing his arrest for taking brook trout and shooting a gray squirrel out of season. The court fined him for both offenses.

MORRIS ROSENTHAL, ballyhooeyist extraordinare, manager of the Majestic theatre in Bridgeport, Connecticut, last week met Huey Long (also a ballyhooeyist), and Morris almost got shot by one of Long's bodyguards while about to shake hands with the Louisiana Kingfish.

Mr. Rosenthal was in Washington last week with A-Mike Vogel to receive from vice-president John Nance Garner a silver plaque as second grand award in the Quigley Publications' "Managers' Round Table Club" exploitation competition. He went to the Senate chambers after receiving the prize, and there, together with Vogel and other prominent theatrical persons, spotted Kingfish Huey rushing into the Senate to launch his attack on Postmaster General Jim Farley.

"Rosie" stopped Huey, shoved out his hand by way of greeting, while Vogel started to open a cotton bag containing the silver plaque, the idea being to show Huey the Quigley Award. No sooner did Vogel reach for the bag when two of Huey's bodyguards reached for their hip pockets and rushed for both Rosenthal and Vogel. They probably thought that the exploiteers were going to pull out a machine gun.

It was a tense moment but everything was finally straightened out and Huey shook hands, with the suggestion that if anybody is to get a medal for good showmanship it should be himself.

FILM SHARES AND BONDS MOVE UP ON SUPREME COURT'S GOLD RULING

Motion Picture Securities Join in Advance on New York Exchange; Bonds Also Quick to Respond to Decision

By THE ANALYST

The biggest obstacle to further improvement in American trade and industry, including the motion picture business, was removed this week when the black-robed justices of the United States supreme court decided that public and private debts need not be paid back in dollars of the old gold value of 25.8 grains.

The supreme court found that Congress had the power to nullify the gold clauses in order to prevent unfairness in readjustment of the monetary system.

The decisions leave the status of corporation bonds unchanged, only stipulating that the holder is entitled, by the rulings, to one dollar of present paper money for every dollar of the face value of the bond.

No Real Loss

In the case of government bonds, the supreme court said that constitutionally the government had no right to break its promise to pay back in gold, but, on the other hand, the judges found that holders of government bonds had shown no real loss, because the present devalued will buy just as much as did the old gold dollars.

In nullifying the gold clause in governmental and private obligations, and throwing out of court the suit of a government bondholder who had sought $1.69 on the dollar, the highest court in the land sanctioned the New Deal's monetary policies.

Although bulwarked by the supreme court in cutting the gold content of the dollar to 15 2/21 grains, making it worth 59.06 cents of its old gold value, President Roosevelt gave no indication of using the unprecedented authority he holds from Congress to reduce the value of the dollar further. Business and finance immediately reflected this reasoning by a sharp upswing after the decisions were announced.

Had the cases gone against the government and former gold obligations been ordered paid at the rate of $1.69 to the dollar, former gold debts of corporations—many in this industry—states and municipalities totaling $75,000,000,000 at once would have taken on a value of $126,750,000,000.

New Confidence Reflected

Trading in the nation's security and commodity markets was almost at a standstill for more than a month, a feeling of uncertainty invading all financial and industrial circles. New financing operations were held in abeyance and effects of the unsettlement were beginning to retard retail trade.

Although the first burst of enthusiasm after the decision quieted down, there was a new feeling of confidence that general business and finance could now move forward. Effects of the removal of the gold clause uncertainties already were beginning to be felt in the primary commodity markets and in retail channels.

Shares on the New York Stock Exchange rose 2 to 10 points in heavy trading after the decisions were made known on Monday. The following table shows how motion picture securities participated in the upswing in reacting to the supreme court's decisions:

As a result of the court's ruling film companies having outstanding bonds calling for payment in gold were relieved from the necessity of paying more than the face value of their obligations in legal tender.

An example of what this meant to the industry is provided by the funded indebtedness of Warner Brothers, consisting of an issue of 6 per cent gold convertible bonds, maturing in 1939, and outstanding to the amount of about $34,600,000.

Under an adverse supreme court ruling this indebtedness would have been increased to $58,474,000 and the annual interest on it raised from $2,076,000 to $3,508,440.

Motion picture company bonds also were quick to react on the decisions and the better business prospects opened thereby, as shown in the following table:

[Washington Bureau of the Herald]

Thousands of industrial organizations, including many in the film industry, were saved from paying $1.69 for every dollar they owed, through the decision of the United States supreme court.

Three decisions, covering five cases were before the court, three of which involved the gold bonds of corporations. A concurring opinion and a dissenting argument were rendered.

The gold clauses in the corporation bond cases, it was held, "were not contracts for payment in gold coin as a commodity, or in bullion, but were contracts for the payment of money."

It was held that it would be unreasonable to compel corporations and others to take their income in currency at its present value but pay their indebtedness in an amount of currency determined by the former standard.

The opinions contained a lengthy discussion of the right of Congress to fix currency standards and declared that Congress "has undertaken to establish a uniform currency, and parity between kinds of currency, and to make that currency, dollar for dollar, legal tender for the payment of debts."

Union Agreement Revised on Coast

Concluding a series of conferences on the Coast between Pat Casey, studio representative, and labor leaders, an agreement was reached late last week providing for revision of the hour and wage provisions of the basic studio labor contracts for some unions. The changes become effective March 4, expiring, with the basic agreement, in March, 1936.

Under the revision, carpenters, electricians and other key men on call are on a 60-hour basis with overtime for all hours over 60, thus replacing the former "on call" practice. Truck drivers, now on a 36-hour week, will get time and one-half, instead of straight time for overtime. The minimum call has been changed from four hours to three hours.

Studio laborers, painters and several IATSE unions were not included, but their applications may be considered next year when the new basic agreement is negotiated. A 20 per cent wage increase for the five unions included was denied.

Sues Chase Companies On G. T. E. Stock Deal

The Plan Liquidating Corporation has filed suit in New York county court against the Chase National Bank, the Chase Securities Corporation and company officials, charging loss of $239,581 in a syndicate operation involving 350,000 shares of General Theatre Equipment stock.

The operation is alleged to have been conducted by Pynchon & Company, dissolved stock exchange firm. The defendants are accused of having disposed of the stock to favored groups with large profits accruing to themselves without having advanced any money. It is charged the profit came as a result of the purchase by the defendants of 240,000 shares of Fox Film "A" stock at $30 per share at a time when it was selling on the exchange at $48.

Warner Loses Copyright Verdict in Minneapolis

Hopkins & Nelson, Westbrook, Minn., exhibitors, were awarded a verdict in Minneapolis federal court last week, in the action brought against them in 1933 by Warner for alleged violation of copyright laws, in holding over films for three days, whereas the contract stipulated two days, according to the plaintiff. Warner had sought damages in the amount of $3,500, on the customary basis of $250 for each holdover.

The court ruled that Warner had erred in drawing up the contract, sustaining the defense contention that the contracts were signed in blank, with the understanding that they could play Warner product three days if business warranted. The plaintiff was ordered to pay "special attorney fees."

Turning to Stage Technique for Stage Numbers; Hoofer's Day at Hand; Nine Pictures Start

By VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

PRODUCERS of "Roberta" turned to the stage for ideas in presenting their musical numbers, and the result may revolutionize future musical productions in Hollywood. In the picture Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers do their dances just as they have been done on the musical comedy stage for years, without resort to odd camera angles, or close-ups that cut away from the dancers.

The numbers are all photographed in long shots, and when over, the dancers make an exit, and return for bows, just as they would if they were making a personal appearance.

At the preview of "Roberta," the audience burst into spontaneous applause when the first number ended, and when Astaire and Rogers returned and bowed the timing was perfect.

The effect was as thrilling as the most elaborate routine which ever has graced a musical production.

Showmen, weary of numbers that rely on camera angles to get over, will find this technique something with a wallop.

The Day of Hoofers at Hand

Some of the better dancers from the musical comedy stage are coming to Hollywood, indicating quite definitely the trend will be toward stage technique. At the moment, Astaire is the whitest of the white haired boys in town. Bill Robinson, who does his stuff in "The Little Colonel," will probably rank next, when that picture is generally released.

It is reported that Clifton Webb soon will be here to get his share. George White and Jack Donahue (not to be confused with Jack Donahue the Ziegfeld star who died several years ago) will also give films the benefit of their stage experience in future productions. For the day of hoofers is at hand, and it will be hoofers with musical comedy background who will rule.

Proof of the dancer's popularity may be found from watching the youngsters, who are quickest to sense changes in audience demands. Six months ago, 75 per cent of the kids with picture ambition who haunted the studios were learning to croon. Now, they are all busy practicing dance routines.

The Horse Wins

A local society girl, who is under contract to a major studio, recently arranged to have one of her prize winning horses appear in a picture.

The girl herself is used only for extra work and as atmosphere in productions, but the horse was given an important role.

When payday came around, it was found that the check for the horse's services for one day was more than twice what the studio pays the girl for a week of labor. Further, the horse was given a stand-in and a double while it worked, with a special truck to transport it to and from the studio.

One studio executive is having nightmares about television.

This man dreams of a day when feature pictures will be broadcast from 10 key spots and audiences will catch them in their own homes with instruments rented from one company on a royalty basis.

There is only one consolation, from his point of view. Operation of a plan such as this would mean that producers would need but 10 prints of their features, instead of the hundreds now made.

In the producer group are Darryl Zanuck, Edward Small, Harry Goetz, Alexander Korda of London Films and Harry Wilcox, British and Dominions.

These producers will participate in delivering for the 1935-36 program 25 features from the domestic group and six from England. Quotas thus far set call for 20th Century to deliver 12, Samuel Goldwyn six, Reliance four and Chaplin one, with a possibility of two more featuring Paulette Goddard. Miss Pickford's quota has not been determined.

From England Korda will deliver four while Harry Wilcox is slated for two.

THERE is no need at this point to adduce proof that Samuel Goldwyn knows how to make motion pictures, or at least knows his way about exceedingly well in this most difficult business of making screen entertainment. Even under this adroit hand when the ingredients of a motion picture are compounded into a finished subject there can, of course, be no guarantee that the resultant attraction will be just what the public wants and just when the public wants it. That's the gamble of the business. But it would be a rarity indeed to see a Goldwyn picture that did not have merit—merit in judgment, execution and showmanship.

The latest Goldwyn contribution to the gaiety of fandom is the marquee-made title "Wedding Night." Fresh from the triumph of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" comes Gary Cooper, a New York novelist whose recent books have been written more under the inspiration of gin than genius. Out of money, he and his wife return to his ancestral home in Connecticut and there, out of a strong plot impact from a Polish neighbor who is Anna Sten, he gets material both for a new book and for a new Goldwyn picture.

"Wedding Night" is a familiar story in that it is the plot of one of the best of all stories but it is given by the Goldwyn staff a fine freshness and penetration. It becomes a strong and well-told story, honestly done and capably performed. Mr. Goldwyn's shrewdness in knowing what the public wants enabled him to escape a dangerous pitfall in the telling of this story and this he does in a manner that makes it rich, warming and genuinely interesting. "Wedding Night" is another job from the Goldwyn workshop that will command attention. —MARTIN QUIGLEY

THE idea apparently struck Darryl Zanuck that with Maurice Chevalier having been for many years an outstanding personality in Paris music halls there would be logic—perhaps a good picture—in playing him in just that role. The result is the musical picture "Folies Bergere" and it gives to Chevalier an opportunity precisely suited to his talents. He probably never has appeared to better advantage than he does in this musical show which has for its principal locale a Parisian variety hall.

"Folies Bergere" is an exceedingly pleasurable entertainment. It is optically attractive, has several interesting song numbers and a generous quota of humor. In Chevalier there is a return of his old-time spark which frequently has been missing of late when he has reached out for characterizations not suited to his natural inclinations. What probably will be the hit number of the show is a piece called "Rhythm of the Rain" which Chevalier does in high spirit, ably assisted by Ann Sothern. This number is given a novel and exciting production which stands out significantly among the high spots of musical picture numbers.

The dance numbers, a feature of musical shows which seems to call for a near-miracle if the result is to be regarded as more than ordinary, are striking and effective. This part of the task has been ably done by Dave Gould.

There seems to have been need of holding a sharp rein on incidents of this show to keep them from wandering into the field of that sort of material which is very much more acceptable in a Paris music hall than in an American picture theatre. The producer has extended himself and with much credit in this connection and having done so well it is regrettable that his vigilance stopped short of using the scissors on the tag end of a scene in which Chevalier discharges a crew of girl secretaries who are supplanted by a group of oldish men who announce their presence in a high feminine voice.

A preview audience in Hollywood reacted jubilantly to this latest Twentieth Century show. Their manner left no doubt that they had had a good time. Special interest was indicated in the presence of Merle Oberon, who is an unique personality, adding measurably to the interest and appeal of the production. "Folies Bergere" is a first-class attraction which will make its presence known and felt in the theatres.

A young actor, well dressed, and rather good looking, has stationed himself opposite the Paramount studios. His name is Richard Talbott. He admits being 24 years old, and claims he wants work. He spends his time standing idly or sitting on a box which bears the sign, "I am on a hunger strike in an effort to obtain work in the studios in my chosen profession as an actor, with four dependents." He says he has been in Hollywood two months, and has been turned down by all casting offices.

His intention is to remain where he is until he gets work, or starves. By the time this reaches print, young Mr. Talbott most likely will neither have starved nor obtained work in his chosen profession, and the chances are a hundred to one against his still being in front of the Paramount studios. But for the moment, at least, he is an interesting figure on the Hollywood scene.

Columbia will release a series of eight Ken Maynard features to be produced on the outside by Larry Darmour. The first will go into production around April 1.

Central Casting's annual report disclosed that only 12 of the many thousand extras registered earned a living wage during the year 1934. Of the dozen, according to the report, only six earned in excess of $2,500 and only one woman that amount. Five women earned in excess of $2,000. This small group of top earners were drawn from the Best Dressed Class "A" members. The report further showed 219,859 jobs were given to approximately 4,000 extras during the year, with the average pay check amounting to $9.03.

The number of pictures in working dropped a bit the past week, nine productions starting as six were finished. Columbia, MGM and Radio, each with two, account for two-thirds of the new work. Mascot, Universal and Invincible are credited with the others. Warner completed three. Paramount, MGM and Monogram each contributed one.

Drama and dramatic romance are the prevailing trends in the newly started pictures. The Radio pair are indicative. Casting difficulties adjusted, work started on "Break of Hearts." Katharine Hepburn, Charles Boyer and Jean Hersholt will be featured. In "The Informer," a story of Irish rebellion, the cast will include Victor McLaglen, Heather Angel, Preston Foster, Margot Grahame, Wallace Ford, J. M. Kerrigan and Joe Sauers.

Columbia's new productions are of the same flavor. "Hot News" went before the cameras with Richard Cromwell, Billie Seward, Jack LaRue, Wallace Ford, Wesley Barry and Pat O'Malley. Also started was "Party Wire," with Jean Arthur, Victor Jory, Helen Lowell, Clara Blandick, Charles Grapewin, Oscar Apfel, Geneva Mitchell, Maude Eburne and Matt McHugh.

With "Behind Green Lights" as its vehicle, Mascot further demonstrates the dramatic tenor. In this will be seen Norman Foster, Judith Allen, Purnell Pratt, Mark Lobell and Theodore Von Eltz.

MGM's new activity is unusual. Frank Loyd and Richard Thorpe are off for the South Seas with a combination unit for two pictures to be made at Papeete. For "Typee" Thorpe has only two principals, Mala (seen in "Eskimo"), and Lotus Long. Lloyd will make "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Universal started a western, "The Showdown," which will feature Buck Jones, Marion Shilling and Niles Welch.

"Public Opinion," an Invincible, will present Lois Wilson, Crane Wilbur, Shirley Grey, Luis Alberni, Ronnie Crosbey, Florence Roberts and Paul Ellis.

Jolson-Keeler Musical Finished

Probably the most important of the three completed by Warner is the spectacular musical romance drama, "Go Into Your Dance." Al Jolson and Ruby Keeler are teamed in the leads. The support lists Helen Morgan, Glenda Farrell, Patsy Kelly, Benny Rubin, Bobby Connolly and Joyce Compton, plus a large cast of minor names and scores of chorus girls and boys. The second finished feature, "Wanderlust," again stars Guy Kibbee and Aline McMahon. Others who will be seen are Betty Jean Hainey, Nan Grey, John Arlidge, Tom Brown, Robert McWade, Minor Watson, Robert Light, DeWitt Jennings and Oscar Apfel. "The Goose and the Gander," third feature, will present Kay Francis, George Brent, Genevieve Tobin, Ralph Forbes, Claire Dodd, John Eldridge, Helen Lowell, Spencer Charters, Wade Boteler and Carlyle Blackwell, Jr.

Paramount completed "How Am I Doin'?" It's a Mae West with Paul Cavanagh, Ivan Lebedeff, Tito Coral, Marjorie Gateson, Fred Kohler, Monroe Owsley, Gilbert Emery.

"Times Square Lady" was checked in at MGM. The cast includes Virginia Bruce, Pinkie Tomlin, Robert Taylor, Helen Twelvetrees, Isabel Jewell, Nat Pendleton, Jack La Rue, Robert Elliott, Raymond Hatton and Russell Hopton.

Monogram transferred "The Desert Trail" to the cutting room. A Western, it features John Wayne, Mary Kornman, Paul Fix, Anita Compillo, Ed Chandler, Al Ferguson, Lafe McKee and Henry Hall.

Several title changes were made. Paramount changed "Night Drama" to "Four Hours to Kill" and "Two on a Tower" was renamed "Paris in Spring," while "Small Miracle" became "Night Drama." Radio altered "Spring in Paris" to "Sylvestre Bonnard."

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS RULING EXHIBITION CONTRACT IS ILLEGAL

U. S. Tribunal Dismisses Fox Appeal for Review of Minnesota Decision That Arbitration Clause Invalidated Contract

The United States supreme court at Washington on Monday dismissed the appeal of Fox Film Corporation for a review of its suit against A. B. Muller, Minnesota exhibitor, for recovery of rentals alleged to be due under contracts for a supply of film which the exhibitor refused to accept, play or pay for, on the grounds that the contract was illegal in its entirety because it contained an arbitration provision and the company therefore could not collect for pictures refused by him.

The case was dismissed, the court announced, because "it appears that no final judgment has been entered" and the writ of certiorari obtained by Fox was "improvidentially granted".

The effect of the supreme court's action will be to delay consideration of the case on its merits until after the Minnesota courts have taken final action.

The contract in question called for delivery of 46 pictures at an aggregate rental of $1,837. Fox contended that Mr. Muller refused to accept, play or pay for them. Muller declared the contracts had been formulated as the result of a combination and conspiracy between the large producers and distributors who "control the film business," in direct violation of the antitrust laws, and that they were illegal and void as in restraint of trade and interstate commerce.

Entire Contract Held Illegal

The principal point involved in the suit was the question of whether the Minnesota courts acted properly in holding that the exhibition contracts were illegal, by reason of the inclusion of an arbitration clause outlawed by the Thacher decision in the Paramount case. It was agreed by the supreme court that inclusion prior to the Thacher decree of the compulsory arbitration provision so affected the contract that its entire contents were illegal even after the provision's elimination.

The Minnesota decision held that the illegality of the arbitration clause permeated the whole contract and voided it.

Must Await New Appeal

In its appeal, Fox asked the supreme court to pass on the effect of its decision in the Paramount case and render a new opinion on the legality of modified types of the standard license agreement adopted after Judge Thacher had declared the old form, including the arbitration clause, to be outlawed.

Under the ruling the matter cannot be considered on its merits unless a new appeal is filed by Fox after the Minnesota courts issue a final judgment.

Felix Jenkins, of the Fox legal staff in New York, said Tuesday that the supreme court's action was a technical reversal and that Fox plans to bring the case before that court again.

Mr. Jenkins explained that exhibitor contracts no longer contain the compulsory arbitration clause outlawed by Judge Thacher in 1930, but that several contractual suits pre-dating that decision would be affected if the supreme court's decision were final. He could not estimate the financial consequences of such a ruling, but conceded the loss to film companies "would be considerable."

Lone Bandit Gets Receipts of Roxy

While approximately 2,600 patrons sat in the auditorium watching the show, and 100 employees moved here and there about their duties at midnight Sunday night, a mild mannered man, carrying a paper bag, tricked his way into the treasurer's office of the Roxy Theatre in New York, deftly flourished a gun, and walked off unmolested with $10,002 in box office receipts.

The police concluded it was an inside job, since the thief was too well acquainted with the layout of the building, and a consequent check of all former employees was underway this week. The mild mannered man complained to an usher that he had been short-changed by 15 cents, and the usher referred him to assistant manager James V. Pisapia, who obligingly took him to the treasurer's office on the mezzanine floor. He asked the man to wait while he entered the office, where James Muldoon, treasurer, and Walter Crowley, assistant, were counting the day's receipts. The man didn't wait, however, but followed Mr. Pisapia, swinging a pistol. A roll of picture wire from his pocket took care of the three executives.

They were forced to lie on the floor of the vault, while the thief scooped into the bag conveniently stacked piles of currency, leaving more than $3,000 in silver. Then he casually sauntered out of the theatre, undisturbed. Mr. Crowley managed to reach a telephone and summoned aid. The alarm was given—but much too late. The police rate the job one of the most daring in the city since the holdup of the treasurer's office of the Paramount in 1930, when a single thief got away with $9,984.

Meehan Holds 26,800 K-A-O Shares, He Reports

Michael J. Meehan, a director of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, a subsidiary of RKO, held 26,800 shares of K-A-O's seven per cent cumulative preferred stock on January 31, after purchasing 500 during the month, it is revealed in his shareholding report filed last week with the New York Stock Exchange in compliance with Section 16 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

Arthur S. Roche Dies; Many Tales Adapted to Films

Arthur Somers Roche, a consistent and successful fiction writer over a long period of years, of whose prolific output of more than 30 novels and innumerable short stories more than a dozen were adapted for the motion picture, died at his home in West Palm Beach, Fla., last weekend after a two-week illness of heart disease. He was 51 years old. Burial was in Castine, Me.

The law, journalism and magazine writing were stepping stones on Mr. Roche's way to fiction fame. Born in Somerville, Mass., April 27, 1883, he studied at Holy Cross College and later law at Boston University. A year and a half as a lawyer was followed by journalism in 1906 in New York. It was in 1910 that he sold his first magazine stories and became a regular contributor.

Mr. Roche returned from the World War, in which he served in the intelligence division of the army and proceeded to write two of his greatest successes, "Uneasy Street," in 1920, and "Find the Woman," in 1921. His plots moved ever swiftly, his characters were sharply delineated and their adventures were really adventurous. His stories were instantly successful.

He always worked at top speed. Perhaps his most successful magazine serial, and he wrote many of his stories in that form, was "Penthouse," written in four days, and which was a successful motion picture starring Myrna Loy and Warner Baxter. Mr. Roche declared recently that he wrote and dictated less than 150 hours a year, turning out four full-length novels for "Colliers" and "Cosmopolitan," and 10 or 12 short stories in that time.

Paramount currently is working on "The Strange Case of Mr. Ames," and RKO-Radio on "Star of Midnight," both Roche stories.

Zampino's Mother Receives Eulogy Note from Governor

The mother of Frank Zampino, sound man for Pathe News in New England for five years, who died recently in Boston after an illness of only a few days, received from Governor James M. Curley of Massachusetts a letter expressing his sympathy, and in which he said, in part, "I shall always like to remember Frank as a soldier who died in the line of duty at the foot of the canyon." The last job on which Mr. Zampino worked was a recording of Governor Curley making an address on crime prevention.

A military funeral for Mr. Zampino was held in New York by the IATSE. He was very active in the Lt. Vernon L. Macauley Post of the American Legion in Boston, known as the theatrical post.

3 Operators' Locals Being Reorganized

With the taking over of control of Chicago operators' local by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees' and Motion Picture Operators' Union, the IATSE has raised the number of units now in process of reorganization to three. The other two are Local 306 in New York and the Pittsburgh local.

Kansas City's operators' local, after months of internal dissatisfaction during which time the IATSE ran the unit, has been restored to local control.

George Browne, IATSE president, announced that the books of the Chicago local, domination of which by Tom Maloy was terminated abruptly by machine gun bullets, are to be examined and the findings made known to members. The impression prevails in Chicago circles that the union will be allowed to work out its own reorganization as far as possible.

Pittsburgh, like the Kansas City local, was placed on probation because of internal strife, some of the elected officers refusing to serve, and the IATSE was forced to take drastic action. Local 306 of New York is under complete control of the IATSE.

Revelations of operators' license graft in New York under the Tammany regime were made by Commissioner of Accounts Paul Blanshard to Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia.

He charged that sums of from $100 to $200 were extorted from unemployed men seeking operators' licenses and said that the investigation had proved "especial favoritism" in almost all cases. Twenty cases of bribery in these applications, according to Mr. Blanshard, were proved in his inquiry and "scores of unemployed men paid fixing prices to professional fixers who were friends of politicians."

GB Expects American Reciprocity: Bernerd

Gaumont British, which controls many of the largest theatres in Great Britain, expects reciprocity from the American industry and particularly from major circuits, said Jeffrey Bernerd, general manager, on his return to London this week from New York.

Persons Unknown Killed Maloy, Jury Decides

Bernhard Realigns Warner Personnel

Following a series of meetings in New York last week between Warner Theatre zone managers and Joseph M. Bernhard on realignment of the company's circuit personnel, a wide shift of manpower resulting in abandonment of the posts of eastern and western district managers was announced.

I. J. Hoffman was moved to New Haven, Conn., as circuit head of the company's New England theatres and Moe Silver transferred to Albany as head of the New York State houses, exclusive of New York City, which continues under direction of Harry Charnas. Hoffman formerly was eastern district manager and Silver had charge of the west.

Ted Schlanger, former sales manager and recently assistant to Clayton Bond, chief film buyer for the circuit, was promoted to assistant general manager with headquarters in Philadelphia as head of the Warner division.

The Philadelphia territory will continue as recently realigned. Herbert Copelan is zone manager handling Atlantic City theatres; David E. Weshner, zone manager of Philadelphia first-runs; Leonard Schlesinger, zone manager of key neighborhoods and subsequent runs in that city, and A. J. Vanni, zone manager of theatres outside Philadelphia, but managed from that point.

Mr. Bernhard indicated that negotiations are pending between the company and Sol Hankin, former middlewest exhibitor, whereby he will take over the Imperial, Lindy, Astor and Poplar houses in Philadelphia.

SENATE GROUP PREPARES TO STUDY FILM CODE AND AUTHORITY'S ACTS

Nye - McCarran Resolution Shunted to Finance Committee; King Plans Broader Inquiry with Borah and McGill

National Education Association, with Aid of Research Council, Drafts New Bill to Prohibit Block Booking

A United States Senate subcommittee is preparing to make a thorough investigation of the circumstances surrounding the drafting and adoption of the motion picture industry's NRA code, the activities of NRA officials thereunder, the conduct of the Code Authority and the effect of the code upon independent interests.

Other developments along the legislative front during the week included:

1. New block booking legislation planned by the National Education Association in conjunction with the Motion Picture Research Council.

2. Independent Theatre Owners Association in New York launched plans for a state antitrust investigation of major circuit activities in the territory.

3. Various state legislatures received additional bills involving industry trade practices.

4. Taxation measures bearing on films were piling up in state legislatures.

The question of an investigation of the recovery act came up in the Senate at Washington last week with introduction of a resolution by Senators Nye (Rep.) of North Dakota and McCarran (Dem.) of Nevada. In the resolution were cited 21 of the charges of oppression which have been made against codes by small business men and representatives of labor.

It was planned at first to have the investigation made by the Senate commerce committee, the chairman of which, Senator Copeland (Dem.) of New York, is critical of much of the emergency program. Administration leaders were successful in having it referred to the finance committee, headed by Senator Harrison of Mississippi, who, it is thought, probably will not consider it unless forced to act.

However, discussions of the Nye-McCarran resolution developed that Senator King of Utah was preparing for an even broader inquiry, to be made by a subcommittee headed by himself and having Senators Borah of Idaho and McGill of Kansas as members.

The making of either investigation depends upon whether the Senate will provide funds for expenses, but Senator King is going ahead.

Hardy Confers with King

Russell Hardy, special assistant to Attorney General Homer S. Cummings and active in the Darrow Board hearings on the film code and more recently in the St. Louis antitrust prosecution, conferred Saturday with Senator King's subcommittee behind closed doors.

Senator King later indicated his intention of having the inquiry as broad as possible in scope. It will be conducted in the open, he said, with public hearings which may start by the end of this month.

Senator King declared his group had received a large number of complaints and that the Department of Commerce and the Federal Trade Commission had been asked to submit whatever statistical material they may have bearing upon these complaints.

When the motion picture code is taken up, it is expected the sub-committee will call as witnesses members of the Code Authority and Sol A. Rosenblatt, who, as division administrator in charge of amusements, handled negotiation of the agreement.

BULLETIN

Extension of the Industrial Recovery Act for two years, with amendments bringing the fundamental principles of the antitrust law into full sway, tightening the policy and standards for administration, and providing a better means of enforcement, and the imposition of jail sentences, was sought of Congress Wednesday by President Roosevelt.

---

The Nye-McCarran resolution, which is expected to be supplanted by the King inquiry charged "injustice, oppression and favoritism" in administration of codes.

Draft Block Booking Bill

New legislation on block booking is being drafted by the National Education Association and the Motion Picture Research Council and will be introduced in Congress soon. The measure has not been completed as yet, apparently because various groups have been unable to compromise their differences, nor has a Congressman been selected to introduce it, although it is considered possible that Representative Kramer of California, who recently announced his intention of considering block booking legislation, may be approached.

The legislative program of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, as formulated at the annual meeting of its directorate in Washington last week, will center on two points, amending of the code to favor the independent exhibitor, and advocacy of the block booking bill introduced by Representative Culkin of New York and also providing for establishment of a Federal motion picture commission, giving the industry a public utility standing.

Celler Bill May Be Modified

Modifications in Congressman Celler's block booking bill were expected this week following a conference between the Mr. Celler and Sidney Lust, independent exhibitor of Washington, D. C. Mr. Lust told the Representative that the block booking situation has been distorted and that most independents consider the practice a necessary expedient for the theatre man.

The Independent Theatre Owners' Association of New York moved to institute a state antitrust investigation of the activities of the large circuits in the New York territory.

Department of Justice for a fortnight has been studying exhibition conditions in and around Cleveland, presumably to present information to the Attorney General's office in Washington.

Suits under the antitrust statutes brought in Chicago by Jack Rubin of Public Theatres and James Roden, owner of the Astor in that city, against major distributors and circuits were both continued to February 22 by Federal Judge Woodward when answers were filed by the defendants. The exhibitors, who charge they have been prevented from playing 10-cent double-feature shows, specifically named Warner Bros., Balaban and Katz, Essaness and various exchanges.

In St. Paul, under a joint resolution adopted by both branches of the Minnesota legislature, the most searching investigation ever attempted of American Telephone & Telegraph activities in the motion picture field was announced. It will get underway before the end of the month and will cover the operations of Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, Inc.

Would Bar Preferred Playing Time

In Ohio various introduced bills included one to make it illegal for distributors to demand preferred playing time for any pictures.

In Wisconsin, the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan started work with the newly formed Federation of Independent Associations, organized to obtain a fair trade act, to back chain store tax legislation and oppose any sales tax legislation.

Of all states in which exhibitors and other industry members are facing drastic legislation, Ohio's plight appears to be the most serious and this week representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America announced that its members and circuits would cooperate financially and in other ways with the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio in combating unfavorable theatre legislation in the state. The MPPDA denied charges of the ITO that it was responsible for reports of dissension in the state exhibitor ranks. The Hays office said, however, that the circuits should not be expected to pay dues into the treasury of an organization of which they are not members.

Would Regulate Agents

In California a bill to regulate the activities of theatrical and motion picture agents has been proposed, the bill providing for a state commission to license, fix rules, regulate and fix agency fees and all compensations.

In the Connecticut legislature a hearing was scheduled before the judiciary committee on a bill dealing with Sunday shows.

The 5 per cent admission tax bill introduced in the Georgia House has been reported favorably.

Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley of New Orleans has introduced an amendment to the amusement tax which provides that a 2 per cent levy shall be made on every ticket purchased, instead of the current 2 per cent on the gross dollar.

The proposed 2 per cent sales tax bill was killed in committee of the Massachusetts legislature. A bill to regulate the admission of minors to motion picture theatres has been reintroduced.

Admission Tax Bills in Missouri

Two bills which would impose a 10 per cent tax on theatre admissions are pending in the Missouri legislature. Two other bills constitute a "reel tax," levying one mill per foot of film shown in the state. A 5 per cent sales tax bill on luxuries presumably would include theatre admissions. Fred Wehrenberg was marshaling exhibitors to combat the measures.

A bill calling for a 10 per cent tax on film rentals on a monthly settlement basis has been proposed to the Nebraska legislature.

Hearing on the Berg-Neustein bill to permit Sunday legitimate shows in New York State was to be heard later this week at Albany.

J. M. SCHENCK SEEKS FOX METROPOLITAN

$4,500,000 Offer Reported in Individual Move for Operating Control of 86 Theatres

Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, said in Hollywood late last week that he is negotiating for operating control of the 86 theatres comprising Fox Metropolitan Playhouses in New York. He was reported Friday as having made an offer of $4,500,00 for purchase of the Fox Metropolitan bonds.

Mr. Schenck made his bid not as head of United Artists but as a prospective individual operator. He denied the deal was being negotiated by him on behalf of his brother Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., who, it will be recalled, entered a joint bid with Harry M. Warner several months ago to take over the circuit's assets. At that time several problems of product for the considered circuit figured in withdrawal of the bid.

In Hollywood Joseph Schenck this week declined to comment as to whether or not United Artists or one of its producer members would ultimately assume the obligations which would be incurred by him as an individual operator in his move to acquire the circuit.

Says Reorganization Plan Approved

Mr. Schenck also said that the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee has virtually approved the circuit's plan of reorganization.

In addition to the reported $4,500,000 bid, it was understood some agreement would be worked out by Mr. Schenck with Milton C. Weisman, as receiver of Fox Theatres, on the settlement of the Fox Theatres' $5,000,000 claim, based on its ownership of all of the Fox Metropolitan stock. The bondholders' committee contends that as Fox Metropolitan is insolvent its stock is valueless.

In its original plan of reorganization, however, the committee proposed to settle the Fox Theatres claim for $100,000 in cash and leases on several Fox Theatres houses as an additional consideration. In the second reorganization plan the stockholders' claim is ignored. Reports this week indicated that Mr. Schenck's offer contemplates a payment of $200,000, plus other considerations, to stockholders of Fox Theatres.

Believe Move Is Individual

Those close to the Fox Metropolitan reorganization proceedings this week expressed their belief that Mr. Schenck is acting strictly as an individual in the present negotiations but that, as head of the new company, if his offer is consummated, there would be nothing to prevent him from selling the circuit to Loew's, Inc., after May 1, 1936, the date on which the operating agreement between Skouras and Randforce and the bondholders' committee expires.

Meanwhile, a report setting forth that on Dec. 31, 1934, liabilities, less stock issues, of Fox Theatres Corporation totaled $5,768,053, and assets, listed at $17,935,653, were worth $9,847,807, according to the receiver's estimates, was filed in New York.

With the exception of Spyros Skouras the new FWC Theatres Corp. board is the same as FWC. Charles Skouras is president of the new company, Percy Kent and Charles Buckley, vice-presidents, Fred Metzler, treasurer, and Albert L. Leeds, secretary. The board includes all this personnel. Spyros Skouras has been relieved from a post on the board because most of his time will be spent in New York.

Charles and Spyros Skouras last week concluded their talks with officials of Chase National Bank and W. C. Michel of Fox on their joint 10-year operating contract with National Theatres Corporation. It was reported three disputed issues were straightened out, the terms to be written into the agreement.

Science to Assist Elliott Expedition Into Mongolia

Daily communication via low wave frequency between an American expedition in the desert heart of Mongolia and centers of civilization, including the expedition's home base, similar to the system of the Byrd Antarctic Expedition, is contemplated in the equipment of the Clyde Elliott Chinese Expedition, to make "China Roars," for Columbia release, in the Far East.

A compact portable radio sending and receiving plant weighing only 600 pounds, mounted on a truck and which may be dismantled for camel transport will provide communication from far-flung centers of the globe. The territory thus linked includes the plains west of Shanghai to the Great Chinese Wall and the broad wastes beyond in outer Mongolia and the Gobi desert of inner Mongolia, the historic Marco Polo trail from Old Cathay to India and Europe. The expedition will be in constant touch through radio with the Central Chinese government at Nanking, American officials at Shanghai and a home base in this country.

Airplanes will form an important feature of the equipment for this expedition, which will put off from Broadway for San Pedro, Cal., and thence for China within the next few days. Mr. Elliott, former newspaperman, globe trotter, soldier of fortune, and film director, heads the party. He is undertaking to produce "China Roars" on the authentic locale of the story. Mr. Elliott directed "Bring 'Em Back Alive" for Frank Buck in the Far East, and more recently "Devil Tiger" in the same part of the world for Fox. The new expedition is sponsored by Columbia.

"China Roars" is an adventure story of the Far East by Gordon Rigby, who will accompany the expedition, and the cast will largely be made up of English-speaking Chinese, already assembled at Nanking through cooperation of the Central Chinese government. Only the director, the leading man and technical staff are American. It is expected to penetrate the interior to a point where the upper reaches of the Yang Tse Kiang River will be encountered, some 1,500 miles above its mouth, and navigation of the great river will bring the party back to the sea coast.

Tons of equipment and supplies necessary for the personnel of 150 will be shipped from San Pedro when Mr. Elliott and his party sail early in March. The native group will join the expedition at Shanghai and automobile transport will be employed as long as possible, after which camel trains will be substituted. On reaching the trackless interior planes will carry the filmed results from day to day sealed in air-tight and water-tight containers to some point of contact with the outer world. Thence the film will be hurried by such native means as the country affords to points where mailing facilities will permit forwarding to Hollywood for development. It is merely a speedy huge-scale elaboration of the system under which "rushes" are viewed at the end of each day's work at the producing studios.

As a protective measure a battery of cameras will independently record duplicates of every shot.

The Wedding Night

(United Artists - Goldwyn)

Romantic Drama

This is fine romantic drama with powerful heart appeal. Seeking to be, and succeeding in being, sincere in its exquisite blending of many elements, it is good entertainment. On the whole, it is serious, but not without a full measure of contrasting natural comedy and understandable human interest, that deals with human emotions under unusual conditions.

"The Wedding Night" is at once a prestige builder and a big picture with popular ingredients. Marked by straight-from-the-shoulder characterizations which should further embellish Gary Cooper's reputation and definitely establish Anna Sten, it is an amazing story. Yet it is a show to warm the cockles of any heart, man or woman, as the impact of its lifelike romance, drama, comedy, tragedy and pathos inspire the emotions.

Constantly utilizing material of value often proved attention is immediately aroused. Tony Barrett is a washed-up popular author. Disillusioned, broke, his blue funk is accentuated by the frivolous antics of his wife Dora. Putting the glitter of Park Avenue behind him, Tony insists that for economic security alone she go with him to his Connecticut ancestral home. There he meets Novak and his daughter, Manya, simple Polish immigrants, who by strength of character and industry have become successful, shrewd tobacco growers, yet the ways of modern Americans are a continual source of bewilderment to the Novak family, their relatives and Polish neighbors.

Tony sells some of his land to Novak. To Dora the money received merely means another fling at the bright lights. Fascinated by the friendliness of his new associates, Tony remains, as she returns to New York. Sensing material for a new book, with Manya and her people as its inspiring characters, Tony, finally deserted by his Japanese houseboy, is drawn closer to Manya.

Helping her helpless neighbor during the long winter the friendship of Manya and Tony ripens into love. The situation is complicated by the outraged shock of Novak, who had decided that Manya should marry Fredrik, son of an old-country friend. The situations between Manya and Tony, while entirely clean, are nevertheless highly intriguing. The beauty of their association culminates when a blizzard forces the girl, who has been reading the manuscript of Tony's story of which she is the heroine and his own wife the other woman, to remain overnight in his house.

That is the final straw for Novak. He insists that she marry Fredrik immediately. Further tenseness is added when returning Dora, convinced by hearsay that Tony is enjoying a delightful rendezvous, meets Manya, who has come to tell Tony of her father's decision, and in accomplished fashion puts the girl in her place. With no love in her heart, Manya marries Fredrik, in a colorful sequence that portrays the full impressiveness of a solemn Polish wedding. Drunken Fredrik, his jealousy inflamed when Manya dances with Tony, an unbidden guest, goes berserk when Manya is cold to him on their wedding night. Rushing from the house, followed through the snow by Manya, he invades the Barrett home. A terrific fight on the stairs between Fredrik and Tony results in the death of Manya, who tried to intervene.

In the finale Tony is looking through a window at the hill over which Manya so often came. His wife beside him, he sees the vision of the girl who gave him a new understanding of life. As he recounts their association, his wife slips out to leave him alone with his memories.

The old adage, "Half the world doesn't know how the other half lives," certainly applies to "The Wedding Night." Because of that and also because of the publicity undoubtedly to be given, there may be many who without seeing the picture may conclude that the characterizations and gripping story power have been theatrically exaggerated. They have not. In directing, presentation and acting, the known Goldwyn formula has been followed with a touch of finessse, strikingly blunt, but beautiful to those who appreciate sincerity of treatment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Roberta

(Radio)

Musical Comedy Romance

With entertainment value memories of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in "Gay Divorcee" still briskly fresh, showmen have here a showman's exploitation show abounding in entertainment.

Adapted from a novel by Alice Duer Miller and also from a highly successful stage play, the show, given all the advantages peculiarly exclusive to motion pictures, is a fast-moving, zippy comedy romance, plus music and dancing. It's rich in love interest and humor. Its music is the kind to hum and whistle. The dancing is all that anyone would expect, and a little more, when Fred Astaire is its inspiration. It is climaxed by a fashion show finale to thrill almost any woman.

The locale is Paris. Thither come dance band leader Huck and his ex-All-American football play pal, John Kent. John's aunt, Roberta, owns a modiste's shop. Stephanie, a regal miss, is head designer. John hears her sing and falls in love. In the meantime job hunting Huck runs across Countess Scharwenka, a gaudy girl from his old home town, masquerading as of royal lineage to add to the glamour of her night club dancing berth. He gets a job in the club. Huck, principally and Scharwenka thrill the customers with their dextrous dancing.

Roberta dies and John and Stephanie come into possession of the dress shop. Complications arise between the two when a gold-digging old flame, Sophie, makes her advent and the partners disagree. Finally a style show is announced. All Paris anxiously awaits a look at the styles which the ex-footballer will decree as the last word in fashions. With dozens of mannikins modeling and Stephanie singing, the show is a sensation. Misunderstandings are eradicated, there's romance for John and Stephanie and Huck and Scharwenka, too.

Elaborately mounted and costumed, the show is a fashion treat for the women. The two feminine leads are featured in a dozen or more separate modern outfits. It's an exploitation feature affording more opportunity for merchant contact than is ordinarily found in a whole group of attractions; it is one permitting aggressive exhibitors all the opportunity they desire to make tieups. For the men, there is plenty of glamour; lots of singing and dancing, much comedy, just enough contrasting drama and no end of exciting situations.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Folies Bergere

(20th Century)

Romantic Musical Spectacle

Acceptable entertainment, with much in the way of title, personnel, production, performance and story values to sell, this show provides wide opportunity to exercise exploitation abilities. The picture is half glamorous musical spectacle and half "The Guardsman"—atmosphered comedy romance. It opens and closes as a spectacle; the second is sandwiched in between. It presents Maurice Chevalier in the more musical aspects of the show, in the character which domestic audiences first knew him, a song and dance man. In the sustaining sequences, he is a zestful comedian.

Save the title and the costuming of the chorus in the introductory, "Rhythm in the Rain," eye and ear glamor number, there is little other than French names and actuating atmosphere to identify the production with the famous Parisian theatre, which, it seems, almost everyone associates with the idea of being the last word in bizarre, risque amusement. Essentially the yarn is a story of a famous star of the Folies Bergere Theatre show.

It opens with the actor, Charlier, singing two or three songs in a row, the on-stage atmosphere of which is climaxed by the ingenious "Rain" solo and chorus song and dance sensation. The off-stage bit is Mimi demonstrating in hectic and very excited fashion that she considers Charlier her sole property as far as romantic inclinations are concerned. Imitating Baron Cassini in detailed fashion, Charlier is prevailed upon by Gustave and Henri to substitute for the real Baron in his home and in his extensive business world. He does, in a manner that both delights and amazes the Baroness, who is wise to the situation all the time, but nevertheless cannot differentiate the exact moment the substitute husband faded out and the real Baron came in. The comedy romantic episodes concluding with an air of all's well that ends well, the production returns to the theatre for a straw hat music-dance finale.

Primary selling qualities in this appear to be fun and eye and ear attractiveness. Most potent, however, seems to be Chevalier the entertainer. As he appears in practically every sequence, aided principally from a comedy point of view by Ann Sothern, his name, coupled with that of the title, looms as the most effective interest creating lure.

Possessing that semi-intimacy acknowledged as an appealing factor in both metropolitan and smaller centers, together with old-fashioned hokum fun, always a factor in arousing general interest, the show permits two selling premises. Where musicals exert a strong draw, it can be sold as such. Where comedy romance is the intriguing element that quality can be used to draw the patrons.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Transient Lady

(Universal)

Romantic Melodrama

While title, cast personalities and story content are suggestive of unusual exploitation, the nature of the entertainment in this average class feature is such that it most likely will have its major appeal confined to the every day theatre goers. A romantic melodrama with comedy, affording several worthy character portrayals, the show deals with a not too familiar topic. Yet while the material is novel, the manner in which it is presented permits easy anticipation of ensuing situations. Suspense being lacking, there is, however, plenty of action in several sequences. This appears in the scenes depicting the commission of a murder, the framing of an innocent accused, the court trial, preparations for a lynching party and the romantic climax.

The picture is localed in the interior South and timed to the present. The populace is awaiting the opening of a roller skating rink, flamboyantly advertised and owned by Nick Kiley, Dale Cameron and Chris Blake. The premiere is a grand occasion, particularly for Carey Marshall, young lawyer, presumably in love with the local belle, Pat Warren, but very much attracted to the voluptuous Dale. A bit of local hoodlumism eventually results in the killing of Fred Baxter, brother of the local political big shot, Hamp, who, seeking a victim, has Blake arrested for the crime. Dale has little trouble in getting Marshall to accept the defence, particularly when his father tells him it is his duty, though it means ruination of his ambitions to be a judge.

Before a packed jury the trial goes against the Baxter coterie. Anticipating failure, Hamp decides upon a lynching. The little town seethes as the law and order contingent rally to defend the prisoner against the mob. Politically sagacious Baxter foresees what violence might also do to his future career, delivers an inflamed speech on upholding the law, and calls off his mob.

Killer Kiley returns to exonerate Blake and prove that the slaying was a matter of self-defense. The skating act trio are ready to move on when Marshall discovers he loves Dale and the act is deprived of its feminine member.

Despite the value of cast names, the attraction is hardly of the caliber necessary for the larger first-run houses, but for the others there are several showmanship values.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

All the King's Horses

(Paramount-LeBaron)

Comedy

The name value of Carl Brisson is a rather unknown quantity, that of Mary Ellis absolutely untested. The title is somewhat of a misnomer. Nevertheless, "All the King's Horses" is real entertainment from its unique start to surprising finish. It has much in the way of music, dancing, spectacle, romantic love interest, comedy, action, costuming, color and punch to lure the sophisticates. As those elements, blended with skill and charm, unfolded upon the screen, they also seemed, judging by the manner in which the preview audience reacted, to be just what the doctor ordered for the masses. Where names, regardless of story, production and other values are the compelling influences, getting out a good attendance at the first performance should bring much favorable word-of-mouth advertising for the Brisson-Ellis duo and for the picture.

The show is all comedy—situation comedy, grotesque, farcical, sympathetic, romantic and even passionate comedy, plus music and dancing.

It's one of those mythical kingdom affairs with Brisson in the dual role of King Rudolph and Carlo Rocco, a Hollywood film star whose personality combines all that is exotic of all the great from Valentino to Gable. As the business-like king, he's pretty much of a wash-out to Elaine, the Queen, whose thoughts are only of love and romance.

Anyway the King and the vacationing star, as much alike as two peas in a pod, swap places. Rudy goes to Vienna to learn a few lessons in life under the expert conniving guidance of Peppi and Mimi. Rocco and his publicity man, Conley, remain in the palace to play hob with affairs of state and do more amazing things to the heart of Elaine, who does not know she is being deceived. There's a Brisson solo or two, "Be Careful Young Lady" and "Play A Little," followed by romantic situations in which Carlo sings "A King Can Do No Wrong" and Miss Ellis scores with a gypsy melody, "When My Prince Charming Comes Along," and "White Gardenia." The amazed queen becomes more happily excited and the psuedo King more and more scared of what is likely to happen if the real king doesn't show up in a hurry.

It all builds to a midnight rendezvous. With only a few available hours, Rocco flies to Vienna and locates the King, who is having a grand time posing as the picture star. Here occurs the picture's charming spectacle sequence. With Ilonka, Rocco sings and dances "Dancing the Viennese," accompanied by a glamorous quick-costume-changing boy and girl chorus. Rocco rushes Rudy back to the honeymoon cottage. One last dance with Elaine, and in a blissful moment Rocco slips out of her arms and King Rudolph, now knowing exactly the kind of a man the Queen expects her prince charming to be, takes his place.

As all the picture's assets are of the character carrying a particular appeal to women, smart showmen should be readily able to appreciate the exploitation values, selling the gay, melodious charm of the play, concentrating on making its comedy romance a ticket-buying urge, and going to greater lengths than usual to sell the lead personalities.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Vanessa—Her Love Story

(MGM)

Dramatic Romance

A select picture for selected audiences, general mass contribution to its box office success resolves itself into a knotty problem. The story follows a love theme, involving dramatic situations so developed as to play upon sentiment. Essentially it is a woman's picture. An English story, naturally localed in that country, its time being that of the late Victorian era, the atmosphere is typically English in dialogue and action.

Following a party honoring the 100th birthday of Judith Herries, Benjie, scamp of the clan, and Vanessa, its fairest flower, pledge their troth. The engagement brings Benjie and Ellis, cultured and refined but not at all popular, into conflict. Fire breaks out in Vanessa's home. Benjie finds her father, Adam, already dead of heart failure, but rescues his beloved, only to be castigated by the girl.

The swashbuckling Herries blood surging, Benjie goes away, has a protracted drinking spree, becomes involves with an inkeeper's daughter. Inspired by the liberal minded Judith, Vanessa seeks him out, only to learn that he is married and a child is expected. Parting, Vanessa goes to London. Benjie sees her a year later and learns she is engaged to Ellis. He goes to African wars and loses an arm. In the meantime, it is revealed, Ellis has become demented and his wife's life is far from happy. At a royal celebration, marked by novel pageantry, the lovers again meet. Learning of her experiences and telling her that he is divorced and his child dead, Benjie takes Vanessa away from Ellis. Returning to the Cumberland country, the lovers are ostracized by their neighbors.

Again Judith intervenes to send Vanessa back to her mentally ill and highly jealous husband. Pledging herself to remain with him forever, she does, enduring heart and soul torment, until his Christmas Eve death. Thus the way is opened for the lovers to pick up the often interrupted thread of love.

The production is highlighted by Oto Kruger's outstanding acting. He plays a difficult role with dextrous artistry. Similarly there are good performances by Helen Hayes, Montgomery, May Robson, Lewis Stone and Henry Stephenson, names of unquestioned box office worth. Paradoxically, while there is much to sell in the picture from a consideration of names, story and production values, the resulting entertainment—from a popular viewpoint—hardly measures up to what is promised. Yet by concentrating a campaign directly upon the feminine contingents of audiences, there are many opportunities to insure favorable results. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

Great Hotel Murder

(Fox)

Melodrama

Lowe and McLaglen don't battle, physically or orally, over any women in this picture. There is no romance in the picture. In place of that supposed standby element is melodramatic hokum mystery—embellished with comedy, drama, thrill, surprise and suspense—that, starting immediately, continues at a fast and furious pace to the tense fadeout. As love interest as a major feature is lacking, so is that commonly associated vibrant slang. Nevertheless, there is plenty of clever wisecracking. Not only a unique attraction for the amateur crime-sleuths, it being debatable as to whether the mystery the twain set out to solve is ever solved. The picture also holds much for those who like their entertainment entertaining and are not much bothered about rule of the book procedure.

The yarn has a novel premise. Blackwood is a writer of mystery crime stories. McCabe is house detective in the hotel where he lives. The basis for their antagonism is the fact that McCabe attributes the author's success to setting up the answers before he sets up the case. Blackwood good-naturedly considers the house dick just a flat foot.

A hotel guest is found dead. As McCabe blunders in, while Blackwood functions in a manner that is second nature to the fictionized super-sleuth, the man supposedly dead turns up alive and the corpse is identified as that of another. Then as circumstantial evidence accuses Dr. Temple, Mr. Harvey, Prentice and Wilson, the show becomes bafflingly complicated, but none the less entertaining, with related drama, mystery, comedy and suspense.

By scientific methods Blackwood involves a woman, Elinor Blake. Again the four essential elements are given full play, and third act creepy music is brought in to intensify the illusion. The woman tries to make a getaway. McCabe, thinking that he alone is on her trail, is not very much surprised to have Blackwood bob up beside him. Getting rid of him, by a gag, he gets a blow on the head from none other than his assistant, Feets. Then the whole thing winds up in a woodland rendezvous with Blackwood, McCabe, Mrs. Blake, Mr. Harvey and Dr. Temple present. The author advances his theory of the criminal's identity and motive, and the whole is climaxed by Harvey's sensational crackup in an escape attempt that leaves everything just as much a mystery as it was in the beginning. McCabe, for a tag line fadeout, accepts a five-cent cigar from Blackwood as full compensation for what he considers the value of his assistance in the case.

As the show gets off the beaten path in its conception of the value of fun, foolishness, mystery, suspense and drama as well as romance elimination, it opens the door wide for much that is equally new and refreshing in the selling.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Sweepstake Annie

(Liberty)

Comedy Drama

With comedy the dominant story element, this independently-produced picture is light but entertaining fare. The title is clearly indicative of the theme, the young girl who suddenly comes into considerable wealth by virtue of a draw in the Irish Sweepstakes. There is a perennial interest in the "turn of fortune" and the "lucky break."

The exhibitor might well turn some exploitation trick or two in his selling along those lines, at the same time ringing in the angle which finds the girl's family living on her earnings and then spending, for themselves, her winnings before she receives them. In that aspect is developed a major portion of the film's comedy.

Romance also has a large place in the story, that between Marion Nixon and Tom Brown, the leading names in the cast. The support also contains familiar though not outstanding names. The best sales angles revolve about the luck of the girl, her family difficulties and her almost collapsed romance.

Miss Nixon, script girl at a Hollywood studio, is the sole support of an indolent family, comprising Father Lucien Littlefield, Mother Dorothy Peterson, Brother William Janney and Sister Carol Tevis. She and Brown, electrician at the studio, are in love, but the ever annoying obstacle, to Brown, is the Foster family. Each member thereof, with Miss Nixon's money, buys a sweepstake ticket and then the unexpected happens—Miss Nixon wins the high prize. When she returns home to find her family already has spent the money mentally to their exclusive and entire satisfaction, she explodes, walks out on them after giving her father a certain amount, and establishes herself and her best friend, Inez Courtney, in an expensive apartment, with all the trimmings.

She meets a supposed foreign baron and his sister, and the baron proceeds to take more than a little interest in the young studio girl. When she becomes wealthy, the interest deepens. She is not unwilling, since Brown, earlier, told her family what he thought of them, and the couple quarreled. She next sees him as the chauffeur of the baron's sister, and apparently fascinated by the baroness. The members of foreign nobility are crooks, heading a gang after the girl's money, of course. When Miss Nixon gives a party, and is humiliated by the noisy arrival of her family and their friends, the baron attempts a double-cross to get away with the money, but Brown saves the day with neatness, dispatch and the aid of the police. The conclusion is not unexpected.—Aaronson, New York.

Carnival

(Columbia)

Comedy-Drama

There is real entertainment, of a down-to-earth nature, in this active and comedy-imbued yarn of a man who tries to be both father and mother to his child, in an atmosphere of carnival life. There is romance which has difficulty making its presence known because of the obtruseness of the masculine principal. There's a baby contest, and other story aspects lend themselves to lively selling.

Thrill and excitement are in the search for the lost baby and the fire which sweeps the carnival concessions on the midway, real comedy in the efforts of the father and his light-fingered pal to learn what there is to know about the child's welfare, pathos in his inability to see that his assistant at the concession is in love with him and is the ideal mother for the child.

In the lead are Lee Tracy and Sally Eilers, who make an excellent team, while Jimmy Durante, appearing in a not too dominant position and rather less excitable than ordinarily, provides genuine comedy and a bit of real performance now and again. Dicky Walters, youngster who plays the child, is definitely appealing.

Tracy, assisted by Durante and Miss Eilers, operates the puppet show. His wife dies in childbirth, and when her father attempts to take the child from Tracy, he and Durante steal it from the hospital nursery and make their escape with the carnival, just leaving town. Police and children's societies trail him, and he leaves the carnival with Durante, for a small town. Miss Eilers would go with them, but he will not have it. A comedy highlight is the attendance of Tracy and Durante at an infant care clinic.

Two years later, Tracy and Durante return to the show, where the child is the hit of the troupe. The old puppet setup is resumed, but Miss Eilers cannot make Tracy see that she loves him and wants to be a real mother to the youngster. The children's societies are still on the trail, and the troupe assists in steering them off when representatives appear.

Then comes Tracy's big idea. If he can find a mother for the boy, and marry her, the society will have no reason for taking him. The amusing hunt for a wife and mother ends in dismal failure as the one best possibility, a baby-incubator attendant, is discovered to be married. Then another idea. A baby contest, and Tracy concludes that if his son wins, the society can have no basis for its complaint that he is not properly cared for. They lose, until light-fingered Durante prepares a set of judge's ballots, switches them with the real votes and Tracy's child is declared winner. But the ruse is discovered and Tracy and Durante make their escape via the "Hey-Rube" call of the carnival. Fire starts, the lad is lost and thought burned. But when Durante and Tracy return home, the child is there with his rescuer, Miss Eilers, who returned after having left the show. Tracy and Durante are arrested for the contest stunt, but when Miss Eilers and he are married all's well that ends well.

It looks like a family attraction.—AARONSON, New York.

Behold My Wife

(Paramount)

Drama

There is entertainment—for adults—in this adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "Translation of a Savage," which is rather concerned with holding up the mirror to the snobbery of the wealthy; indicating, by contrast, the intrinsic worth of the poor and unsophisticated, and detailing a somewhat novel form of revenge and romance.

A young man who seeks revenge upon his family in the one way they will suffer most, through making them ridiculous, and in so doing finds himself caught in a web of murder, romance and fidelity he had not bargained for, is the central character of an active plot.

Two valued names head the cast, Gene Raymond and Sylvia Sidney, supported in particular by Juliette Compton, Laura Hope Crews, H. B. Warner and Monroe Owsley.

It is basically a dramatic story, with now and again a hint of tragedy, but occasionally there develops, from the very dramatic situations themselves, a touch of genuine amusement. Actually, there is much in the thematic development which is somewhat fantastic, but that very aspect, with a wealthy young man deliberately marrying an Indian girl to humiliate his family, should offer sales oppertunity for the alert showman.

Raymond, scion of wealth in New York and almost continuously inebriated, falls in love with a stenographer. When the family attempts to buy off the girl, she commits suicide. Raymond learns the truth, savagely denounces his family, hops into his car and proceeds wildly westward across country. Somewhere in Arizona on an Indian reservation, he crashes, starts to drink, has a fight with an Indian, and is shot. Miss Sidney, Indian girl, to save the Indian who did the shooting, nurses him back to health, and he conceives a brilliant plan for revenge on his haughty family. He marries Miss Sidney, wires his family, and on ceremonious arrival at the terminal in New York, sees to it that she steps from the train before waiting newspaper photographers in full Indian regalia, her hair in two long braids.

Revenge is all that he hoped, and very sweet. To save what they can, Miss Compton, the sister, transforms Miss Sidney, a great party is given, and Miss Sidney is the hit of the evening, in New York's smartest clothes. Raymond is bitterly angry, and Miss Sidney suddenly realizes the why of their sudden marriage. Her love turns to hate, and she leaves with the philandering Owlsey, who has been playing with the married Miss Compton. He takes Miss Sidney to his apartment, Miss Compton follows and kills him, and the Indian girl, seeing a chance to have Raymond suffer for a lifetime, goes to the police, declaring she has murdered Owsley. But Raymond, reaching the apartment after her, seeks to save her by telling the arriving police he killed Owsley. Alone Raymond and Miss Sidney tell each other the truth, are reconciled, and a police dictaphone assures them their liberty.

Adult material, its novel premise offers opportunity for selling an unusual theme.—AARONSON, New York.

The Right to Live

(Warner)

Drama

Rather specifically class and not mass entertainment, this adaptation of the Somerset Maugham novel, "The Sacred Flame," is for adult audiences, not in the fact that its sophistication is weighted with sexual implication—on the contrary, there is none of that in it—but because it is lacking in the action which the regular run of audiences prefers, because it is, in a sense, a psychological study of several persons, a study of the effects on their lives when a loved one is afflicted with an incurable illness.

That the Maugham novel is the origin of the film should carry some selling influence, especially among those audiences to which this type of film is more apt to appeal. His name, particularly since the production of "Of Human Bondage," his greatest work, has come more than ever into prominence.

This production definitely has quality. The performances are excellent all the way down the line, the settings simple but effective. The cast is headed by George Brent and Josephine Hutchinson, who recently has achieved some little popularity; Colin Clive, English actor, and such familiar and capable players as Peggy Wood, Henrietta Crosman and C. Aubrey Smith. The title may be made significant in a dignified sales campaign appealing to both men and women. The story theme is familiar to most families.

Clive and Miss Hutchinson are happily married, living at their attractive English country home. In a trial flight with a new plane, Clive crashes, is paralyzed from the waist down, with every indication he never will walk again. Miss Hutchinson devotes herself to attending him, while Miss Wood is his trained nurse. Clive lives in the expectancy that an operation promised some months hence will permit him to regain the use of his limbs. Miss Crosman, his mother, and Smith, old family friend, do their best to cheer the stricken man.

To his wife, Clive always presents a brave front; but to his nurse, who has fallen in love with him, he gives voice to all his hopelessness.

From a Brazilian coffee plantation Clive's brother, Brent, comes home, and at Clive's insistence, takes Miss Hutchinson occasionally away from the silence and sadness that pervades the home. Despite their best efforts to avoid it, they fall in love, and he determines to leave, both sacrificing greatly rather than hurt Clive. Clive is found dead, and Miss Wood, who saw Brent and Miss Hutchinson embracing, accuses Clive's wife of having murdered her husband with an overdoes of sleeping tablets.

She is about to take her suspicions to the coroner and demand an autopsy, when Miss Crosman reveals that she went to her son's room the night before, fearing he could not sleep, and found that he himself had taken the tablets, to end a bed-ridden existence which he knew could not be remedied. He had made her promise to keep the truth to herself. When Brent returns to his plantation, Miss Hutchinson, with Miss Crosman's blessing, goes with him.—AARONSON, New York.

Spirit of 1976

(RKO Radio)

Entertaining

There is entertainment in this novelty comedy, in which a year far ahead finds all play and no work the keynote of the country's activity. Told largely in musical fashion, with clever lines, is the story of the candidacy of Elmer Green for president, on a platform of all play, all wealth divided equally. His election makes a nation of idlers, until the people rise up against the enforced leisure. Arrested for bootlegging workmen's tools, Mr. Green's father-in-law to-be is brought to trial, and Mr. Green suddenly sees the light, shifts his platform to all work and no play before a jubilant populace. A nonsense idea, it is entertainingly put across.—Running time, 21½ minutes.

Going Places—No. 7

(Universal)

Travel Interest

In this series, which is in effect a personally conducted tour of places and activity by Lowell Thomas, interesting commentator, the interest level is high. Covered by voice and camera are the famed Mexican fishing ceremony, known as the feast of fishnets; the developments within a hair's-breadth of accuracy, of the championship billiard ball from the section of elephant's tusk to the miraculous smoothness of the finished product; the scenic effectiveness of Mount Ranier, in the Northwest, and the, to us, fantastic rituals of a religious nature, of the mixture of ancient and modern which characterize the inhabitants of Japan. Interesting material.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Hindu Holiday

Travelogue

The celebration of the Feast of Dussereh among the natives of Madura, Southeastern Madras, in British India, is the subject of this travelogue. The fresh bit in the picture is the parade of varied forms of transportation reflecting periods in Indian history, up to the age of the oxcart but preliminary to the automobile. Don Beddoe does the at times over-enthusiastic dialogue.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Court Sustains First Injunction In Huffman Suit

Judge Orie L. Phillips, in the United States circuit court of appeals, Denver, last week, in the film stoppage suit carried to the appeals court by Harry Huffman's General Theatres, Inc., issued an injunction against major distributors, restraining them from refusing or failing to deliver product to Mr. Huffman's company, as a result of an order of the Denver Grivance Board of the Code Authority.

Mr. Huffman, operating six houses in Denver, was declared to be in violation of the code for giving away automobiles as prizes, and the Grievance Board ordered exchanges to stop serving the Huffman theatres after his appeal to the Code Authority had resulted in the local board being sustained, and he had refused to comply.

Mr. Huffman obtained a temporary injunction against such stoppage of service, in the United States district court at Denver, pending a hearing. The government assigned its attorneys to the case, which was carried to the circuit court of appeals, resulting last week in the injunction being sustained, pending final decision.

Last week the government filed a brief in circuit court of appeals charging that Mr. Huffman seeks a monopoly of Denver exhibition, thus violating the Sherman antitrust law. Mr. Huffman was given 10 days in which to file an answer.

Exports of Films Increase Greatly

Exports of American negative and positive sound and silent films increased 30,000,000 feet in 1934 over 1933, according to preliminary figures issued by N. D. Golden, chief of the Motion Picture Section of the United States Department of Commerce at Washington. During 1934 a total of 194,433,984 feet, with a declared value of $4,213,669, was exported, which compares with a total of 164,537,245 feet, valued at $3,581,017, during the preceding year.

The 1934 exports in detail were: sound negative, 9,021,753 feet valued at $380,555; silent negative, 2,420,156 feet valued at $109,719; total negative, 11,441,909 feet valued at $490,274; sound positive, 179,659,020 feet valued at $3,644,416; silent positive, 3,333,055 feet valued at $78,979; total positive footage, 194,433,984 valued at $4,213,669.

As in the past, the United Kingdom is the most important outlet in footage and revenue. During 1934, this market has increased its consumption of American films by over 3,000,000 feet, to a total of 16,806,619 feet valued at $416,911, as against 13,620,160 feet with a value of $455,551, in 1933. Second in importance was Argentina, importing, during 1934, 15,558,935 feet with a value of $354,692 as against 12,706,152 feet having a value of $248,848 for the year 1933.

Exhibitors will be asked to show the subject, and indications are that all theatres will comply.*

U. S. Is Planning Copyright Revision

Officials of the State Department, headed by Dr. Wallace McClure, assistant chief of the treaty division, this week are conferring with representatives of various interested industries as to the provisions of new copyright legislation which the department is seeking to make our copyright law conform with the international copyright convention. Following adoption of the proposed legislation, the department will seek Senate approval of the treaty making the United States a member of the convention.

Representatives of the motion picture industry, headed by Edwin P. Kilroe, chairman of the copyright committee of the MPPDA, conferred with Dr. McClure and other department officials this week. They were preceded and followed by groups representing other industries. All of the meetings were executive and in the nature of discussions rather than hearings.

It was revealed the State Department had attempted to secure approval of the Senate foreign relations committee to a bill which it had prepared without contacting any of the interested industries. Members of the committee pointed out that the department last year had been asked to prepare such a measure, but only after conferences with those who would be affected, and refused to accept the proposals, asking that the views of the industry be obtained.

The legislation provides reduction from $250 to $100 in the penalty on exhibitors for "innocent" copyright infringement. In the case of infringement through fraud or imposition on the infringer by another, recovery is limited to fair and reasonable value of the license.

British Need American Assistance, Says Norton

Richard Norton, British and Dominions producer, recently arrived in this country, and now in Canada, declared last week he did not believe England can really make pictures without American technical help. One of the purposes of his visit, said Mr. Norton, is to acquire the services of an American film editor.

Usually producing 10 to 12 pictures each year, British and Dominions will turn out eight in the future. "Brewster's Millions," brought over by Mr. Norton, is the third of the company's four which United Artists is releasing in this country.

Hubert T. Marsh, British Firm Head, Dead in London

Hubert T. Marsh, chairman of the board and managing director of British & Dominions Pictures, Ltd., dropped dead from a heart attack on Friday while at work in his offices in London. He was 56 years of age.

Mr. Marsh had been associated with B. & D. for six years and his sudden death came as a shock to Wardour Street, where he had been regarded by many as being responsible more than any other individual in the British trade for securing world wide distribution for British film product after sound came.

Starting as a chartered accountant in London's City—the business and financial sector of the British capital—Mr. Marsh joined B. & D. six years ago in an executive capacity to help straighten out the company's financial difficulties. Within a short time he had the concern on a paying basis and was made chairman of the board and managing director.

Two years ago Mr. Marsh came to the United States and negotiated a deal with United Artists for distribution of his company's product, marking the first time a major American distributor had entered into such an arrangement.

Captain Richard Norton, now in America, and Herbert Wilcox, general manager of B. & D. production, are co-directors on the board of which Mr. Marsh was chairman. No successor has as yet been announced.

Eastman Raises Dividend Basis

Directors of Eastman Kodak Company last week restored the dividend rate of the common stock to the level of pre-depression days, $5 per share annually, lifting the quarterly payment from $1 to $1.25 per share. Also voted was the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 on the preferred stock, both dividends payable April 1 to stockholders of record March 5.

Dividends on the common have been paid at the rate of $4 annually since July 2, 1934, when the yearly rate was increased from $3, which had prevailed since October, 1932. Prior to that date the company had paid $5 annually since 1922. An extra 75 cents per share was paid on the common in addition to the regular quarterly of $1 on January 2 last. This was the first extra dividend since the first quarter of 1932, extras aggregating $3 annually having been paid every year from 1925 to 1931, inclusive.

Heywood-Wakefield Cuts Net Loss for Year 1934

Heywood-Wakefield Company has reported net loss of $174,199 for 1934, which compares with net loss of $739,762 for 1933. Current assets are listed at $2,847,119, against current liabilities of $182,164.

GEO. WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS

Fox

A lavishly mounted and spectacularly dressed girl-musical, this is the second picturization of George White's "Scandals," conceived, produced and directed by White himself. Beginning with the closing number of the 1934 edition, it has a good basic plot. This concerns a touring White stopping off at a small southern town to see that someone is presenting "White's Scandals." It's only a coincidence of names, but so pleased is the producer with what he sees on the stage that he takes his namesake and the principals to New York, and as the small towners go Broadway in a big way he evolves the present show.

The production is based on a story by Sam Hellman and Gladys Lehman, with the screen play by Jack Yellen. The songs are by Yellen, Cliff Friend, Joseph Myer and Herb Magidson. Settings are by Gordon Wiles.

The story combines human interest, romance, drama, excitement, pathos, melodramatic wallop. It is played by a cast of 30 principals, including Alice Faye, James Dunn, Ned Sparks, Lyda Roberti, Cliff Edwards, Arline Judge, Eleanor Powell, sensational dancer; Benny Rubin, Emma Dunn, Charles Richman, Roger Imhof, Jed Prouty, Fuzzy Knight, Jack Mulhall, Walter Johnson, Fred Santley and many others. Additionally there is a chorus of 200 dancing-singing girls including eight of the most noted dancers of the stage and screen and 20 men dancers, plus 30 beauty contest winners from all over the world.

An eye and ear feast, seven lavish, melodious extravaganzas are to be presented, including the new White creation, "The Hunkadola." Others move to the tune and rythm of "According to the Moonlight," "I Didn't Know You'd Get That Way," "Old Southern Custom," "I've Got Shoes," "I Was Born Too Late" and a new atmospheric version of "It's Time to Say Goodby." All principals are featured in the various spectacles, either singing or dancing in front of the chorus.

THE DESERT TRAIL

Monogram

Popular oldtime western melodramatics, heroics and romance are given another airing in this new yarn of the country where men are men. As it reads, the story runs the range of excitement, with wild-riding rodeos, gun battles, mistaken identities, murders, stage and bank holdups, fighting sheriff's posses, and the triumph of right and honesty. All happens because only one thing could mar the beautiful friendship that existed between a great rodeo star and his gambler pal—and the one thing was a woman.

The original story and screen play are by Lindsley Parsons, Monogram studio's publicity man, who has several stories of this type, among them "Randy Rides Alone" and "Man from Utah," to his credit. Direction is by Collin Lewis. The picture is being produced by Paul Malvern, responsible for all the Monogram western Lone Star productions.

The cast is headed by John Wayne, the company's western star, seen recently in "Neath Arizona Skies" and "The Trail Beyond." The feminine lead is handled by Mary Kornman, probably best remembered as the leading lady of the original "Our Gang" short series but seen in many features since growing up. With the exception of the only other woman in the cast, Anita Compillo, a newcomer, the remaining players all have been long identified with western action pictures. In cluded are Paul Fix, Edward Chandler, Al Ferguson, Lafe McKee and Henry Hall.

The presentations of this department are in no sense reviews of the pictures or evaluations of the productions. They are inventories of material.

The endeavor is to inform the exhibitor of the nature of the story and the personnel and to set forth the elements of appeal which the producer is seeking to put into the product.

"The Cutting Room" is published for the special service of exhibitors who require some detailed information concerning the character of the picture and its selling factors in advance of previews, reviews and press books.

This department's survey of pictures in no way anticipates or supplants the functions of the Showmen's Reviews which are prepared when the finished product is made available.

At this time, diversified action plus looks to be the outstanding interest-creating essential. That quality is heavily distributed throughout practically every situation.

HOW AM I DOIN'?

Paramount

As were her other previous pictures, the story and screen play for this were written by Mae West. While maintaining the atmosphere that is both peculiarly and familiarly hers, this yarn seems to have more dramatic quality than the others. In it Mae is the hip-swinging, wisecracking, blues-singing millionairess proprietor of rich Texas oil fields. Crashing society via marriage to a blue-blood socialite, she encounters in-law difficulties. About to be framed and placed in an embarrassing position, she manages, with the aid of a faithful old Indian servant, to outwit her foes and vindicate her own character.

The music is by Sammy Fain and the lyrics are by Irving Kahal. The director, Alexander Hall, has been credited recently with "Little Miss Marker," "Pursuit of Happiness" and "Limehouse Blues."

Many new personalities, but familiar screen names, hitherto not associated with Miss West's pictures, are in the cast. Included are Paul Cavanagh as the man to whom she is married, Ivan Lebedeff as the family-inspired menace to Mae's marital bliss, Tito Coral, her Indian servant, also Marjory Gateson, Fred Kohler, Monroe Owsley, Gilbert Emery, Grant Withers, Adrienne D'Ambricourt, Luis Alberni, Mona Rice and Paul Harvey.

Locales are the Texas oil fields and Buenos Aires, in which sequence a sensational horse race is featured. Music and songs for Miss West are of the character made familiar in preceding pictures.

The Mae West personality naturally being the most intriguing exploitation asset, the comedy character of the story automatically suggests new and different expressions of showmanship.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT

Radio

In this story, a romantic melodrama, tinged with complicated and menacing mystery, William Powell has the kind of role in which he has scored his most popular success. He appears as a clever man about town with unique amateur detective talents. He falls in love with a stage actress who, disappearing when a murder is committed, is linked with the crime. The story modernly tempoed and atmosphered in the hue of keyhole peeping columnists, ruthless gangsters, an iron willed lawyer, chiseling wives and sweethearts, develops many intriguing situation in which Powell not only finds and exonerates the girl suspect, but in solving the case rids himself of a menace to his own romantic safety.

The original story, published in serial form, was by the late Arthur Somers Roche, noted crime story writer, whose most recent screen contribution is the forthcoming "Shadow of Doubt" (MGM). Three well known scenarists, Howard J. Green, Anthony Veiller and Edward Kaufman, collaborated on its adaptation. Direction is by Stephen Roberts, recently credited with "Romance in Manhattan."

Powell, whose latest pictures are "Reckless" and "Evelyn Prentice," is supported by a cast of more than ordinary name value. The personality about whom all the romance, mystery and drama rotates and star of the "Star of Midnight" show, is Ginger Rogers, now being seen in "Gay Divorcee," "Romance in Manhattan" and "Roberta." Also listed are Gene Lockhart, New York stage artist, previously seen in a small part in "By Your Leave"; Ralph Morgan, Leslie Fenton and J. Farrell Macdonald.

The story, of the character whose entertainment and exploitation worth often has been proved, appears to be one which will give alert showmen much chance to capitalize not only upon that quality, but also upon the cast.

EIGHT BELLS

Columbia

While the title is the same as that of the famous old musical comedy operetta of a generation or more ago, this story is absolutely different in every particular. Based upon a play by Percy Handley, it it a thrilling romance drama of the sea. The screen play, a modern yarn of heroic and cowardly men and courageous women, which follows the formula of making the gold-laced would-be Big Shot the weakling and the competent man in the rough the hero, is by Bruce Manning and Ethel Hill. Direction is by Roy William Neill, who recently did "Jealousy" and "Mills of the Gods."

The owner of a shipping line, almost bankrupt, appoints the chief officer of one of his fine passenger liners, with whom his daughter has fallen in love, to command a freighter carrying a valuable cargo to China. The captain of the freighter is demoted. The girl and her aunt stow themselves away on the freighter. In a terrific storm at sea, mutiny builds to tense suspense as the boat threatens to sink. The captain proving yellow, the demoted hero takes charge, saves the ship and wins the girl.

Wellknown screen names feature the cast. Ralph Bellamy, recently in "The Crime of Helen Santley," "Helldorado," and "Girl in Danger," is the hero, and Ann Sothern is the heroine. The other man is John Buckler. Listed among the support are Spencer Charters, Catherine Doucet, Franklin Pangborn, John Darrow, Arthur Hohl, Addison Richards, Joseph Sauers and Charles Grapewin.

Theme and atmosphere of the story graphically suggest the character of exploitation. Action and thrill, plus the triumph of real heroism, gives a key as to what should be done.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA

MGM

Much that is promising in both entertainment and commercial adaptability is to be found in this production and its personnel. Originally one of the stage shows which contributed much to Victor Herbert's fame, it is essentially a romance with music. Adapted from a book and lyrics by Rida Johnson Young with Herbert musical score and modernized additions by Gus Kahn, with screen play by John Lee Mahin. It is directed by W. S. Van Dyke, remembered for such outstanding efforts as "Trader Horn," "Eskimo," "Manhattan Melodrama," "The Thin Man" and the current "Forsaking All Others," but heretofore inexperienced with musicals.

Timed to the period of Louis XV and the French colonization of Louisiana, the locales being Paris and the New World, the yarn deals with a princess who, swapping identities and places with a maid, came to America to marry against royal edict a handsome captain of the Yankee Scouts who had rescued her from a band of brigands. As the story unfolds, production values being up to standard, the many Victor Herbert musical numbers, including "Sweet Mystery of Life" and "Falling in Love With Some One," are sung by the two leading players accompanied by a large symphony orchestra.

Jeannette MacDonald, last seen in "The Merry Widow," essays the leading role of Marietta. Opposite her is Nelson Eddy, new to the screen but favorably known as a concert stage, radio and phonograph record baritone. Featured players include Frank Morgan, now in "The Good Fairy" and whose work in "Affairs of Cellini" won him an Academy Award nomination, Elsa Lancaster, seen in "Copperfield," Douglas Dumbrille, Joseph Cawthorn, Cecilia Parker, who appeared in "The Painted Lady"; Walter Kingsford, Edward Brophy, Harold Huber, Greta Meyer, Mary Doran, Helen Shipman.

I'LL LOVE YOU ALWAYS

As this story evolves, the title, as a showmanship asset, assumes a more than ordinary significance. A romantic drama, it deals with a show girl who married a cocky, bluffing, jobless mining engineer. Inability to make a contract, plus the depression, reduced the man to the status of truck driver and the woman to that of a taxi driver. The inevitable separation resulting after a domestic quarrel, the girl goes back to the stage, and the man for stealing money is sentenced to jail. The girl, believing he is in Russia, as their letters are diverted, returns to New York to await the birth of her child and the return of her husband. Friends intercede to continue the deception and the couple are reunited, both wiser and happier.

The picture is based upon a play by Lawrence Hazard, with screen play by Vera Caspary and Sidney Buchman. The director, Leo Bulgakov, is credited with the currently showing "White Lies."

The leading characters, Nancy Carroll and George Murphy, previously appeared together in "Jealousy." Miss Carroll also was seen recently in "Transatlantic Merry Go Round." Other principals are Jean Dixon, Harry Beresford, Arthur Hohl and Robert Allen.

An air of down-to-earth-human interest drama characterizing the production's theme, publicity and advertising seeking to arouse the more tender and sentimental emotions seem to be the quality of showmanship best applicable. As practically all the action is carried on by the two leading players and the supporting cast supplies only nominal assistance for marquee and poster requirements, more than ordinary stress should be placed upon the leads.

PARIS IN SPRING

Paramount

The title graphically hints the romantic character of this feature, and the names of the two leading players are indicative of its musical content. The yet not released "All the King's Horses" being almost a certainty to establish Mary Ellis as a singing and acting favorite and Tullio Carminati being remembered for his straight acting work in the Grace Moore musical success, "One Night of Love," and his singing one of the features of "Gallant Lady," potential exploitation and publicity has the benefit of a running start.

"Paris in Spring," changed from its first title, "Two on a Tower," by Dwight Taylor, is a story of romance and drama, plus music, in the gay French capital. Spurned by a night club queen (Miss Ellis), Playboy Nobleman Carminati would leap from the Eiffel Tower. Ready to hop, he meets a young woman, Ida Lupino, escaped from a convent, who has the same purpose in mind. In the country they find there is still happiness in life, until Miss Ellis appears to complicate the situation. Both young women decide to enter a convent, but Carminati changes Miss Ellis' mind and a young poet makes Miss Lupino's heart do strange and joyous tricks.

The screen play is by Franz Schulz and Samuel Hoffenstein. It is being directed by Lewis Milestone, recent maker of "The Captain Hates the Sea." The music is by Harry Revel and lyrics by Mack Gordon, a pair who have contributed to many Paramount musical hits.

Supporting the three principals are old and new players as well as some of the company's most promising juveniles. Listed are Lynn Overman, now in "Rumba"; John Blakely, Hugh Enfield, Joseph North, Jack Raymond, Akim Tamiroff and John Ardizeni.

Love interest and music, the sustaining elements, appear to be the logical selling angles substantiating the name value of the leading players.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL

Paramount

This production is adapted from the stage show "Small Miracle," a sensation in New York for many weeks and now being presented in several metropolitan centers. The screen play is by the author, Norman Krasna. The picture version is being directed by Mitchel Leisen, who handled "Murder in the Vanities."

Essentially the story is a drama, the whole action of which takes place in and around the lobby and lounge room of a theatre. There comes a convicted murderer, en route to the death house and guarded by officers, to while away hours between trains. A checkroom boy steals a jewel; the boy and his sweetheart are being blackmailed by an usherette. A woman meets her lover and they plan an evening together. By a ruse the murderer escapes and phones a man whom he kills upon his arrival, the convict in turn being the recipient of quick death at the hands of police. The slain man is revealed as the blackmailing usherette's husband. Rather than reveal to insurance company officials their relationship, the posing husband and wife say a mistake has been made. If the pin is not reclaimed in six months, it will constitute a nest egg for the checkroom boy and his sweetheart.

Richard Barthelmess, long with Warner, is the convict, Joe Morrison the gem thief and Helen Mack his sweetheart. Dorothy Tree is the usherette and Noel Madison her slain husband. Gertrude Michael is the thief's victim and Ray Milland her lover. Others are Roscoe Karns, Lois Kent, Henry Travers, Christian Rub and Greta Meyer.

Elements which for a time raised doubt as to the story's suitability for picture purposes having been removed, the strange series of events, the locale in which they happen and the character of the persons which they affect are a direct tip-off as to the kind of publicity that should accompany its showing.

STRANGERS ALL

Radio

In essence a farcical domestic comedy, this production promises much in the way of showmanship and exploitation worth. In theme, the idea is somewhat similar to "Three Cornered Moon" and "The Party's Over." Based on a play by Marie Bercovici, the screen play is by Milton Krims, who collaborated on "Grand Old Girl," a picture in which May Robson, present star, also was featured. Direction is by Charles Vidor.

The story deals with the Carter family, presided over by a tolerant mother who tries to understand them all. It includes one hard working business man's son who is the perpetual goat for his brothers' and sister's idiosyncrasies; one who imagines himself a great actor; another devoted to radicalism endeavoring to save the masses from the "grinding capitalistic heel"; a collegiate daughter who never writes home. Besides all this, the mother is further bothered by a persistent suitor. As the yarn runs its course of fun, folly and drama, it is climaxed when the mother forgets the stage instructions given her by her lawyer and, despite the ham acting of the ambitious actor son, gets her radically inclined son freed of charges of revolution plotting.

May Robson will be seen in the mother role. Her latest picture, which probably will be seen before this is released, is "Vanessa." Supporting players include Preston Foster, Florine McKinney, now in "Night Life of the Gods"; William Bakewell, James Bush, Leon Ames, Clifford Jones and Samuel Hinds.

Concerning itself with situations that, some time or other, are part of the life of many American families, it provides opportunities for putting lots of personal and intimate appeal into an interest-creating publicity campaign.

Women's Group Operates Theatre In Florida Town

Rhinebeck, N. Y., is not the only town in the country boasting a motion picture theatre operated by civic minded citizens who give of their time and energy without recompense.

The Via theatre, of Crescent City, in Florida, is such a house, and Mrs. M. P. LaBree is its master mind. This most unusual community entertainment center had its origin back in 1914, when the feminine members of the Village Improvement Association, the initials of which form the theatre's name, began to show motion pictures for the citizenry. Two years later the women of the association, since renamed the Woman's Club, paid for the construction of a 310-seat theatre.

Until the vocalization of the screen, the women's organization continued its film showings four times each week, the remarkable, and versatile Mrs. La Bree handling active operation, buying all film and serving without remuneration. Incidentally, Mrs. La Bree is variously engaged as the local agent for the Standard Oil Company, local Railway Express agent, and an insurance operator of no mean proportions. Scott Chesnutt, of Paramount's Jacksonville exchange, sold his company's product to Mrs. La Bree way back when, in the first year of operation, and she has taken the full first run output every year since.

It is entertainingly recalled down in Crescent City that when Mr. Chesnutt first visited his prospective account, he was forced to stay overnight, by reason of poor train service. There were no sidewalks in the town then, and Mr. Chesnutt, it is said, almost fell over a cow in the street when he called on Mrs. La Bree one night, she being too busy to see him during the day.

When the screen began to make itself heard, the task became a trifle complicated for the women, and Roy Patience, in a spirit of civic helpfulness, sold $4,950 worth of stock in a corporation, named the Crescent City Amusement Company. Two new Simplex projectors and RCA sound equipment came to the theatre, and now the Via has performances six nights each week (four during the summer), and exhibits first run the product of five major companies.

In association with Mr. Patience, Mrs. La Bree continues to handle the operation of the theatre, and interviews film salesmen. The two executives work without compensation, and Mr. Patience, with justifiable pride, reports that the equipment is fully paid for, and expects to surprise his stockholders with a 10 per cent dividend this month.

The sixth annual banquet and ball of the Warner Club, organization of home office employees, was held at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria in New York last Saturday evening, with 1,500 in attendance from the home office and branches. # REPRODUCERS EXEMPT FROM 5 PER CENT TAX

Treasury Department Rules Apparatus Not Liable If Not Usable for Radio Receiving Sets

The United States Treasury Department at Washington last week decided that sound reproducers used in motion picture theatres are not subject to the 5 per cent tax specified in Section 607 of the Revenue Act of 1932, provided they are not suitable for use in connection with radio receiving sets or combination phonograph and radio sets. If the tax had been upheld, it eventually would have been passed on to exhibitors in the form of higher service or equipment license charges which would have been imposed by the manufacturers.

Inquiry Protested

In November, 1934, revenue agents from Washington began an inspection of the books of various manufacturers who up to that time had failed to file any returns covering this tax. J. A. Tanney, treasurer of Sales-On-Sound Corporation, led a protest, which later was joined in by the Entertainment Apparatus Manufacturers Association, Inc.

Other sound equipment manufacturers offered their support to the protest. Late in December, Samuel Edelstein, attorney for the Manufacturers Association, wrote to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue setting forth the many reasons why the application of this tax to motion picture equipment was entirely unwarranted. The technical data contained in this letter are available to all members of the industry who may be interested.

Distinction Drawn

In answer to Mr. Edelstein's letter, Deputy Comimssioner D. S. Bliss drew a clear distinction between radio receiving sets or combination radio-phonograph sets, and motion picture sound reproducing apparatus, which includes such component parts as amplifiers, boosters, directional baffles, exponential horns, loud speakers and soundheads. The status of synchronous disc turntables is undetermined in Mr. Bliss' decision, but as these are virtually obsolete, it is considered probable that very little tax, if any, may be collected, if this equipment is judged as coming under the scope of the act.

Individual Rulings

"The question of whether amplifiers and loudspeakers are taxable under Section 607 is one of fact to be determined by the test of their suitability for use in connection with radio receiving sets or combination phonograph and radio sets," Mr. Bliss said. "If they are not suitable for such purposes, Section 607 of the Revenue Act of 1932 is not applicable.

"Individuals who desire rulings on particular types of amplifiers and loudspeakers produced by them, should each submit copies of their catalogues or advertising literature, with a complete statement of facts as to the construction and suitability of such products for radio work."

Progress Made on Zoning Schedules

Definite progress toward ultimate establishment of acceptable clearance and zoning schedules in all key territories is being made, the Code Authority announced this week. Plans due for early consideration concern Kansas City, New Haven, Conn., Milwaukee, Boston, New Orleans and Cincinnati.

The Los Angeles plan, as reported two weeks ago, has received the Code Authority's informal approval, there being but a few remaining details to be cleared up before final approval. These details include clarification of clauses pertaining to prints, geographical areas and starting date of the schedule. These were expected to be ironed out and the necessary approval given at the weekly meeting Thursday.

Kansas City Action Awaited

The Authority also is expected to discuss the Kansas City schedule and may adopt it. The Kansas City plan now before the industry's governing body in New York was drawn by the local code board and is not to be confused with a schedule drafted by the Kansas City Independent Theatre Owners, which was turned down by Elmer C. Rhoden, operating head of Fox Midwest.

The New Haven and Milwaukee schedules also were expected to come up for at least preliminary consideration Thursday.

From Boston came the report that the clearance and zoning board has adopted individual decisions on theatres included in the original schedules for the northern and eastern sectors of Boston.

Under a decision of the clearance and zoning board of Cincinnati, suburban houses will get pictures 28 days after second-runs and where second-runs do not play a picture, suburbans will be entitled to features 60 days after downtown first-runs.

Wisconsin Independents Act

The Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin went on record as favoring the zoning and clearance schedule adopted by the local board in Milwaukee last July. The schedule penalizes exhibitors "showing flesh, double features, and giving gifts and premiums by withholding product availability for longer periods." Inasmuch as this schedule was voted down by the Code Authority the association is preparing a brief to present its arguments. It is contended that approximately 90 per cent of the local exhibitors favor the schedule.

The Code Authority raised objections to the publication by Louis Nizer, secretary and coun- of the New York Film Board of Trade, of statistics and other information in connection with the Code Authority's activities in Mr. Nizer's forthcoming book, "New Courts of Industry; Self-Regulation Under the Motion Picture Code."

N. S. S. Hits on New Trailer Arrangement

National Screen Service is turning to production talent for a new type of special trailer on M-G-M and Warner releases made necessary by decision of those two majors to make and sell their own service. They're good.

Five of the new brand were shown yesterday noon, subjects being "Black Fury" and "Devil Dogs of the Air" on the Warner list and "The Night Is Young," "Sequoia" and "Biography of a Bachelor Girl" on the Metro list.

Since actual production clips are not available in these two cases, N. S. S. is building action stuff around the distributor's releases. Fred Kohler occupies feature spot in the trailer on "Black Fury." The slight story thread has him addressing the tycoons of a fictitious mine and urging them to learn conditions for themselves as portrayed by Paul Muni in "Black Fury." The spiel permits Kohler to get in the usual plug for the attraction. Featured in the "Biography of a Bachelor Girl" trailer is Thelma Todd; Herman Bing and Charles Judels in the subject matter on "The Night Is Young"; Pat Flaherty and Warren Hymer on "Devil Dogs" and Charles B. Murphy, the animal trainer, on "Sequoia."

The idea is novel, the treatment fresh and the conclusion easily apparent that the scheme runs far ahead of the usual trailer idea, including the average affair turned out by N. S. S. K.

National Screen's New Trailers Previewed

National Screen Service yesterday gave a trade press preview on five of the trailers it is producing without the cooperation of M-G-M and Warner Bros.-First National, both of which are now making their own picture advance ballyhoos. These trailers do not employ clips from the films publicized, but instead offer individual, interest-arousing stories, told in footage not exceeding 200 feet. In virtually every trailer players known to screen audiences are used and each constitutes excellent supplementary entertainment for theaters, apart from their respective publicity values. Trailers screened yesterday were for "Biography of a Bachelor Girl," with Thelma Todd appearing in the National Screen Service production; "Sequoia," with Charles B. Murphy and Ben Hall; "The Night is Young," with Charles Judels and Herman Bing; "Devil Dogs of the Air," with Pat Flaherty and Warren Hymer, and "Black Fury," with Fred Kohler. They're an effective and novel medium for selling forthcoming pictures to your patrons. EDDY.

Nat. Screen Shows Better Trailers

New York.—National Screen Service yesterday showed the trade press five advance trailers, built along brand new production lines and embodying the first intelligent use of production entertainment without spilling the whole story of the pictures

The five trailers are of Ann Harding in MGM's "Biography of a Bachelor Girl' "Devil Dogs of the Air," with the action taking place in mid-ocean where two aviators are adrift, anxiously awaiting rescue by the "Devil Dogs," and discussing the merits of the picture; "The Night is Young," with Herman Bing and Charles Judels getting into trouble with a studio watchman; "Sequoia," showing Charles Murphy, the animal trainer; "Black Fury, with Fred Kohler telling the board of directors the lowdown on Muni's coal mine picture.

National Screen Scores

New trailers, which National Screen Service is now making, are an innovation in trailers that should prove a boon to audiences. New idea is to take the main theme of the pictures being exploited on the screen and build a short dramatization around them. Title of the picture and the names of the stars and featured players are worked into the story. In short, it takes the stereotyped forms of advance ballyhoo and presents them in a visual manner that is ten times less obvious and considerably more lasting in the memory of the movie-goer. National Screen is to be congratulated for this new departure.

PRODUCED TRAILERS

20 Mins.
Projection Room
National Screen Service

Expanding on recent experiments in trailer manufacture, partly with a view to getting away from the routine form, National Screen Service has a new type trailer, produced in toto by that company.

These trailers are so staged that they look suspiciously like shorts until they get well under way. Subtly managed on the advertising angle, the trailer uses clever means to make sure that strong selling points are injected.

National was, in a fashion, forced to this new style but has evolved a method which marks a distinct advance in this field. It was partly forced because Metro, on Jan. 1, joined Warner Bros. as a producer of its own trailers.

Having no contracts with these majors, under which dialog scenes would be made available, plus other co-operation, NSS was faced with the problem of servicing its accounts (theatres) on pictures of these two companies. Getting together a group of five specially produced trailers on Warner and Metro pictures, NSS hired its own actors, prepared its own sets and staged the scenes. It used no talent under contract to either Warner or Metro.

On 'Biography of a Bachelor Girl' (MG) National hired Thelma Todd and others to stage a bedroom scene. After making the audience guess as to what it is all about, the characters, as in a story, ring in a discussion on 'Bachelor Girl' to send in the ad plug. Trailer subject ends with Miss Todd hopping out of bed in nightgown, throwing a mink coat over her shoulders and declaring that she's going out to find what impressions of life Ann Harding (star of the picture) reveals in her diary.

The one for 'Devil Dogs' (WB) opens like a newsreel with lost fliers in the Pacific. Film cuts to two men marooned on airplane wreckage out at sea. Warren B. Hymer and Pat Flaherty have a radio with them through which comes gab about 'Devil Dogs,' the two men getting into a fight over the merits of that picture.

'Night Is Young' (MG) is another, with Herman Bing and Charles Judels as a couple of muggs crashing a studio gate in their car and ending up discussing this picture with the doorman.

Production of trailers on 'Sequoia' (MG) and 'Black Fury' (WB) are handled with freshness and effect. Charles B. Murphy, animal trainer, who handled beasts for 'Sequoia,' is in a hunting lodge setting, with a mountain lion as a pet. He introduces a conversation with another man over 'Sequoia.' For 'Black Fury' there is a company directors' meeting when one man argues with board members over what they know about handling the troubles of miners.

Some of these trailers carry an introduction credit, making them look more than ever like a short, with the opening words: 'National Screen Presents.' Copy tags onto produced scenes but is severely held down to get away from the tiresome ballyhoo which has characterized so many trailers.

If NSS is getting out these trailers on WB and Metro pictures as a means of competing against these two majors in the trailer field, it is offering real opposition. It is a forward step in screen advertising methods. Aside from anything else, these new type advance plugs give a variety in trailers if a house is using the conventional design, which includes actual scenes from films.

SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW

TRAILERS DELUXE!

Faced with the necessity of furnishing the theatremen with trailers that have real punch and seat-selling power, National Screen Service has effectively risen to the occasion and prepared "plot" trailers which are by far the sweetest yet offered.

At a private screening held in New York early this week, the trade press was afforded its first opportunity of seeing a group of these new trailers that are designed to overcome the loss of "action or scene" trailers due to the fact that Metro and Warners are making and servicing their own.

The idea has been in the works for a long time. As a matter of fact we first saw these new trailers over six months ago, but we did not consider them sufficiently perfected for actual release to theatres. But today (4th), we saw the finished product and we can honestly say that they are truly an innovation in advance advertising for any picture.

The first five screened included the following: "Sequoia," "Black Fury," "The Night Is Young," "Devil Dogs of the Air" and "Biography of a Bachelor Girl." Each one is an advance plug for the picture that will certainly meet with audience approval for any and every theatre. Best of all is the fact that they do not give the slightest "tip-off" on the picture plot in any manner whatsoever.

The first part of each of this new form of trailer is devoted to a little "plot" in which the picture is approached in a subtle, yet convincing manner. The second part is the musically, synchronized, animated titles that definitely "sell" the picture. The two ideas combined go to make up a swell plug for the picture. Just wait until you've had a chance to see these new trailers yourself. You will be just as enthused as we were.

Surrounded by fine production, they constitute a marvelous introduction to the coming attraction with an appeal heretofore never utilized for screen trailers. We recommend them and predict that they will be greeted with loud and long approval by theatremen all over the country.

FILM CURB

Woman In The Dark, RKO-Radio. Dashiell Hammett, author. Phil Rosen, director. Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy, Melvyn Douglas, Roscoe Ates. 69 minutes. This is a crook melo that is decidedly entertaining. Story of man who gets in wrong because of hasty temper. It moves along swiftly, is well enacted by a most competent cast and should find favor with most audiences.—Dec. 15, 1934.

National Screen Answers Warner Suit on Trailers

Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Vitagraph, Inc., last week instituted a $1,000,000 damage and permanent injunction action against National Screen Service, charging trailers distributed by the defendant and exploiting Warner product constitute an unfair and unauthorized practice and have tended to damage the Warner reputation and business. Summons and complaint already have been served in the suit, which will be tried in New York State supreme court.

Charges Lack of Authorization

Several months ago Warner started to make its own trailers, but National has continued to make trailers for Warner pictures without using actual scenes from productions. The plaintiffs, pending trial, may seek a temporary injunction.

The complaint specified that National is using copyright titles of Warner pictures without authorization as well as the names of players under contract. Allegation is made that these trailers reduced Warner revenue from its own trailers and that "the public appeal and popularity of actors and actresses employed by Warners, many of whom are employed under contracts or agreements for various periods of time, has been and is being lessened and diminished by spurious and inferior actors and actresses employed by defendant impersonating them and imitating their parts."

National Screen Answers

This week the following statement was issued by National Screen:

"Since Warner Bros. after seven years of silence have seen fit to bring a suit charging that trailers distributed by National Screen and exploiting Warner Bros. pictures constitute an unfair practice, National Screen certainly welcomes the opportunity of having the proper authorities determine whether or not it has the right to serve the requirements of its thousands of exhibitor customers throughout the country, as long as it does not infringe on any copyright protections. Warner Bros. have certain rights under the copyright laws. These rights National Screen has always recognized and respected.

"National Screen emphatically denies that it has infringed in any manner whatsoever, or that it has been guilty of any unfair methods. On the other hand, National Screen contends that it has rendered a very definite service in a very fair manner and of great value to the exhibitor throughout the country as evidenced by the substantial support of thousands of exhibitors over a period of fifteen years.

"Warner Bros.' contention that no one has the right to mention the name of their productions, or the players in any of these productions without their authorized permission, is too ridiculous to require lengthy comment. If this were so, it would mean that no newspaper or trade paper would have the right to mention their productions in any form whatsoever without their consent. It would also mean that no exhibitor would have the right to either using his own ingenuity, or authorizing others to do it for him, in properly exploiting their pictures for which he has contracted. Furthermore, it would mean that no exhibitor has the right to advertise in any form whatsoever, whether in newspapers, in the lobby, or on the screen any Warner Bros. pictures that he has contracted for without their authorized permission."

TALKS WITH MANAGERS ON PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Many theatre owners and managers perhaps are familiar with the "Bluebook School" which I have conducted in this department quite consistently for a number of years. Addressed to projectionists, it was very successful, owing importantly to the conscientious interest of the men who enrolled as "pupils."

Conversations on Projection

Soon there is to be a new Bluebook—the sixth edition of my Handbook of Projection—and later on I expect to resume the "school" on the basis of the new book. In the meantime I am going to use this space for what it pleases me to call conversations with theatre managers. And by managers I mean all those in direct charge of theatres, be they employed by the owners or the owners themselves.

I hope to be able to lay before them many matters relating to projection and sound which I think theatre management should have a certain understanding and appreciation of in order to get desired results efficiently and economically, and with the least amount of friction with the fellows responsible for the operation of the equipment. I don't plan to go into technical details in these talks, for managers are not expected to be technicians in projection. I do think, however, that managers should be well enough acquainted with the general processes of projection and sound to know when they are getting their money's worth and when they are not.

The wary Scot says, "Many a mickle makes a muckle," and that applies to projection as well as to other affairs of the theatre. If a theatre charging only 20 cents an admission, loses but a single patron a day, the loss in money at the end of a year is $73. And many a potential unit of patronage has been lost because of dissatisfaction traceable to continued faulty projection and sound.

The Theatre's Greatest Loss

But the greatest loss to the theatre as a result of unskillful or haphazardly supervised projection lies in operating and maintenance costs. In a projection system having thousands of dollars' worth of equipment, merely an improper lubricating routine can mean unnecessary repairs calling for substantial expenditures in money, not to mention time. And much more than such minor slips in routine are common in many projection departments. This because of inefficient, careless or poorly trained projectionists? Not so often as some managers may think. I know first-hand, from experience (and I have talked, preached, walked and slept projection for a quarter of a century), that breakdowns, repairs more costly than originally necessary, excessive current charges, faulty projection and sound are frequently, to be laid more justly at the door of the management than blamed on the projection staff.

Therefore I think projection worthy of some examination on the part of managers. In fact, this series of talks is the direct result of inquiries that have come from managers.

Letters Welcomed

It will be helpful, I think, if managers themselves take an active part in these discussions. When a manager disagrees with my point of view, I should welcome a letter from him stating his opinion and the reasons therefore. Much good should come from such demonstrations of interest. If it is desired that no name be published, the request shall be honored.

In addition to my general talks on the processes of projection and their bearing upon the functions of management, I shall submit questions calculated to help in understanding these processes, which will concern both regular operation and servicing.

It is hoped that at least a goodly number of managers will be interested enough in their relations with projection to use these questions as a means of adding to their knowledge of this phase of theatre operation. The best answer to each question will be published, and if there is no question that is entirely correct, the correct answer, as determined not only by myself but with the aid of leading engineers, will be given. This method, I believe, will add interest to the series as well as make it more instructive.

Before closing this introduction to my talks with managers I want to express in this way my appreciation of those who were faithful "pupils" of the "Bluebook School" just ended. At the head of the class, if we base the position on "attendance," are Messrs. Evans and Rau, projectionists of the Capitol theatre in Victoria, British Columbia.

In following the "school" with the present series, I have by no means forgotten the projectionists. In fact, I can see where they may get a great deal of good out of these talks with managers (maybe a little more appreciation from management of the projectionist's practical problems, for one thing).

RADIO PHOTO IS NEW AIM

This week at RCA's Camden, N. J., experimental station engineers were delving again into the future, attempting to perfect what is called facsimile radio, or the transmission of photographs on ultra short wave at almost incalculable speed. They are not particularly communicative, but their theory is that photos as now transmitted are too slow, that the solution rests in ultra short wave, the subject of their undivided attention.

Already they have experimented between the Empire State Building, New York City, and Camden. They hope next fall to establish such commercial communication between New York and Philadelphia. Manhattan they optimistically envision as the ultimate world center of a system of photo-radio. Says President David Sarnoff: "My faith in the future of radio is geared to facsimile. The facsimile is going to open the way to television."

Wilson Denies Anti-Chain Film Violates the Code

Frank R. Wilson, president of Economic Films, said this week that the arrangement he is making with merchants for showing of his anti-chain store feature, "Forward America," details of which were described in the January 26 issue of the Herald, is not a violation of Section I, Part 3, Article V-E of the motion picture code, which concerns rebates and cut rate admissions.

"It is true," said Mr. Wilson, "that independent merchants buy large blocks of tickets and in most cases distribute them to customers. The tickets are paid for at the usual box office price whenever this picture is played as a regular attraction. In such a case the house double features, "Forward America," with its regular feature and its usual cash intake is not impaired.

"In a Connecticut town of 3,500 population, the merchants purchased $138 worth of tickets and the house took in $76 at the box office, making a total intake of $214 on the day, against a daily average intake for that house of $80 per day."

Complete Agency Tieup

Al Kingston has completed negotiations to represent the literary and theatrical Wieland Agency, of London, in New York and Hollywood. The deal was arranged between Selma Alexander of the Kingston office, and Al Sherman, American representative for Wieland. Headquarters have been established in the Palace theatre building, on Broadway.

The unsophisticated appealing sweetness of Gene Stratton-Porter's "Girl of the Limberlost" has successfully been captured in the screen version at the State-Lake.

Whether you were one who in your teens read and reread the book, is of little consequence. The film is delightful. The characters are well chosen and the photography and directing excellent.

Good Morning!

I don't care how much you've been around—there are some things that get you by the throat. "Girl of the Limberlost" is a film that does that little thing.

Here is a picture that should be greeted with acclaim and supported by all rooters for clean and entertaining photoplays.

It has been beautifully adapted from the late Gene Stratton-Porter's widely read novel. The story of the backwoods mother who, for many years hates her daughter because she feels that the latter's impending birth had prevented her from saving her ...usband's life, has been treated with ... sort of simplicity and sincerity ...s force.

...e Dresser gives an outstanding ...ance as the embittered mother ... heart remains ice-encased un-...er daughter grown, she learns ... the merest chance of the unworthiness of her late lamented. Then—the ice melts—and Katherine Comstock's remorse and atonement are touching to behold.

You love Marian Marsh as Elnora Comstock, whose gentleness, charm and patience overcome the most difficult obstacles, and will be most impressed by the fine performances of Ralph Morgan and Helen Jerome Eddy as a childless couple wh... in their power to ligh... of the girl.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—You exhibitors that have not shown this one have the biggest treat of the season in store for your patrons. Go the limit on telling them you are showing "Broadway Bill" and they will come and they will be more than satisfied. I expected big business and was not disappointed. The largest box office on opening day in the history of this theatre, which is now open six months.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

FIGHTING CODE, THE: Buck Jones—A very fine western that did plenty of business for us. Buck Jones can put action into a picture that puts it across with Western fans and believe me there are plenty of them. Running time, 60 minutes. Played January 25-26.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

HELL CAT, THE: Robert Armstrong, Ann Sothern—A nice picture that pleased everyone who saw it. Nothing big, but just the type to suit an average audience. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 24.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: May Robson, Carole Lombard—We advertised this as the grand successor to "Lady for a Day" and it really is. A fine piece of production for any producer. Running time, 77 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Victor Jory, Fay Wray—Not a big production but with Robson doing her bit, great things evolve from the mediocre. I like Jory and would like to see him in a worthwhile role. This picture won't draw a lot but will please the majority who see it. Scene of brother dying seemed superfluous to me. Running time, 65 minutes. Played January 25-26.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE: Jean Arthur, Donald Cook, Richard Cromwell, Anita Louise—Good program and above the average. Previous reports on this one should have been better.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

ONE IS GUILTY: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—Better than average mystery picture of the program type. No draw, however. Business below average. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 29.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—You small town boys better lay off this four star Liberty. Might go where they wear high hats and forked tail coats, but here, where they come in overalls and what have you, and like western pictures and hill billy music, they walked out on it, and gave me a very dirty look. There is no use for producers to think they can make the average American audience like operatic singing, and most of that in foreign lingo. Grace Moore can sing, but she would starve to death where they like such as "Last Round Up" and "When They Cut Down the Old Pine Tree." Running time, 82 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—No doubt about it; this is the finest musical picture yet to come from Hollywood. We were unfortunate in having bad weather which gave us a poor gross, but those who came out in all the storm were well rewarded. Had some doubts that this would please, but the greater part of our patrons had nothing but praise for it, even though grand opera is not their idea of entertainment. Others who had a real appreciation for the art came two and three times. The recording of the musical numbers is as near perfection as you will find, and Columbia deserves a big bouquet for daring to do something different and doing it so successfully. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 20-24.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN: Elissa Landi, Frank Morgan, Joseph Schildkraut—Well produced picture, wonderful performance by Frank Morgan. Not a box office special by any means but you won't be afraid to meet the ladies when they come out. Running time, 70 minutes. Played February 8.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tim McCoy—Good action picture that drew average business on Saturday. Running time, 60 minutes. Played February 9.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY: Walter Connolly, Doris Kenyon, Robert Young—A wonderful picture. Good story, well directed, and well acted, but a flop at the box office. Inquiries were made at the box office to know if it was not a religious picture. Another title suitable for this picture would have made it more profitable to the exhibitors. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 10-12.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

First National

BRITISH AGENT: Leslie Howard, Kay Francis—Another period picture that belongs in the scrap barrel. A waste of time to show it.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—A real hit that will score with nearly every type of audience. Gets away from the stereotyped musical plot and background. Dick Powell does the best work of his career and Ruby Keeler comes through with a swell performance. Pulled and pleased, so we were all satisfied. Orchids to Warners for one swell show. Running time, 97 minutes. Played February 3-4-5.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—This is a very good picture that should please all who see it. Nothing big, but a good little picture that is both pleasing and entertaining. It is the romantic story of a soldier, set against a background in the Hawaiian Islands and West Point. The musical touch adds much to the entertainment and pleased practically everyone. Played two days to good business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played February 4-5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Great. Not a single complaint that I heard, and I usually hear them. Josephine Hutchinson is new here but she is very good, while Dick Powell is becoming one of the most popular stars with my patrons. Don't hesitate to advertise this one for it is one of the best. Funny, clean, with several good songs. Played January 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

I SELL ANYTHING: Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak—For some reason this failed to click. Do not think it pleased anyone. Pat O'Brien is not good enough for a lead. Too much talk, and, well, it just didn't go over. Running time, 70 minutes. Played January 16-17.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—If you want a good Saturday picture this will draw and please. It has good thrills in stunt flying and the story will hold well enough to satisfy. Running time, 61 minutes. Played February 1-2.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—Exciting mystery that will literally keep your patrons up in the air. Pleased in our case and did a nice midweek business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played January 30-31.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—This is just another mystery show and those who like them will like this, though there is very little detective work in it and more of a Western action appeal than attractive to the mystery student.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—An airplane murder mystery that pleased my Family Night patrons. Airplane pictures almost always please. Running time, 61 minutes. Played January 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—One swell action picture that your Saturday night fans will go wild over. Good air photography. Don't pass this one up. Running time, seven reels.—Fred E. Pennell, The "Cozy" Theatre, Decatur, Mich. General patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe E. Brown—Not quite so good as some of the Joe Brown shows but it pleased and that is all that is necessary. Joe's shows are always funny and always clean. Kept the audience laughing right to the last reel. Running time, 69 minutes. Played January 5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—If you can put over wild animal pictures, don't pass this up. Such type of picture has a certain draw, especially among the men, not found otherwise.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—We all know of this kid's ability, therefore we don't write much. Just advertise the show, the rest comes easy. Running time, 85 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Jane Withers, Charles Sellon, Judith Allen—How could a picture be anything but great with that little American Darling in it. She could put over a bad story, and this story was far from that. Besides the two stars in this picture, I believe special mention should be made of Jane Withers as the little imp and her outstanding performance, and also that almost unknown but old timer actor, Charles Sellon. I believe if Fox will only give him the right roles that he, with Henry B. Walthall, can go to top place with the character actors. Shirley Temple is always better opposite James Dunn, and vice versa. This picture is their best. Running time, nine reels.—Fred E. Pennell, "The "Cozy" Theatre, Decatur, Mich. General patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—Shirley comes clean again. Everyone spoke a good word on their way out. Nice plot with plenty of zip and action. Charles Sellon nearly steals the picture with his wheel chair comedy. Can recommend this one 100 per cent.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—Just a good program picture with enough thrills, spills and chills to make it one exciting evening's entertainment. Average business. Running time, eight reels. Played January 24-26.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Will Rogers' best one yet, with a swell supporting cast. Enough laughs to make your head spin, with down-to-earth fun. Patrons were well pleased with this picture. Average business. Running time, nine reels. Played January 20-22.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: Lew Ayres, "Pat" Patterson—A light "sillical" production of the naval officer's shore leave. Some amusing incidents with Holloway and Dinehart doing the honors. Nothing much happens but the entertainment possibilities are definite for a midweek run. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 27-29.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Ketti Gallian, Spencer Tracy—They make a big fuss about the new blonde star in this one, but nothing happens. She is too new to talk the American language.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles, Douglass Montgomery—A very poor excuse for entertainment. Not very many saw it, which was well, as those who did made it a point to express their dissatisfaction. The continuous musical thisa' and thata' will have you to the screaming point. Tough luck for Gloria and a poor spot for Boles. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 20-22.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Jackie Searles, Dorothy Peterson—A big disappointment. Not that the picture wasn't good. It was. But everyone expected a comedy; instead there were tears. Don't know why it was made this way. All the folks settled back in their seats and got ready for some laughs but it didn't work out that way.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Dorothy Peterson, Jackie Searl—It is not the "Peck's Bad Boy" of Schultz's grocery. It is a story of a father's love for an adopted son. While it did not cost much to produce from the standpoint of production values, it is adequate for the story that it tells. It is a real heart touching story that pleased and drew above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THREE ON A HONEYMOON: Sally Eilers, Johnny Mack Brown—Played this picture late and the weather was too cold the first night, but grossed enough second night to make up for first night's loss. A good program picture. Played January 31-February 1.—Mary M. Ross, Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town and rural patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard—At last they have learned how to make westerns. Pulled and pleased 100 per cent. More like this and let the other fellow have Liberty's four star pictures. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 3.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

LITTLE MEN: Ralph Morgan, Erin O'Brien-Moore —This was a nice, sentimental little story, but of course not up to the production standard of "Little Women." Believe the Boy Scouts tieup would be a natural on this.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LITTLE MEN: Ralph Morgan, Erin O'Brien Moore gan—Very entertaining picturization of Louisa M. Alcott's story, well acted and directed. It has comedy and tears, and a happy ending. Nice family picture. Plug it with school teachers and reverends, because of its high moral tone. Kids will eat it up. Played February 10-11.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines—Fairly interesting program picture that got a number of laughs. Played on Bargain Nights to average business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played February 5.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

MGM

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Hollywood's version of Victor Herbert's tuneful operetta retains the title of the original and some of the music but that is about all. OK for the kiddies if the bogey man scenes will not keep them awake, but for the adults the appeal is doubtful. Pleased a fair number of our patrons but did not pull due to snowstorm. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 18-19.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—This one pleased the operator's wife and myself but did not click with the patrons. An excellent cast but the story is very poor and just did not please. I liked it so well myself that I was surprised at the adverse comments. Running time, 84 minutes. Played February 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHAINED: Clark Gable, Joan Crawford—Most of my patrons had seen this picture before. However, it was well received. Several came to see it the second time. Played February 2.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver—This picture is a special in every sense of the word. It has an all star cast which leaves nothing to be asked for in acting. It has a real story which offers every sort of emotional contrast, and it has been painstakingly produced. However, as a local critic aptly expressed it, "David Copperfield is as British as plum pudding." It is, unfortunately for many a small town exhibitor, class entertainment of the highest quality. It is far too long, as it runs about two hours and five minutes. Freddie Bartholomew as young Copperfield gives the most human and forceful performance I have ever seen a child actor offer. Edna May Oliver can be strongly billed as the cranky but lovable old Aunt who detested donkeys. This picture is the cream in entertainment but undoubtedly it will be too rich for many patrons.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Cora Sue Collins—I certainly do not agree with the exhibitors who said this was not so good as "The Thin Man." In my opinion it is a lot better. I consider this the best picture this team has ever played in. Good story, well acted, and produced. And don't forget to mention little Cora Sue Collins in as good a juvenile act as I ever saw. Was unfortunate in running this one on two of the coldest nights of the year so attendance was way below average but it pleased those who came. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

"MOST INTERESTING, HELPFUL DEPARTMENT"

"For the first time will endeavor to contribute to this department, a most interesting and helpful department," writes Fred E. Pennell of the "Cozy" Theatre, Decatur, Mich.

Also joining the reporters to "What the Picture Did for Me" this week is Charles E. Myers, Imperial Theatre, Rich Square, N. C.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy —This is a very good picture, but not as good as "The Thin Man." This is a drama and offers good entertainment for all. The story is entirely too slow and long drawn out. Powell performs splendidly in his role as a successful criminal lawyer and the entire cast play their parts well. This is a picture that should please the entire family. Played one day to good business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played January 30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Charles Butterworth—A picture that is worthy of any theatre's playing time, large or small. Good comedy and drama well mixed. —Fred E. Pennell, The "Cozy" Theatre, Decatur, Mich. General patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Chester Morris, Carole Lombard—By stretching a point this could be called a program picture. Very weak and played to punk business. Played February 6.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Morris—A combination gold digger-gangster picture, that, so far as I can learn, did not please anyone. A fine song and dance number, "Mississippi Moon," is the only highlight in the picture. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 30-31.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Thetare, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAVE A HEART: Jean Parker, James Dunn—Picture pleased everyone, with business slightly above normal. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 6-7.—C. J. Hubley, New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLLYWOOD PARTY: Jimmy Durante, Laurel and Hardy—An A No. 1 flop. Nothing to it. Don't book this one if you wish to please patrons. Business terrible. Running time, 72 minutes. Played February 10-11.—C. J. Hubley, New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. Small town and rural patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Maurice Chevalier—A musical romance that pleased 100 per cent. I was afraid of this one on account of the foreign locale but it went over good. Comedy, romance, good music, some wonderful dance sequences, just about everything it takes for a good evening's entertainment. Edward Everett Horton, as usual, gives an excellent performance while Una Merkel is always good. Don't be afraid to advertise this one. Played January 11-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye, Charles Butterworth—Butterworth was the big draw in this "foreign locale" picture. Nice music but I personally feel the picture won't do so well in small towns. It is an average picture with more appeal to "class" than to the action fans. Butterworth's humor goes over big here. Played February 7.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

OUTCAST LADY: Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall—Wonderful acting by Miss Bennett, but my audience wasn't especially sold on the picture. Played January 31.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—Did fair business the first night but second night's business was so bad it was hardly worthwhile to even run a show. A very poor picture and my patrons didn't fail to tell me so. Greta is not what she used to be. Played February 4-5.—Mary M. Ross, Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—The best Monogram picture since "Girl of the Limberlost." Drew fairly well and pleased about 75 per cent. Good for midweek position. Running time, 65 minutes. Played February 1.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh—A small town "natural" if there ever was one and how they turn out for it. Drew people who had apparently not been in a theatre for ages. And they left with nothing but praise. Personally, I thought it a poor production, stilted acting and dialogue, but it was box-office so who am I to write adverse criticism? Business OK and audience reaction OK'er. Running time, 86 minutes. Played January 24-25-26.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—A swell picture that would have done business had I got a good print. The picture itself was one of the best. Running time, 87 minutes. Played January 21-22.—Mary M. Ross, Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town and rural patronage.

LOUDSPEAKER, THE: Ray Walker, Jacqueline Wells—Played on a Wednesday. Did not draw business but is a good picture if you could change the title. Pleased all who saw it.—Mary M. Ross, Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town and rural patronage.

REDHEAD: Bruce Cabot, Grace Bradley—Fair enough programmer. Drew as well as the average picture. Running time, eight reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

REDHEAD: Bruce Cabot, Grace Bradley—Quite a pleasing comedy drama from Monogram. Recording not up to par but fair. Grace Bradley will no doubt do better with more experience. Where they are not too critical it will please as it pleased here. No special drawing power for me.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SHOCK: Ralph Forbes—Did more on this one than I did on "The Painted Veil." Has a bad title but is a nice picture and pleased almost everyone. Has some war in it but has a good story and some comedy. Played February 2.—Mary M. Ross, Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town and rural patronage.

TOMORROW'S YOUTH: Dickie Moore, Martha Sleeper—A good little picture that pleased young and old. Better gross than some of the other distributors' specials.—Mary M. Ross, Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town and rural patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Noah Beery, Noah Beery, Jr., Verna Hillie—This is a good western picture that should please all who like this type of entertainment. It is an outdoor picture of the Northwest, fast-moving, with plenty of action and fighting. The excellent scenery adds much to the entertainment and the snow covered mountains make an excellent background. Played one day to good business. Running time, 55 minutes. Played February 9.—J. J. Dedford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—This is a great show and in that part of the U. S. A. where we have an Indian population, it will go fine. The clever acting of Sidney will put her over in this Indian girl role in any community, but particularly where we have actual contact with this race problem and know that the average moral standard of the average Indian girl is actually higher than that of her sophisticated white sister.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert—A splendid production produced on a grand scale. Well directed, excellent supporting cast and outstanding scenery and acting by members of the cast. Average business. Running time, 11 reels. Played January 31-February 1-2.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon, Joseph Schildkraut, Gertrude Michael—Another Cecil B. DeMille spectacle and a great picture. It has story, cast and production and is handled with an eye on the school children, so Cleo's reputed immorality does not show in the picture, but her historical importance is emphasized. Will satisfy and do better business than most spectacles.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon, Joseph Schildraut—The best picture DeMille has turned out in years. Remarkable performances turned out by Colbert, Wilcoxon, Ian Keith, Warren William and Joseph Schildkraut. Grandly produced. It pleases the masses and will do business in most spots. One of the few costume pictures that will do this. Business about average for Sunday-Monday. Running time, 101 minues. Played February 10-11.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Lanny Ross, Jack Oakie, Helen Mack, Joe Penner—A musical show that is a treat to both your eyes and ears. Your patrons will go for it in a big way. A college picture with enough punch and gay songs and a story well developed. The story is good, the songs are good, and it is one of the best of the year. Played three days to average business. Running time, nine reels. Played January 13-15.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross, Helen Mack, Jack Oakie—Good picture, not much sense to it, but it is entertaining. Satisfied here and did good business. Running time, 84 minutes. Played February 2.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Lyda Roberti, Helen Mack, Mary Brian—One of the most pleasing pictures of the year and one that everyone wants to see. It has a fine cast and a fair story with good music and real comedy. It is a box-office natural.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross, Helen Mack, Jack Oakie—This is a swell picture. Pleased practically everyone. Did better than average business. Played February 7-8.—Chas. E. Myers, Imperial Theatre, Rich Square, N. C. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie, Lanny Ross, Mary Brian—Pleased very much. My town no good for football stuff, but this picture went over very good.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Walter Connolly, Gertrude Michael—A very good picture. One that you will be proud to present to your regular patrons. It sure is a family treat. Average business. Running time, seven reels. Played January 17-19.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Walter Connolly, Paul Lukas, Gertrude Michael—One of those London things that Paramount is so fond of. I never remember seeing a worse picture. No story. Deadly monotonous. No business after the first night. Walkout after walkout until I and the office cat were the only ones left on the second showing, and the cat curled up and went to sleep on it as did most of what little audience I had.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby—A good musical show that should satisfy your regular fans. Bing Crosby is a very good actor. Average business. Running time, nine reels. Played January 27-29.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle—Kitty Carlisle does well with her part in this and it seemed to please. Bing does not click with me, but those who came liked him in this show.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan—Jack Coogan has the making of a real star in pictures. An excellent western well done on the screen. Everyone more than satisfied with this one. Average business. Running time, six reels. Played January 17-19.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—This is another fine Zane Grey western and the people liked it. "Wagon Wheels" is better, but this is good and will do business if you tell people it's in town.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—It's a scream, with Baby LeRoy and a splendid supporting cast. It's California or bust, and what they don't bust they practically wreck. Just as they will wreck you with laughter in this coast-to-coast joyride. Played three days to average business. Why did Paramount star Baby LeRoy, and then add another little fellow who all but stole the part of Baby LeRoy? Running time, seven reels. Played January 10-12.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—The laughs were so fast in this one that a fellow got tired laughing.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—This is one swell comedy; may be criticized because it is nothing else, but it is a good feature comedy and sold as such will do business.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields—Good old W. C. Fields turns in another good show for us. I believe that is sillier than some of the rest, but the patrons howled with laughter, which proves they were pleased. Business above average. Running time, 68 minutes. Played February 6-7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID: Helen Mack, Lee Tracy—Pretty good entertainment. Lots of excitement, a few laughs, and a good time was had by all.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

LEMON DROP KID, THE: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy—Ran this on a Friday-Saturday date and played my usual western crowd. A good cast supporting Tracy in this.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker—Very good picture that will please. Played it on Sunday and Monday to average business. Pleased 95 per cent. Running time, 66 minutes. Played February 3-4.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS: Burns and Allen, Guy Lombardo—Picture rather silly, however Lombardo drawing source, so did very good business for two-day run. What's wrong with trying Jan Garber on something like this? Played January 20-21.—C. J. Hubley, New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. Small town and rural patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, Zasu Pitts, Evelyn Venable, W. C. Fields, Kent Taylor—This was better than I hoped for. It is as clean as a whistle, with a good story, splendid acting, with a few laughs at the right time. Get behind it; you won't be sorry. Running time, 79 minues.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Edward Arnold, Arthur Byron, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin, Osgood Perkins, Janet Beecher—This is a gripping mystery story and one that has a real box office draught. The dream is close enough to 1935 to be interesting to every one and the direction is good. Must sell the story as you have no cast, but people will enjoy it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Arthur Byron, Janet Beecher—A marvelous production! Great entertainment. Properly sold will get money. I sold it sensationally and got results. It will be one of the most talked of pictures in many months. One patron came out of the theatre and told me that there ought to be a law compelling everyone to see this picture. Mr. Showman, you owe it to your community to show this picture. It will do more to awaken the nation than a thousand talks. Running time, 83 minutes. Played January 30-31.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—The story is very weak, but customers got a big kick out of the bundling sequence. Would say this is an average program picture. Satisfied the cash customers and did fair business. Running time, 79 minutes. Played January 30.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—This proved a very entertaining comedy drama with an interesting story and a well liked cast; clean, and the bundling action was nicely handled. No one could take offense at the way it was handled and I would rate it as an "A" pic.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich—As a collection of interior scenes of a Russian palace it's okay, but as a moving picture it is no good. Leave this in the exchange and you will be doing your patrons a favor. Didn't make film rental here. Running time, 105 minutes. Played January 16.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, John Lodge, Louise Dresser—No good in the United States and doubtful even in Germany. This star is definitely finished and should go back to the land she came from.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—The "Covered Wagon" of the talkies. Short and snappy. Played this Sunday and Monday on a double bill as double billing is almost universal in this town, but "Wagon Wheels" was what they talked about. Sunday was a good average and Monday was above average. Paramount could easily use their trade mark (not copyrighted) "If it's a Paramount western it's the best western in town."—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—Oh, boy! but this picture is a honey. Good old plot and action, just what they like. Great acting and producing. Play it by all means.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, David Holt—This was a fine Friday-Saturday show with a lot of heart interest furnished by the little boy. Your folks will be interested in the story and glad to get acquainted with David Holt, the boy star.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RKO Radio

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: Irene Dunne, John Boles—No good. Leave it alone.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

AGE OF INNOCENCE, THE: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Good adult entertainment, but a little slow for the moderns. It is well produced and the acting is satisfactory. Helen Westley as "Granny" is the outstanding player in the cast. The audience response was very good.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—This is a very good picture, but just another flop at our box office. It is a comedy drama and offers great entertainment for the whole family. It is a story of an orphan girl adopted by a country family and should please all who see it. The acting is marvelous and the direction excellent, but the stars are not well known. Played two days to only fair business. Running time, 79 minutes. Played January 31-February 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BY YOUR LEAVE: Genevieve Tobin, Frank Morgan—This is just another program picture that will please those who like comedy. It is a comedy romance that is clean and full of comedy situations. There are plenty of laughs and, although the stars are not well known, they play their parts perfectly. We played this on a late Saturday night show to fair business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played February 2.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patonage.

BY YOUR LEAVE: Frank Morgan, Genevieve Tobin, Neil Hamilton, Marian Nixon—Far below the average. You can close your eyes and pick one better than this.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Not the average Wheeler-Woolsey picture. Patrons disappointed. Played February 5-6.—C. J. Hubley, New Winn Theatre, Winnfield, La. Small town and rural patronage.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT: Mary Boland, Polly Moran, Ned Sparks, Sidney Fox, Sidney Blackmer—To call this a special is all wrong. Don't use it.—R. C. Metzger, Ritz Theatre, Winner, S. D. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—One of the best musicals of the year. Ginger at her best. Did S. R. O. business. Played February 4-5.—Chas. E. Myers, Imperial Theatre, Rich Square, N. C. General patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan—A good program picture. Played in double bill. Running time, 64 minutes. Played January 30-31.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—First four days of the week to better than average business. This one has box office appeal only to the socalled better class of patrons. It is quite well done and deserves all the praise one can give it. —W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal, Beryl Mercer, Dorothy Stickney—This is an excellent picture of its type, but just another flop at the box office. RKO is famous for pictures of this type; all good pictures, but absolutely no drawing power. This is a drama with a touch of comedy and romance. There is little action and the dialogue is difficult to understand. Perhaps RKO will do better next time. Played two days to fair business. Running time, 110 minutes. Played February 7-8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RED MORNING: Steffi Duna, Regis Toomey—Another box office attraction from RKO. It should be placed in last part of week in those houses like the Cozy that require action pictures. Steffi Duna rates high. She is beautiful, and this part is picked for her. Native dancing is not overdone like some that have been released before this one.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—Ginger Rogers is a star and they liked her in this story. Don't sell it as a second "The Gay Divorcee" as, of course, it is merely a good program picture, but it is good and they liked it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix—Good for Friday-Saturday. Better than the average western. Running time, 69 minutes. Played February 8-9.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

State Rights

FIGHTING TROOPER, THE: (Ambassador) Kermit Maynard—Curwood's name has an added draw. But the picture hasn't enough action. Too much footage on minor scenes and the fight at the finish was a farce. The actors picked out a bear skin rug to land on or an easy chair. I like to give independents a break, but they will have to do better than this. Running time, 52 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

TOMBSTONE TERROR: (Supreme) Bob Steele—This is a very good western picture that should please all western fans. It is full of action, fighting and a bit of comedy and romance. Bob Steele plays a double role in this and puts it over great. Let's have more of these good old-time westerns that please the patrons. Played one day to good business. Running time, 55 minutes. Played February 2.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

United Artists

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—A thoroughly entertaining production that received fine audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—I saw this picture again two months after running it, and want to go on record as thinking it is about the most interesting story ever told by the talking screen. It will "sell" motion picture entertainment to any one.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LAST GENTLEMAN, THE: George Arliss—A cleverly produced picture with a new twist. Only an actor like Arliss could portray a role like this. It pleased those who came, but it was not up to average in drawing power for me.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou—This picture missed fire despite Wallace Beery. Very much overrated and it was not generally liked. I am sorry I can't give it much, because Beery is well liked, and this picture did not help his popularity any. It just isn't bad, but it is not good, either. It is the first mistake that United Artists have made this season, but it was the opinion of the audience and mine that the story was not worth screening. After seeing the picture, very much of a disappointment after the ballyhoo that the picture has had.—A. E. Bancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Tom Keene, Karen Morley—A back to the farm picture that had many inconsistencies. Just a fair draw for us. A well connected story. Played February 6-7.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

RUNAWAY QUEEN: Anna Neagle, Fernand Graavey—Why any distributor wants to even release these foreign-made pictures is beyond me. They talk too thick and the good points are the scenery and recording. I'll fool U. A. some day and make some money on one of their releases. National Screen's talking trailer on this was a dandy, better than the feature itself. Running time, eight reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

SORRELL AND SON: H. B. Warner, Hugh Williams—Good entertainment for the more serious thinking patrons, but not mass entertainment. It is very British and received only fair audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Jack Benny, Nancy Carroll, Gene Raymond—A few good dance and musical numbers. Those that saw it were satisfied. Personally thought it a good picture as entertainment, but had a very poor weekend business on it. I had it figured out that we should pile up a better than average gross on this one, but the cash customers proved that I didn't know much about it. Played February 9-10.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Jack Benny, Nancy Carroll—Music, mirth and mystery on the high seas. Pleased well enough, but failed to pull the business. Running time, 92 minutes. Played January 27-28-29.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

GREAT EXPECTATIONS: Henry Hull, Phillips Holmes—A picture that is hard to sell to all classes. Unless you have patronage that appreciates "heavy" drama, would advise to "lay off" this one. Henry Hull is a fine actor and makes the best of his role. A contact with schools did not help much. Running time, 11 reels.—Fred E. Pennell, The "Cozy" Theatre, Decatur, Mich. General patronage.

I GIVE MY LOVE: Wynne Gibson, Paul Lukas—This picture received mixed reaction and did not go over as well as I expected. It was a little too maudlin to suit a number of our patrons. Personally I found it entertaining, but unexciting.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD, THE: Claude Rains—Not near the picture "Invisible Man" was. We advertised this as a mystery picture for a midnight show, and felt like hiding when they began to walk out on it. Mostly anti-war stuff. Very poor offering. Running time, 81 minutes. Played February 2.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—This program picture offers pleasant but unimportant entertainment. Binnie Barnes is becoming quite popular with our patrons. Fine audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SECRET OF THE CHATEAU: Claire Dodd, Osgood Perkins—A fairly good mystery picture for midweek or Saturday business. No cast to boast of, but scenes progress logically and with a rather satisfying result. Running time, 68 minutes. Played January 30.—Martin S. Lane, Logan Theatre, Noblesville, Ind. Small town and rural patronage.

SMOKING GUNS: Ken Maynard—This was just another western. Not up to the standard and was rather disappointed in it. Drew vey well, but the remarks of the patrons showed that they expected more than what they got. Not like the Tom Mix pictures. Mix has a great drawing power. Print was in fair condition. However, the sound was the best on a western that I have ever heard. One could understand every word.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

Warner

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—By far and away the best comedy these two have appeared in and it's all laughs and an hour of the kind of entertainment that sends the patrons out good-natured. Great for the whole family. Business fine and audience reaction perfect. Running time, 60 minutes. Played February 1-2.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—This is an agreeable surprise, the first Friday-Saturday picture for a long time that has gone into the "average" money and a real entertainment. People liked it and told their friends about it and the trailer was good sales talk; and all of them aren't.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DESIRABLE: Jean Muir, George Brent—A very clever picture, and well acted. Satisfied all.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID, THE: James Cagney—A typical, fast-moving Cagney picture that pleased my family night audience. Running time, 67 minutes. Played January 23-34.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Warren William—This is a good picture that pleased our patrons. It is an interesting mystery drama of political affairs, that is cleared perfectly in the end. This is fast moving and has plenty of action. Both Miss Stanwyck and William play their parts well and, except for several murders, this offers good entertainment for all. Played one day to good business. Running time, 64 minutes. Played February 6.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne—This went over better than I expected. Was not a special, but it pleased generally. Cold weather cut receipts. It can be classed as an extra good program picture. Running time, 82 minutes. Played January 27-29.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Ned Sparks, Hugh Herbert—Just another operetta, minus a good leading man, and how my patronage hates operettas. Warners had a pretty good title to work with, but forgot to watch their story in production. Irene Dunne may have a good voice, too, but why give her such long songs to go through? Parts of this picture were okay, but why, oh why, do they continue to turn out operettas in Hollywood? I wish the Herald could take a poll vote on how many exhibitors care about showing these to their public. All I get is crabbing and walkouts. Running time, 10 reels.—Fred E. Pennell, The "Cozy" Theatre, Decatur, Mich. General patronage.

Short Features

Educational

BLACK SHEEP, THE: Terry-Toon—This is only fair entertainment, but will please the kids. This series of cartoons are far behind the other producers and they should do something to improve them. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GIRL FROM PARADISE, THE: Sylvia Froos—A very fine two-reel musical comedy. There are quite a few catching song tunes, that will have the cash customers humming. Running time, 18 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

GOOD LUCK—BEST WISHES: Pickens Sisters—Just fair. Music did not fit into plot as good as it should.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

HOUSE WHERE I WAS BORN, THE: Sylvia Froos—Nobody seemed to like this single reel. It did not seem to get anywhere.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG TOP, THE: Frolics of Youth Series—The best of this series so far. However, it belongs on a Friday-Saturday date.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

OWL AND THE PUSSYCAT, THE: Terry-Toon—This one was well done and people asked us to repeat it as it got so many laughs. Fine print and recording good. Running time, 6 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

PARADISE OF THE PACIFIC: Romantic Journeys—This was a very remarkable short and the color was very well done., Everybody seemed to enjoy it. Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

THEN CAME THE YAWN: Treasure Chest—Don't open the can. This would be even out of place in an insane asylum. No excuse for this idea. Running time, 7 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

Master Art Products

ORGANLOGUES SERIES: A series of 10 song reels with the pipe organ background. Makes real entertainment for the little theatre that does not have a pipe organ or for the big theatre that does not want to pay their weekly gross to some half-taught organist to give poor imitations of such music as these reels furnish. Cheaply produced and sold cheaply and enjoyed much more than many more expensive reels. —Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MGM

ANOTHER WILD IDEA: Charley Chase—The usual Chase comedy that pleased the audience. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ANOTHER WILD IDEA: Charley Chase—This is a good comedy of the slapstick variety and has plenty of laughs. Chase is good in this one and I certainly hope the others will be as good. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Ted Healy & Stooges—This is only fair entertainment of the slapstick variety. There are a few laughs, but as a whole it did not please our patrons. Let's have better shorts in the future. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BUM VOYAGE: Todd and Kelly—A good average comedy. Running time, two reels.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

CROOK'S TOUR: All Star Series—I wonder if Metro calls this entertainment. It is very poor and our patrons walked out on it. This entire series have been poor and these stars should try something else for a while. Come on, Metro, give us some good shorts. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK: Musical Revues—A Hodge Podge of oldtime melodies that was fairly good. Running time, two reels.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK: Musical Revues—One of the best musical comedies I have run. All color with songs, dancing and comedy. Running time, 17 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLLAND IN TULIP TIME: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—One of the best single reels I have run. Beautiful views of Holland in tulip time that got as many favorable comments as the feature. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

INSULTIN' THE SULTAN: Willie Whopper—This is a good cartoon comedy that pleased all who saw it. Willie is not so popular here, but with better story material he will improve and the patrons will be pleased. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

IRELAND, THE EMERALD ISLE: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—These travelogues are a very good short. The addition of color makes the present series much better than last year's. Running time, 8 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE DAY: Charley Chase—This is a fairly good comedy, but not up to the usual from Chase. The laughs are few and the story only fair. Give Chase better material next time. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—The first "Our Gang" I have run for some time and it sure got the laughs from kiddies and grownups. Running time, two reels. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—The best "Our Gang" to date and this boy Spanky is a whiz. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—Hooray for Metro and Our Gang. This is one of the best shorts of the year. Metro can produce good shorts, but they are not as good as this. A few more like this and Our Gang will be on top again. Show the industry you can do it, Metro! Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ONE HORSE FARMERS: Todd and Kelly—A very poor comedy. Did not hear a single laugh on this during its run here. Running time, 18 minutes.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ONE-HORSE FARMERS: Todd and Kelly—This one is a scream. Patsy Kelly is a wow. Every one liked this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

ONE-HORSE FARMERS: Todd and Kelly—Plenty of laughs in this comedy. Good for any audience. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SOMETHING SIMPLE: Charley Chase—Just another Charley Chase two-reeler to me, but it seemed to please the audience. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SPECTACLE MAKER, THE: Musical Revues—This is one of the best colored subjects yet. A lesson in which is stronger, Beauty or Truth. Had many comments favorable. Running time, two reels.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

SPECTACLE MAKER, THE: Musical Revues—A sweet color musical that is plenty good. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

TALE OF THE VIENNA WOODS, A: Happy Harmonies—A very fine piece of photography and cartoon work. They all remarked about it.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

TALE OF THE VIENNA WOODS, A: Happy Harmonies—One of the best color cartoons I have ever seen. Running time, one reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

THREE CHUMPS AHEAD: Todd-Kelly—This is another Metro comedy that offers only fair entertainment. This comedy team is continually falling down on their shorts and our patrons do not like them. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TIT FOR TAT: Laurel and Hardy—Average Laurel and Hardy on the "retaliation" type. Although I feel it is not above average, still my patrons liked it, and it's better than many other socalled two-reel comedies.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TOYLAND BROADCAST: Happy Harmonies—Advertise this as one of the best colored cartoons. Will go in any program. Running time, 8 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

Paramount

AN ELEPHANT NEVER FORGETS: Color Classics—Audience enjoyed this one very much. Great for Saturday.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

BABY BLUES: Paramount Varieties Series—A clever little comedy reel in color that will look fine if you don't run a real colored subject too close to it. I am running RKO, Paramount and Warner's colored cartoons and you can't use them near a Silly Symphony or they look cheap. Disney is in a class all by himself in this color work and hope the new Mickey Mouses come up to the standard.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DANCE CONTEST: Popeye the Sailor—Very good Popeye. Technically much better than average. In fact, it's a very good Popeye!—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LADIES THAT PLAY: Phil Spitalny and his Musical Ladies—A real clever girl band act.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MOVIE SIDESHOWS: Paramount Varieties Series—
YACHT CLUB BOYS GARDEN PARTY: Headliners Series—Fair one-reelers, while "Baby Blues" was a knockout.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

NERVE OF SOME WOMEN, THE: Paramount Varieties Series—Paramount Variety that should have been a Grantland Rice Sportlight, but is good entertainment if sold as a "stunt" reel.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIALS: These are very interesting for their type of reel and they have enough variety to please the majority of your crowd.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT VARIETIES SERIES: Are about fifty-fifty and be sure they give you a "press sheet" before they book them in as some are swell music, some punk educationals or whatever you want to call "Superstition of Three on a Match" and "Superstition of the Black Cat"-crosses-the-road-to-get-on-the-other-side.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

POPEYE THE SAILOR SERIES: This has a real following and believe that the way to run them is as a series with a certain dating so the kiddies can remember them. I am trying six in a row on Sundays and believe they will bring the whole family to the Sunday Matinees.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SPRINGBOARD CHAMPIONS: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—This is a beautiful thing with some world championship dives in slow motion that will thrill you time and time again. Grantland Rice Sportlights come as close to being box office as any of the novelty reels, as some people enthuse over them.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

TWO ALARM FIRE: Popeye the Sailor—The kids as well as most of the grownups think Popeye is great.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theare, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

TWO ALARM FIRE: Popeye the Sailor—A very good cartoon with plenty of Popeye laughs.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

RKO Radio

ALONG CAME A DUCK: Toddle Tale Cartoon—A very entertaining combination of cartoon and photography that is a step forward in child entertainment. Little child plays with a real duck and then cartoon frog shows them both a good time with real voices continuing and illusion increased by shots of real child and duck at play.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DIONNE QUINTUPLETS: Dionne 5—Brought out some extra curious women. Running time, one reel.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

DUMBBELL LETTERS: Buy two of them and then hunt for a place to run the second. Public is fooled so often by the motion picture camera that these just don't get over as real and, therefore, don't get over at all.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

IF THIS ISN'T LOVE: Musical—This is good entertainment of the musical variety and the best one from RKO. Plenty of good music and singing. Why can't RKO make all shorts as good as this one? Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LOVE ON A LADDER: Edgar Kennedy—A good slapstick comedy.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

United Artists

DOGNAPPERS, THE: Mickey Mouse—One of the best cartoons with Mickey Mouse.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

SILLY SYMPHONIES: These are the class of the cartoon field and the best to date in my mind is "The Grasshopper and the Ant," though "The Big Bad Wolf" and "Three Little Pigs" class right up with it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Vitaphone

A. & P. GYPSIES: Melody Masters—Another good Melody Master, music, songs and dancing.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BEN POLLOCK AND BAND: Melody Masters—An excellent Melody Master, but then this series is always good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DIZZY AND DAFFY: Dizzy and Daffy Dean, Shemp Howard, Roscoe Ates—Dizzy and Daffy Dean make a box office short, but Howard makes it a comedy. He is good and my crowd look forward to his comedies.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

FLAME SONG, THE: Broadway Brevities—A very good two-reel historical musical short. Feature it.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

GOOD BADMINTON: This is out as far as I am concerned. Hugh Herbert tries to make a comedy out of a sportlight showing the playing of a blue blood unknown game that no one cares about. Skip it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

GOOD MORNING EVE: Broadway Brevities—Color musical, different and plenty amusing. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

KING FOR A DAY: Bill Robinson—Passable but not as good as most "Broadway Brevities."—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LITTLE JACK LITTLE: Pepper Pot—A very good reel with variety. Better for Sunday. Running time, nine minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

MR. AND MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD: Pepper Pot—This is one of the best single reels. Fine organ numbers with some good dancing and the number "Trees" has some beautiful scenery. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small own patronage.

MOVIE MEMORIES: Pepper Pot Series—Interesting shots of screen favorites who have passed on. The commentator lays it on a bit thick at times, but on the whole this proved very satisfactory. Running time, 9 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

OFF THE BEAT: Morton Downey—Okay if your patrons like Downey's warbling. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

OFF THE BEAT: Morton Downey—This is a fine and interesting subject. Good for any type of show.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

PILGRAM DAYS: See American First Series—Of great historical interest and nicely presented. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

REMEMBER THE ALAMO: See America First (E. M. Newman) Series—This series will go for about one every two months and tie up with the schools and Legion and D. A. R. on it as they are real historic stuff, but not particularly entertaining. You can fit one of these into the "Kentucky Kernels" or "College Rhythm" or "Six Day Bike Rider" programs and have it please.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SERVICE WITH A SMILE: Leon Errol—Very good "Broadway Brevity" in color. Pleased. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SYNCOPATED CITY: Broadway Brevities—Novel musical with lots of classy hoofing by the star. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL NO. 2: Pepper Pot—The second one of this series I have run and they are fine.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VANISHING SHADOW: Onslow Stevens, Ada Ince—Am now in the sixth chapter of this serial, and it is holding interest thus far better than any chapter play we have shown in a number of years.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC

1935-36 Edition Now in Preparation

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Brownsville, Texas

Dear Herald:

You will note that we dated this letter from Brownsville but we are not in Brownsville at all. We are like George Washington was—"We did it with our little hatchet". We are back in Alamo. We were in Brownsville but that town is too close to Matamorris, Mexico, to suit us, so we left there and came back to Alamo where they have one post office, seven filling stations and a town pump.

We were downtown yesterday and we met a Badger and we asked him what part of Wisconsin he was from and he said he was from Ripon. When he said Ripon we laughed a little and he asked us what we were laughing at and we said that we were in Ripon some time back and that we came very near being licked. He asked us how that came and we said that we had learned that Ripon was going to celebrate the formation of the Republican party, which they claimed was formed at Ripon 75 years ago, and that we hunted up the secretary of the celebration and told him that Ripon was mistaken, that one of our grandfathers was one of the committee that met under the "Oaks" at Jackson, Michigan, and formed the Republican party, and when we said that the fight started, as Mrs. Malony said. But that wasn't what we had in mind to tell you.

That Man Thrasher

Just west of Ripon about nine miles is a beautiful lake, and it was at this lake that ex-president Coolidge was invited once to spend his vacation (or that is as we understand it) and on the banks of this lake is a nice little town which we understand is named Green Lake, but it don't make any difference about the name of the town, but in this town is a very swell theatre which is run by a Badger by the name of Thrasher, and we believe his first name is Charlie, anyhow we are going to call him Charlie. We always like to visit Charlie because he lives alone outside the business section where everything is quiet and Charlie always has some of the ginger ale "That Made Milwaukee Famous" and we always had a regular visit.

The lady who was with this Badger told us that she was well acquainted with Charlie and that he ran some mighty good shows. We wish we could remember the name of the boy who operates the theatre in Ripon but we just can't do it although we remember just how he looks and how his theatre looks, but we do know that they are both mighty good looking, and we don't care so much where the Republican party was born as we do to know when it is going to die and where they are going to bury it, for we want to be one of the pallbearers, for we are like the old fellow who was about to die and his wife asked him who he wanted for pallbearers, and he picked out the bankers of of the town, and she asked why he wanted all bankers and he said, "Well, they have carried me all my life and I don't want 'em to lay down on the job now". All right Charlie, we hope to see you again the coming summer should we still be on the job and should we not go to Michigan, and other taxridden countries, so don't forget to have some fresh Milwaukee bass on ice.

At the County Conventions

But speaking of Charlie Thatcher reminds us of Shine Mason of McAllen, Texas, except that they don't look a particle alike but they both like lobster salad. We don't like to call him "Shine" because that isn't his name, but if we didn't call him Shine people wouldn't know whom we were talking about, but what we wanted to tell you was that Shine played Will Rogers in "The County Chairman" recently and he sent us an invitation (with complimentary tickets for ourself and party) to see the show.

The "County Chairman" was written by George Ade, originally of Kentland, Indiana, and we know that George was able to write of the "County Chairman" because we used to sit in county conventions with George away back in Newton county, Indiana, when the mossbacks used to chaw Horseshoe and homespun tobacker and catch dogfish in the Kankakee river with bullfrogs for bait, and we know that George could write about the "County Chairman" as no other Hoosier could, and we know also that nobody could play the character like Will Rogers could play it because he used to be County Chairman of the Democratic convention at Claremore, Oklahoma, and he knows how it should be played. Well, we went to see the picture and Shine has our undying gratitude for sending us tickets to see the best show we have seen since we saw Shirley Temple and Jimmy Dunn in "Bright Eyes", and if we never see a better picture than those two it will be all right with us, and we are pretty particular about our entertainment, too.

We went down to San Juan yesterday (which was Saturday) to take the HERALD back to Hugo Plath, who operates the San Juan theatre (and who loans us the HERALD so we can see if it is still being printed) and he was playing Ken Maynard in something, which didn't make much difference what kind of a picture it was just so it was Western. And the Mexicans were backed clear out on the street. Every time the boys here in the Rio Grande valley play a Western, Mexico declares a holiday and they all come across the river, and that makes it tougherinhel on the Border Patrol. There should be something done about that.

Right out in front of the window where we are writing there is a cactus known as an "Indian Dagger" and the spines on it are so thick and sharp that you can't get very close to it, but it has come out in the most beautiful bloom you ever saw. It has six large balls of bloom as large as a milkpail and the flowers are beautiful and attract a great deal of attention from tourists as they pass by on the highway. This is the first one we have ever seen and the top of the entire plant (which is about 15 feet around it) is entirely covered with these beautiful bloom balls which stand up about three feet high from the plant proper. You ought to see it, gosh it's a beauty, right here on the 10th day of February too, Hey there, you boys on the Mesaba range in Minnesota, can you beat that?

Say, Oscar, whenever Roy Adams of Mason, Michigan, tells 'em it's a bum picture you can bet your wife's last komona that it's a bum picture, for Roy reviews it from the audience viewpoint and not from the viewpoint of the "Yes Men" in Hollywood. We'll stake our reputation against a hound pup that Roy knows what he is talking about when he reviews a picture. If he says it's bad we are going to stay away from it. If he says it's good we are going to pawn our Uncle's shirt to go and see it. It makes us pretty doggone sore when the "yes men" say that Roy don't know what he is talking about.

Just in Case of Sickness

We stopped the other day and talked with an old Dutchman who was gathering ten acres of cabbage and we said to him "Say Hans, you could make a lot of kraut out of that cabbage, couldn't you"? And he scratched his head and said, "Oh yah, but I sell 'em all to a packer, but then maybe I make four or five barrels, just in case of sickness."

We were going to tell you about the shark and tarpon we caught down at Pt. Isabel this last week but we didn't go down there. Our wife went on an excursion over to Monterey, Mexico, and we had to stay at home and look after the dog and an alley cat. You know that the dog and cat have to be looked after the same as they do out in Hollywood, except that they don't wear a gold collar and chain, but we'd like to kick the stuffin out of both of 'em when we have to look after 'em instead of going fishing. Maybe next time we will tell you about it, if Ernie will print it.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"THE THRILL THAT COMES ONCE–"

Your successful theatreman, in order to survive, of necessity becomes decidedly callous to the excitement engendered by the atmosphere in which he labors. High-power exploitation must be guided by cool heads and competent hands. Dealing in a commodity that requires continuous selling, the manager learns to "know all the answers" and is well insulated against almost everything aimed to raise his pulse-beat.

Therefore the reactions of Bill Hendricks and Morris Rosenthal at the Grand Awards presentation in Washington deserve to be recorded. It is a compliment to the significance of the Quigley Awards that these hard-boiled showmen were as jittery as a couple of bridegrooms as they received "the thrill that comes once in a lifetime" in accepting their honors from the hands of the Vice President of the United States.

CONGRATULATIONS, MORT

In the many reports carried by this department on the ace exploitations of the Warner theatremen in the field, little mention, if any, has been made of a personality whose inspiration and unflagging assistance has made many of these campaigns possible. And the reason for this seeming omission is not of our own choosing—the "personality" prefers to remain in the background.

However, the announcement that the duties of Mort Blumenstock, Warner ad head, have been considerably widened allows us the opportunity of spreading the word to his many well-wishers. We join with the membership in extending to him our heartiest congratulations.

OSCAR, TAKE A BOW

And while on the subject of retiring "home officers", we'd like to report on the most recent of the smart pieces of exploitation originated in the sanctum of Oscar Doob, Loew Theatres ad chief. Promoting Hearst Metrotone to make up for all Loew houses special acquittal and conviction reels in advance on the Hauptmann verdict, with comment by famed Edwin C. Hill, must be ranked as outstanding showmanship. As soon as the verdict was flashed to the theatres, the short was projected immediately, in most every case, beating the local newspapers to the punch.

The idea was splendidly conceived and executed, and we see no reason why Oscar should not be invited to take an extra bow for this choice bit of long-distance thinking.

STRONG FROM THE WEAK

Theatremen everywhere and especially those who decry the methods of chain operation will regard with more than passing interest the announcement of Mr. Joseph Bernhard, Warner Brothers Theatres general manager, that district managers of that circuit will be granted wider operating authority in the future. Many of the home office functions are to be transferred to the field.

If the new plan is allowed to develop logically, its success in the final analysis will depend proportionately upon the latitude the newly crowned district chieftains in turn allow their individual managers.

From our seat in the stands the operation can be considered successful only if the parceling out of these responsibilities points out a more definite way to separate strong manpower from weak, and if the strong are encouraged by adequate recognition.

"HE'S BREAKING MY HEART"

Lawdy, lawdy, what a to-do there has been lately in the public prints and the trade press concerning the dashing hither and yon of the various motion picture code authorities, exhibitor and producer representatives, all of a-twitter over the demands of operators, actors, extras, writers and what-not.

A how-many seat theatre pays operators how much and for what? How many hours shall an extra work and when? Shall actors and writers be allowed what? And what should the code read about what? It's all very exciting and gratifying to the groups concerned. But not to the theatre manager.

Oh, yes, more than one higher-up has declared the theatreman's situation intolerable and that something should be done. There's been a lot of talk, really.

Reminds us of the ancient ruler to whose court came an humble subject, tattered and starving. Into the sympathetic ears of his king, the hungry one poured forth an almost unbelievable tale of suffering and privation due to injustices. He pleaded for succor.

The monarch's eyes filled with tears. Turning to the court chamberlain, he sobbed: "Take this man outside and hang him—he's breaking my heart."

WIN JANUARY PLAQUES

HARRY W. CRULL

J. LLOYD DEARTH

As announced in last week's issue, the January Quigley Silver Plaque was awarded to Manager Harry W. Crull, of the Valencia Theatre, Jamaica, Long Island, and the January Quigley Bronze Plaque to Manager J. Lloyd Dearth, of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, British Columbia. Crull's entry was on Warner Brothers' "Flirtation Walk",, and Dearth's on United Artists' "Kid Millions". Both winners graciously acknowledge the aid given by their associates, Crull bowing to his publicity chief, Freddy Jablons, and Dearth to his assistant, Larry New.

Cadets Parade to Roxy On "Jack Ahoy" Tieup

Among the highlights of the "Jack Ahoy" campaign for the N. Y. Roxy date worked out by A. P. Waxman's exploitation crew in conjunction with Morris Kinzler, was a parade (see photo) of naval cadets preceded by fife and drum corps which marched from Penn Station to the theatre with placards reading, "We're on our way to see, etc., etc." Accompanying photo showing crowds of onlookers, who took in the doings from the sidewalks along the line of march.

Chain hat store planted blowups of cablegram from Hulbert in all their windows, streamers reading, "My latest starring comedy, 'Jack Ahoy,' opens at the Roxy stop hit song 'My Hat's on the Side of My Head' inspired by your hats."

Stages Spook Night For "Howling Dog"

Lewis Hartman, Feeley Theatre, Hazleton, Pa., says you don't have to wait until Hallowe'en to put on a "spook" night. On "The Case of the Howling Dog" Hartman and Assistant Manager Rokosz dressed two boys as ghosts with sandwich boards plugging special night and had them parade.

Lobby was decorated with eerie caricatures, corn stalks, autumn leaves, etc., and as an added "attraction" local boy gave one-act ghost play. Organist entertained with weird music.

Barron Hosts Stenogs At Breakfast Matinee

Capital stenographers and other feminine office help accepted the invitation of Carter Barron, Loew eastern division manager, to have breakfast on the house at an early morning matinee of "After Office Hours," at Loew's Washington, the screening held at seven a. m.

Coffee and doughnuts were promoted, with the Loew crew on the job most of the night to have everything in shape. Breakfast was served before and after the screening and Lou Brown, Barron's p. a., states that there were plenty of takers.

Stunt was unusual for the Capital, and the papers went for it, story also being carried by the wire services. Gals were asked to write their opinions of the picture and reactions to the early morning gag, and most voted for both.

Many Highlights In Crull's "Walk" Drive

Although Jamaica, Long Island, is considered within the metropolitan New York district, Manager Harry Crull of the Valencia, in that spot, managed to put on a smart campaign on "Flirtation Walk" that overcame many of the usual obstacles in similar situations, and covered a lot of the surrounding territory. Freddie Jablons, publicity chief, assisted nobly.

In one of his leading local papers, Crull planted an "I Love You" contest, in which scenes from the picture were run, and girls asked to supply love dialogue they would use if in the arms of Dick Powell, etc. The paper plugged the stunt with page one breaks.

Fifty thousand pamphlets containing favorite Powell recipe were distrubuted by baking company drivers, copy including cut of star and theatre credits. Laundry tieup stuffers carried names of winners in number contest, with group of customers given guest tickets, laundry trucks carrying posters on the hookin.

High School Paper Co-operates

Weekly paper of largest high school put on contest, tickets given for those sending in best list of adjectives, each starting with one letter of "Flirtation" to describe Keeler, and each letter of "Walk" to describe Powell. Winning names were posted in lobby and over 2,000 entries were received.

Huge motor parade headed by four decorated floats was another feature, with all cars bannered, and a squadron of horses with riders in cavalry uniforms. Uniformed stilt walker covered downtown section, outlying railroad stations carried theatre posters, free listing was planted in Postal Telegraph guides, and in addition to the flash theatre front, Crull had his entire house staff in dress uniform (see photo).

Excellent promotion was secured from leading department store on a series of women's blouse styles, each of the models having a military name such as "salute," "parade," etc. These were advertised heavily and further plugged in smart tieup window displays.

Anniversary celebration held during week included cake-cutting and special nights, with various mayors of nearby towns as guests, this feature also securing lots of newspaper breaks in addition to special feature stories and art layouts. Co-op ads, effective windows, cards in all busses and taxis, also helped to make the compaign outstanding for this situation and earn the Quigley Silver for this member.

VICE PRESIDENT GARNER PRESENTS 1934 GRAND AWARDS TO WINNERS

Highest Honors Are Tendered Managers Bill Hendricks and Morris Rosenthal in Unusual Ceremonies Held at Capitol

by A-MIKE VOGEL

The climax of the 1934 Quigley Awards competitions was reached on February 15 in Washington when Vice President of the United States John Nance Garner presented at the Capitol, the Grand Awards to Bill Hendricks, Warner, Memphis, Tenn, and Morris Rosenthal, Loew-Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn. Briefly shunting major legislative problems off the administration right-of-way, Mr. Garner took time out to tender their honors to the winning theatremen.

Nationally known legislators were present from the states from whence came the Award recipients. Among those offering congratulations were Senators Kenneth McKellar and Nathan Lynn Bachman of Tennessee, August Lonergan and Francis Maloney of Connecticut, Speaker Joseph W. Byrns, of the House of Representatives, and Representative William Citron of Connecticut. Bishop Thomas F. Gailor, of Memphis also took part. (See photos of presentation above and in news section.)

The motion picture industry was represented by a delegation headed by your Chairman and included John J. Payette, Washington Warner Theatres' zone director, Carter T. Barron, Loew Theatres' eastern division chief, A. Julian Brylawski, president, Washington MPTOA, Frank La Falce, Warner Washington zone ad head, his assistant, William Ewing, and Lew Brown, Loew Washington zone publicity director.

In making the presentation of the Grand Award to Hendricks, the Vice President said: "I am pleased to present to you the Martin Quigley Grand Award, which distinction is accorded you for the excellence of your advertising campaign on 'Six Day Bike Rider,' adjudged the best submitted during 1934 to Managers' Round Table Club of Motion Picture Herald. My congratulations."

To Rosenthal, Mr. Garner spoke as follows: "And to you, I am pleased to present the Martin Quigley Second Grand Award in recognition of your advertising campaign on 'The Mighty Barnum.' I congratulate you." Both winners expressed their appreciation of the honors accorded them.

Senators Lonergan and McKellar spoke in endorsement of the purposes of the Quigley project and congratulated the winners for effecting such wide cooperation among their local merchants that tended to stimulate business in general. Speaker Byrns greeted Hendricks as a brother Tennessean, stating he took great pride in the Award received by the theatremen from his home state. Similar expressions were voiced by the other celebrities in attendance.

In Attendance Also Are United States Senators and Speaker of House of Representatives; Visiting Theatremen Feted

Local theatremen and exchange executives feted Hendricks and Rosenthal at a special breakfast before the presentation, and at the conclusion of the ceremonies the winners were escorted through the Capitol by Representative Citron.

The afternoon was taken up with a special theatre party and visits to the de luxe houses of the Capitol. The highlight of the evening's entertainment was a reception and dinner arranged by Frank La Falce, after which the winners flew to New York, where other festivities had been scheduled.

The splendid cooperation of Carter Barron, John J. Payette, and their executive staffs on the Awards presentations is hereby acknowledged for which your Chairman expresses his deepest appreciation. Frank La Falce, Lou Brown, Bill Ewing and others did wonders in getting things done. The entire facilities of the Warner and Loew organizations were cheerfully placed at our disposal and contributed much to the smoothness with which the presentations took place.

Cecil Vogel Works Out Smart Want Page Tiein

Getting away from the usual classified hookups, Cecil Vogel, Loew Memphis city manager, works a different slant for attractions at both the State and Palace in that spot. Paper runs cut of line drawing representing whatever occasion is being plugged, such as tree on Christmas, etc. Drawing contains a number of small squares, each about one-half inch and containing a small figure of whatever is being advertised by cooperating merchants, such as a fountain pen, package of cigarettes, cedar chest, etc. Each square also contains small capital letter.

Surrounding the line cut are one and two-inch one-column type ads of stores and in each of these is a letter corresponding to one of those in the drawings. Readers are asked to clip drawings and ads containing same letter, paste them alongside each other on a single sheet of paper and forward answers to contest editor at paper.

The slant is productive of much free space to plug Vogel's attractions, for in addition to full-page streamer mentioning Loew Theatres, the actual contest display runs as much as 10 inches on four columns, containing cuts of stars, titles and theatres. In this space, of course, are included the merchants' paid display ads. In return, Cecil gives two dollars in cash and 15 guest tickets, which is a profitable exchange.

STILL MORE ON PRESS BOOKS

Canadian Publicist Rates Press Sheets High in Comparison With Similar Aids in Other Businesses

by LAURA ELSTON

Publicity Director, Warner Pictures, Canada

It is rather late for me to enter the press sheet controversy, but I must put in a word for a service which I have helped to get out at various times, which I have used to excellent advantage as theatre publicist, and which now, in the exploitation and promotion field I still find helpful, and at which I also sometimes hurl invective and criticism.

However, if you have had any experience in any other line of advertising other than theatre and motion picture work, you will agree with me that the majority of press sheets, gotten out by major motion picture companies, compare favorably with fashion, furniture, drug, building trades, or any similar type of promotional literature. Art work also stands up very well.

Constructive Criticism Needed

On the other hand, there is always room for improvement, and constructive criticism should always be encouraged. There is no use in going into the lack-of-originality argument—it opens up too large a field of discussion as to the similarity of plots, story treatment and the only-too-few possible variations of the eternal themes—love, hate, revenge and humor which comprise la vie humaine.

Ed Finney, director of advertising and publicity for Monogram, touches on the facts, that theatre men can and should be able to adapt art work, space, and copy to his own requirements. And any intelligent theatre man should have plenty of time to write himself or have his assistant write local angles into the many varied types of stories sent out in the press sheets. Some of these stories may appear ludicrous in certain parts of the country, and they may be just the sort of thing tabloids, or sports journals or dailies in other vicinities go for in a big way.

If direct pressure mats are used, and not sent out over and over again, they reproduce sufficiently well in the vast majority of newspapers, to convey the necessary sales talk to the average reader of movie ads who simply wants to know what show is in town and who happens to be in it.

Pressbook Cannot Replace Manager

No press sheet is supposed to take the place of a competent manager who ought to be a showman, first, last and always—capable of selling his attraction even without all sorts of outside aid, but just that much better with the assistance of campaigns which are now so readily available.

One day the publisher of one of the biggest national magazines in Canada was in my office; he saw the newly arrived press sheet of one of our biggest attractions. After glancing at it rapidly from cover to cover he said: "Jove! that's a lovely piece of work—why in the world don't theatre managers use more of that art work, why don't they get out better ads? And all the rest of these ideas and helps? I've been at the head of sales promotion departments and I am somewhat of a judge of this sort of thing—It amazes me—and do you have that sort of folder on every picture?"

So, with all their faults press sheets have their friends outside the business, it would seem. From the number of screen critics and writers who come to previews and then ask me for a press sheet I am convinced they must have some information of value. As a critic and reviewer myself, I have always found one screening of a picture quite enough to furnish me with everything I want—cast, director, story synopsis and plenty of material for the criticism.

This is a suggestion I would like to make to theatre managers: see a new picture, have it screened once, twice, possibly oftener. Then start to work on an absolutely original press sheet—see just how much, even with a competent artist, layout man, exploitation expert, and publicity writer, you can improve on the average press sheet! And can you do it in a reasonably short length of time?

I should like to see the result of this experiment; and here is another one that would prove interesting—let every motion picture producing company decide to eliminate press sheets entirely—I wonder how long it would be before theatre managers would produce an alternative that would give them as much assistance as does the present press sheet?

How Important Are Pressbooks?

Would the result of such an experiment be, bigger and better box office returns, or would it develop a new race of mighty Barnums—showmen who would depend upon themselves and their own brains, initiative and inherent ability; or would there just be a general weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth—a cry to the producers "Give us back our press sheets—with all their faults, all their shortcomings and they will lift us out of this morass into which we are now plunged."

"Personal" Teasers Top Dearth's Stunts

The personal column is a highlight of the British dailies, which fact was kept in mind by Manager J. Lloyd Dearth, Capitol, Vancouver, in which Canadian metropolis reside numerous former Londoners and British from other parts of England. The usual ballyhoo appeals little to this class of patron, so on "Kid Millions" Lloyd pulled a pip of a stunt in the personal column of leading paper, which went as follows:

Starting week ahead, Lloyd ran copy every day from "Green Eyes" to "Gentleman" and vice versa, in which an accidental meeting was built up in the best "agony column" manner. After exchanging a number of messages the "couple" on opening day made an appointment to meet at the theatre corner. Promptly at the time set, there was quite a crowd gathered who had followed the personal column "course of true love" and who were curious to meet up with the aforesaid "Green Eyes" and her anxious "Gentleman." Dearth then sent a sandwich man into the heart of the crowd with copy to the effect that the couple had gone to the Capitol to see "Millions." The gag was the talk of the town and was said to have aroused more curiosity than any previous teaser copy.

Radio Treasure Hunt Clicks

Another sweet stunt was a "radio treasure hunt," a continued adventure tale in which clews were given each night over the air, from which children were asked to draw a map leading to the cave where the treasure was buried, the "cave" being the Capitol, where the children were directed to a special 10-cent show, the treasure being new pennies in imprinted canvas bags, and bigger prizes to those turning in the best maps.

Among other effective ideas were a large set piece with personal endorsement from Cantor (see photo), an ice-melting contest in prominent window with poster of Eddie inside the ice block, and newspaper essay contest with prizes to those turning in the best verses, each line to start with one letter of star's name and title.

To make up for the smallness of the main entrance to the theatre Dearth resorted to animation for extra attention with a large caricature head of Cantor in which the eyes were made to roll.

The above slants were the outstanders of a flock of others that indicated thorough coverage and secured for Dearth the Quigley Bronze. Larry New, Lloyd's assistant, also takes bows for his work.

George Ellis, city manager State Theatre, East Liverpool, Ohio, constructed a judge's bench with all the trimmings and planted it in an empty store. His next step was to have man fire blank gun in congested district and as startled passersby stopped, fellow was seen running down main street with "policeman" giving chase and finally catching him in front of the empty store.

The curious who had joined in the chase followed prisoner inside where "Judge Priest" was presiding. Copper explained the man had heard Will Rogers was in town in his latest picture and had broken jail to view film. Judge sentenced man to spend two hours at the State and, in fact, announced to the crowd that he would adjourn court so that he might witness the picture himself. To the Editor of the Herald:

Congratulations on the article about the Hauptmann newsreels. Personally, I feel that there is no sensible reason why they shouldn't be shown, since the public was allowed at the trial, and we have as much rights as they.

Broadway Theatre,
Schuylerville, N. Y.

A CLOSING CHAPTER OF "CRIME WITHOUT PASSION"

Howard C. Monroe, of the Hollywood theatre at Buchanan, Mich., is down south vacationing. Having read the letter of Roy H. Adams of the Mason theatre in Mason, Mich., anent the Hecht-MacArthur picture, "Crime Without Passion," as it appeared in the February 2d issue of Motion Picture Herald, Mr. Monroe sat himself adjacent to a desk at the DeSoto hotel in New Orleans and delivered himself of a letter to Mr. Adams. Mr. Monroe, in the issue of January 12th not only had not straddled the fence but even had torn it up from both ends. He had called Mr. Adams wrong for showing the picture and Hecht and MacArthur wrong for producing it. Now writes Mr. Monroe:

Dear Roy:

Just read your letter in the February 2nd issue of the Herald wherein you again refer to Hecht and MacArthur, "little" Howard Monroe and "Crime Without Passion."

I am sincerely honored that you mention me along with the illustrious producers, even though somewhat in the inferior category of "little," which I of course am, and never claimed to be anything else.

But frankly, Roy, why all the continued agitation? The film is just about through with its major and minor runs. It has been a colossal small town failure and I think Hecht and MacArthur are, or should be by this time, impressed with that fact. Continued agitation and they might fire a barrage of machine gun ammunition toward us.

Anyway, thanks for the "lilies," Roy, and I assure you that my expressions in the Herald were not directed toward any personal feeling against you, as I do not even know you personally, but were written on the same basis as they would have been had the exhibitor been someone else, somewhere else.

Us little "nit-wit" exhibitors ought to stick together anyway.—H. C. Monroe.

URGES THAT SCREEN TALK FOR ITSELF

To the Editor of the Herald:

Thank you for the mention anent fighting industry misinformation through the newsreels.

You're right, the reels already are overburdened. But it seems that room could be made for something so vitally important to the business—and it could be dished out in a way to make it of general public interest.

As you've probably noticed, magazines and newspapers are continually publishing articles against the movies, but you just try to get them to publish something favorable to the films and you'll find they can't see anything in it. That's why the screen must use its own powerful medium to do a little talking for itself.

Voiced in less than a minute of newsreel time, the mere fact that about 70 million attend the movies weekly in the U. S. not only would interest a lot of folks who don't know that, but wouldn't it also have an important psychological effect?

With good wishes.—Don Carle Gillette, The Film Daily, New York City.

Greenberg Reinstated As Projectionist

Petitions made in behalf of Theodore Greenberg to the New York City Parole Board by 700 members of IATSE motion picture operators union Local 306, coupled with petitions signed by New York independent owners and circuits, together with a plea of the New York World-Telegram, through Fred Waltman, of the editorial department, moved the board to pre-release Mr. Greenberg, who was a Local 306 organizer, from confinement on Welfare Island which was brought about as a result of the internal fight within the local among factions headed by Harry Sherman, since removed by IATSE, and Sam Kaplan.

Last week the supreme court of New York granted Irving Schleifer the right to proceed for an accounting of the books of Local 306 as maintained by the Sherman administration, during which, it has been charged, some $1,000,000 was collected from members in dues, assessments, initiations and the like.

Mr. Waltman, who had been assigned by Scripps-Howard to conduct a campaign in the World-Telegram's news columns against the Kaplan regime, told John C. Maher, chairman of the parole board, that he felt that anything Mr. Greenberg, then organizer, might have done, "was done out of his interest in Local 306, and his loyalty to the union is unquestioned." Mr. Waltman appeared personally, and asked the board for Mr. Greenberg's early release, which was ordered. He pointed out that some of the union members who originally had testified against him "since have felt he was motivated solely by a desire to help the local."

Mr. Greenberg has been reinstated by the IATSE in his former working position as a projectionist.
